The call so cordially given by Mr. Moody was ot simply for American colleges, but included oreign universities, and specially foreign tudents now in this country. The response ade by the attendance of some 500, Princeton lone sending forty-five delegates, indicates the isdom of such a Conference. The presence of eachers and scholars from our universities, oming long distances to instruct the men arrying here for days, is a testimony to the nterest felt by our college professors. Mr. Moody is far-sighted, he plans not for a day or ear, but for eternity.

Sunday, July 7, was anything but a day of est. But the men are here for service, and ith such a host of eminent speakers they ould not willingly forego the pleasure of hearng them. Such a day has rarely been seen ven in Northfield. The eloquence and power f the addresses, the clear presentation of truth, he size of the audiences, have made this an xceptional day. Mr. Moody gave an address t six in the morning to about three hundred, nd in his most inimitable way made points hat will not easily be forgotten. At nine 'clock he preached again. His subject was rayer, and is condensed as follows:—

Christ never taught his disciples how to reach, but He did teach them how to pray. Better be able to pray like Daniel, than to reach like Gabriel.

PRAYER CONSISTS OF SEVERAL PARTS.

There must be (a) adoration. "Take off thy hoes from off thy feet" was the word uttered n the burning bush. The flippant, irreverent ay in which some talk with God is shocking. There must be (b) confession. David and Daniel confessed their sins. Why so many rayers never go out of the room where they re uttered is because there is no contrition, no enitence. Unless there be (c) restitution, here can be no true prayer. How can I ask God to forgive my sins, when I am dishonestly withholding from another man his just dues? (d) Unity is a necessary factor in prayer. Disciples must meet with one accord. This ndenominational Convention shows a marked rogress in our country in that direction. (e) Thanksgiving is an element of prayer. Someone has said that in Phil. iv. 6 you will ind three things: "Careful for nothing, rayerful for everything, thankful for anyhing." The man who lives on "Grumble-treet" had better get out speedily, and try "Thanksgiving-avenue." (f) Forgiveness is a ixth element in prayer. In a certain town here was a dissension between two leading men, one of them chairman of the committee who had Mr. Moody's meetings in charge. The meetings seemed to have but little effect. Finally, while preaching upon "Forgiveness," he was surprised to see the committee-man leave the house. It seemed that his heart was touched, and he and make peace with him; and then, after that, the place was richly blessed. (g) Faith. Ask believing, and you will get an answer; perhaps not always in your way, but an answer will come from the throne. Ask for something. Make no orations in your prayers; persevere in prayer. (h) Submission. God never blesses men under the juniper tree; He must choose and direct. Paul's thorn was not removed, but it was made a blessing.

Mr. Moody related an interesting incident in the course of his address; once, while in St. Louis, the papers published his sermons in full, simply because a New York paper said that he couldn't be reported. As a result, a sermon on the Philippian jailer, published with sensational head-lines, was dropped into a prisoner's cell, was read, and the man converted.

Since last year a new village church has been erected in Northfield, large and commodious, with Rev. P. S. Cook, recently of Chelsea, Mass., as pastor. In it Rev. Moses D. Hoge, D.D., of Richmond, preached to a large audience from Mark x. 42: "God's servants." In the early afternoon the State secretaries of the Y.M.C.A. discussed among themselves practical subjects connected with their work. The number of colleges represented here by delegates is 126. Perhaps there are no more students assembled than a year ago; yet, in point of representation there is a marked advance, as only 93 colleges were then represented. Rev. Charles Spurgeon, on his way to England from Australia, preached in the afternoon, and used an object-lesson, quite novel in this country.

HIS SUBJECT WAS "NAILS," and he had a wooden cross placed on the top of the pulpit, with nails and hammers of different sizes and shapes. The sermon, simple, direct, forcible, made a profound impression.

But the students were not ready to leave after the afternoon service. Mr. Sankey must sing; Dr. Driver must be questioned; as the days of privilege draw to a close, every moment must be utilised; every man who has anything to say to help others must be pressed into service. The evening meeting was in the line of mission work, and pledges were made by some forty to enter the foreign field. Three topics were considered, "Teaching," "Evangelising," and "Medical work." An appeal was made most tenderly by Viscount Mishima for Japan. He was followed by a Yale graduate, Rev. J. T. Swift, who, two years ago, came here and decided upon work in Japan, where he has been ever since. He went into the Y.M.C.A. work, because he could thus reach students and influential men. In Tokio alone were 80,000 students in grades above the lowest, hardly any work having been done there previous to his arrival. Mr. L. D. Wishard is doing a great work, and is now, as stated in our last, holding in Kyoto a Conference like this. At the suggestion of Mr. Moody, a collection was taken for Rev. J. T. Ise, now in this country, and present at the meeting, and a thousand dollars were raised on the spot, the students giving some 400 dollars. A pleasant feature of the meeting was the singing of a verse of the hymn, "The morning light is breaking," in Japanese. The delegates of the Sunrise Kingdom are most heartily welcome, as well they may be, for they are really brilliant young men. The address of Mr. Ise was earnest and profound, and made a strong impression.

Anyone who has carefully watched the course of these meetings in the days past, and looked into the eager faces of the students, must realise that the 500 gathered here from so many colleges, and from such a large extent of territory, are bound to exercise a mighty force not only on the future of this country, but on other nations. It is a weighty fact that this summer school at Northfield is not a mere gathering of students, to study the Bible for a week or so, who then go back to their homes enriched and blessed. It indicates that this gathering will be a national institution, and the beginning of great and far-reaching results.

Mr. Moody's common sense is seen in such a gathering as this, in the variety of subjects treated, in the breaking up of prolonged tension incident to such mighty questions bearing upon eternal destiny by introducing athletic sports outside, and providing ample means for recreation. The element of song enters into the Conference to a large extent, plenty of material being found among the students, led by such men as Mr. Moody calls to his aid on such an occasion. An address in the line of "Muscular Christianity" was given by Mr. W. G. Blaikie, of New York, widely known by his book, "How to Get Strong, and how to Stay So." His remarks were based on Plato's aphorism, "A man who was educated mentally and morally, but not bodily, was a cripple."

(To be concluded.)

THE GOSPEL IN THE NEW HEBRIDES.

Dear Sir,—It may be interesting to your readers to know that Futuna was the first island at which John Williams called when he attempted to introduce the Gospel to the New Hebrides in 1839. No Christian workers were then settled here, but a couple of years later two native teachers from Samoa were left to labour among the Futunese. But about two years after they were put to death, as they were supposed to be the cause of an epidemic of dysentery which then swept over the island.

The island was not re-occupied until 1853, when two teachers from the neighbouring island of Aneityum were sent by the missionaries there to take up the work. Others followed these two pioneers, and in 1866 Rev. Joseph Copeland and his wife came. They laboured amid many difficulties for seven years uninterruptedly among the natives. When the failing health of Mrs. Copeland rendered a change necessary, they retired for a time to the colonies, but again returned to Futuna. After continuing the work for some time, Mrs. Copeland died, in 1876, after which Mr. Copeland left.

During their residence the work progressed; and after Mr. Copeland's departure the work was carried on by a few of the leading Futunese, aided by two Aneityumese teachers. The Futunese have been very slow in accepting the Gospel fully. Many, though attending the services conducted by the missionary, have not given up wholly some of their heathen practices. The work has, however, been more encouraging during the past six months, and we ask the friends of missions to remember this far-off island of the sea in prayer to God, that the natives may abandon heathenism, and believe the Gospel.

On January 28 last a very severe hurricane passed over the island, which, besides destroying a large quantity of food, threw down three of the native-built churches, and reduced to ruins the greater part of the mission premises, including school and dwelling-house. The churches have been rebuilt, but we must wait for suitable material from abroad to rebuild the dwelling-house. We have much cause for thankfulness that we were preserved during the violence of the hurricane; as the house was falling we found shelter in a native hut. Our morning and afternoon school is in the meantime held in the open air; when we can get a suitable building for having school is uncertain.

—Yours very truly, William Gunn,
Free Church of Scotland Missionary.

THE EAST LONDON WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION held a summer fête and garden meeting in the grounds of Harley House, Bow-road, on Thursday afternoon last. The weather was not particularly favourable, but nevertheless the attendance was large. Addresses were delivered in the lecture hall by Lady Sebright, Mrs. Bright Lucas, Mrs. Leavitt, and Mrs. Aukland, the chair being occupied by Viscountess Lymington.

NATIVE RACES & DRINK TRAFFIC.

ON Friday afernoon last, at the Westminster Palace Hotel, a meeting was held under the auspices of the United Committee for the Prevention of the Demoralisation of Native Races by the Liquor Traffic. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., presided, and there was a large and representative gathering.

Mrs. MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT gave a description of the manner in which the drink has been forced upon the people of Madagascar, under the English and French treaties. If England and France had not introduced the liquor, the country would be all but abstaining at this day. At one time the natives knew little about intoxicants, save a preparation made from certain trees; they were Pagans then. When the former queen embraced Christianity, she ordered all the obnoxious trees to be cut down, and then, unfortunately, the foreign liquor was introduced. The tribes all along the coast are already debauched. There is, in two-thirds of the houses, a barrel of rum on draught; men, women, and children make free use of this, as we in England should of a water-tap. The villages which, in the olden time, would at nightfall be the scenes of repose and domestic serenity, are now, during the latter part of the day, and in the night, veritable pandemoniums, through the noise, fighting, and carousing which prevail. As the traveller goes inland he finds the debauchery decreases. Christianity began at the centre and drink at the circumference, and the result is that at the circumference there is little true religion. The former queen declared that she would not derive a personal benefit from the taxation of the liquor, and so had the value of her tax poured upon the sands. The present queen and the prime minister feel discouraged, because the iniquity has crept upon them so stealthily. Through Mrs. Leavitt the Malagasy authorities sent this message to England: "Tell English Christians we deplore the traffic, and we believe it to be a cruel exercise of great power. The English have brought us untold blessings by the Christian religion, but it seems as though they are offsetting this effect by the importation of drink."

Miss SCHREINER, speaking on the traffic in South Africa, said her father was a missionary, and she was born under a native Government. She has seen races virtually annihilated by the drink which has been forced upon them. The native tribes are longing for deliverance. Colonial Governments are petitioned, and yet the liquor is still sent amongst the people. When once the drink secures a hold upon the tribes, the men who deal in it obtain possession of waggons, cattle, and lands. The Zulu War, which caused the English so much trouble and expense, was brought about through the drink. The rising occurred, and Englishmen were murdered because the publicans had ruined the natives. Imagine a nation of drunkards with will-power gone and passions excited, and then it will be understood how the war came about. All the difficulty with the natives in South Africa results through the liquor traffic. The natives are supplied with free drinks till the taste is acquired, and then they will do anything to obtain liquor.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on open-air work in Largs, N.B., during August.—— For blessing on services being held on the sands at Yarmouth, conducted by the Children's Service Band.—— For blessing upon tent meetings being held at Auchterarder, N.B., in connection with the Perthshire Christian Union.——For blessing on two weeks' meetings in Limekilns, Fife, commenced on Monday last, conducted by Mr. M. E. Steedman.——For Dr. Christlieb, of Bönn, who is dangerously ill, that the life of this valuable witness for the truth may be spared, if God will.

Letters to the Editor.

CLERICAL COLLEGES AND THEIR TRAINING.

DEAR SIR,—When, about eighteen months ago, an article appeared in THE CHRISTIAN alleging that Ritualism was taught in our theological colleges, the editor stated that the charge was a grave one, and invited information on the matter. The writer was then just entering one of these institutions, and he has had opportunities for ascertaining, by personal experience, how true this is, not only of one, but generally of all colleges where young men prepare for the Established Protestant Church. For the statements he assumes full responsibility.

People talk of the "unmasked and undisguised Romanism" practised by the ministers of the Church of England, and are amazed at the progress it is making in the land. There is no need for wonder. The young men of our day are thorough High Churchmen in the extremest sense of the word; those who are in course of training are increasingly so. The fault is in our colleges, and from these come a large and increasing percentage of the clergy of the future.

What is the training? It is open, unabashed Ritualism. The young student on entering college is plainly given to understand that the only way for him to promotion and position in the Church of England is closed if he be an Evangelical. Let him, for instance, declare his sympathy with noble-hearted men like Bishop Ryle, of Liverpool, or the large-hearted Bishop of Exeter, and he is told that these have no business in the Church of England, because they stand up for Reformation truth. Still further, let him talk about a Christian fellowship with all men who claim common brotherhood in Jesus Christ; let him assert that with men like C. H. Spurgeon, John McNeill, and others, he would be proud to co-operate, they being visibly called by God; and he is condemned as a rank heretic. This, he is taught, is schism, and "schism is heresy," and this latter is sinful and immoral.

Able and brilliant men have been sent for slum work rather than to "a prized patronage appointment," because they have dared to contend for the evangelical reformation faith. From various colleges the following assertions are drawn, and in a few months those who uttered them will be ordained. One declared, amid loud applause in a debate, "that he and his colleagues were not Protestants, but that they were 'Anglican Catholics.'" Another unhesitatingly stated that, were he in Ireland, he would take orders in the Roman Catholic Church, as the Protestant was "quite alien." And yet in a few months this man will be a Protestant Episcopal clergyman. Another stated that "the saddest misfortune that ever befel the Church of England was when she refused allegiance to the Pope." This came from the son of one of the best-known Church clerics of our day.

All this proceeds from the fact that the candidate is trained to external ceremonial services. It is pitiful to see the importance some men attach to ritual. There is a deplorable want of "heart training." It is all very well for men to be trained in Hebrew, Latin, Greek, and Apologetics, but something more is wanted. A fine literary preparation is very right and proper, but practical education is needed. The young curate who had just been licensed to his first curacy, and who said, when he was told to visit a sick person who was dying—that he "felt as if he had been pitchforked into his position"—told a truth that has been felt by many a man. There is no training for extempore preaching; no matter how eloquent a young man may be, he must write his sermons, the few times he preaches. A student has but little practice in this most important matter, and still less in that of dealing with souls. The young man who has learned from the time he knelt at a Christian mother's knee that the Bible is the standard of authority, is astounded to find that he must regard the Prayer-Book as such. The inspired Word of God is deliberately set on one side in favour of a human production.

Those men who try to act out the spirit of the "Pan-Anglican" resolutions of last year, where a charitable recognition is to be given to all those who are working that the cause of Christ may gain, are met by direct discouragement. The whole tenour of the training is to give practical effect to the tenets advanced in the now famous catechism of Rev. F. A. Gace, of Great Barling, Essex. Men are taught the religion of ceremony, fancy, and fashion, and little more.

One other question, that of missionary wor most important. The work of the C.M.S ignored, but that of the S.P.G. taken up. T who desire unity in this truly catholic work told they are heretics.

Thank God, there are some men who will st firm, but they will have to do it in the spiri self-sacrifice. It cannot be denied that m of the apathy and indifferentism that prevails is to the lack of earnest men. In the blinding g of Ritualism, multitudes will be deceived; there are not wanting signs of a brighter day the Evangelicals. Many are feeling that training is wrong, and that it will have to altered. To be qualified to grapple with ignorance, impurity, and infidelity all around t is their earnest desire. Let us be taught in hu lity and simplicity from the Word of the Go of Christ, that we may "quit us like men, brave soldiers of Him for whom we work, that lives may be eloquent testimonies to the truth is in us. In none of these things are we traine present.—Yours truly, THOS. C. COLLING

A SUGGESTION AS TO LUKE xxii. 35-

The Lord knew that his disciples were distrus the God who had preserved them before, and they were secretly providing swords for their defence. He therefore abruptly says to th "When I sent you without purse, and scrip, shoes"—He does not say without swords, for would have told them at once that their secret known—"lacked ye anything?" They said, "n ing."

"But now," said Christ, in effect, "you are al to be in different and more trying circumstan the things written concerning Me are about t fulfilled; you cannot expect God to take car you now as He did before. You must do the you can for yourselves. He that has a purse him take it, and likewise his scrip; and above be careful to have swords; he that has not g sword, let him sell his garment and buy one."

And they said, "Lord, that is exactly what have been thinking; and see, here are swords."

And Jesus said to them, "It is enough. T is what I wanted to bring out."

He added nothing more. Would not anyth more have spoiled the impressiveness of lesson?

Our Lord's frequent way of reproving, teach &c., if weighed, supports this explanation; s as: "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the c mandments"; "That thou doest do quickl "Sleep on now and take your rest"; "Mak yourselves friends out of the money of which are robbing God, that when He turns you fin out of your stewardship they may receive you everlasting habitations."

These and other instances show how o Christ's words have a meaning deeper than w appears on the surface. J. G. M

VIVISECTION AND CRUELTY.

We have received from Mr. Albert Carles letter on this subject, commenting upon po which have been enlarged upon by several co spondents. The letter adds nothing material the discussion, in closing which we quote the lowing from Mr. Carless's concluding words: " I desire is that the truth of this question, on wh ever side it lies, should be maintained with Ch tian love, and a courteous recognition of conscientiousness of opponents." These words cordially endorse.

A UNIQUE DEMONSTRATION was witnes in Bristol on the afternoon of Sunday week. Se five thousand men, members of fifty Bible cla connected with the various denominations of city, met together, and in six companies marc to the Colston Hall. They filled both the large small halls, and an overflow meeting was held Lodge-street Chapel. Mr. Joseph Storrs Fry sided over the meeting in the large Colston H and Mr. James Inskip over that in the lower h Several stirring addresses were delivered, th who spoke to the men including Revs. Ja Davidson, G. E. Ford, R. Glover, Joseph Rho Mr. F. J. Rayner, and Mr. W. G. Terrell. earnest hope was expressed that great and last results might accrue from the gathering toget of such a large number of men engaged in study of the Scriptures, and that a power impetus might be given to the work of God in city by those meetings.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 4.—Joshua XIII.

OMMENTATORS consider this chapter to be the ommencement of the second part of the book, which records in twelve chapters the division of he conquered territory amongst the tribes."

Ver. 1.—"There remaineth yet very much land o be possessed." It would appear from ver. 6 that, wing to Joshua's age, the expulsion of the inhabitnts not yet expelled could hardly be expected in is lifetime. He was, however, to "divide for an nheritance" the land yet to be possessed, and the ord still offered Himself to do the work in the ords, "Them will I drive out from before the hildren of Israel."

Ver. 13.—The force of this, "Nevertheless the hildren of Israel expelled not," &c., is all the more triking, following as it does ver. 6, where the Lord peaks of doing it for them. They either sought ot his help, or tried to do it in their own trength, and so failed.

Ver. 14.—This remark about Levi having no inheritance assigned to them, because "the sacrifices f the Lord God of Israel" were "their inheritnce," is not introduced to disparage Levi, but ather to enhance the honour done to that tribe in iving them an inheritance which their own failure ould not mar, as was so much the case with the ther tribes. "The Lord God of Israel was their nheritance" (33).

Ver. 22.—The sad end of Balaam here recorded s the melancholy close of a perverted course of one whom God once used as his mouthpiece. In the New Testament he stands as the type of the downward course of the corrupt and apostate portion of the Christian ministry. See 2 Pet. ii. 15 and Jude 11. The special sin of which his evil career stands as a beacon-warning is stated in the expressive words of Jude (thus given in the R.V. margin): "They cast themselves away through the error of Balaam for hire."

MONDAY, AUGUST 5.—Joshua XIV.

Ver. 2.—"By lot was their inheritance." The literal use of the lot in assigning to the tribes their respective portions of the land seems to have been intended to remove all cause of jealousy or feeling of human favouritism. The lot denoted God's appointment. See Prov. xvi. 33, and xviii. 18. But this can only be in cases where He enjoins its use. The absence of any mention of his enjoining it in Acts i. 26 will always make it doubtful whether Matthias being "numbered with the eleven apostles" was really of God. As the portion of each tribe was allotted to it by God Himself, so was the whole land the allotted portion of the nation: "Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance" (Ps. cv. 11). In this sense it is used spiritually of the portion of God's people in the heavenly Canaan (Col. i. 12), "partakers of the inheritance (lit. the allotted portion) of the saints in the light;" the thought being that it is his gift, not their desert.

Ver. 10.—This verse throws important light on the chronology of the period. The promise referred to by Caleb was given (Numb. xiii. 20) in the second year after the exodus, consequently forty-five years brings us to the seventh year after their entering Canaan, which shows that the taking possession of the land—the subject of the Book of Joshua—occupied about seven years.

Ver. 14.—Caleb's faith, in the day of Israel's failure of faith, is now rewarded. Hebron is assigned to him, which afterwards became the capital of David's kingdom for the first seven years of his reign (2 Sam. v. 5). Its former name, Kirjath-arba (i.e., the city of Arba, a famous Anakite, ver. 15) bore witness to God's faithfulness to his promise, in which Caleb trusted, that He would bring them in (Numb. xiv. 8), spite of the sons of Anak, before whom Israel trembled.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 6.—Joshua XV.

Ver. 8.—The border of the tribe of Judah is here traced to "the south side of the Jebusite; the same is Jerusalem." Jerusalem, therefore, belonged strictly not to Judah, but to Benjamin. See Benjamin's portion (xviii. 16—28). God's choice of the city, however, "to put his name there," as well as of the tribe of Judah to be the reigning tribe, and David's conquest of Zion from the Jebusites (2 Sam. v. 7) virtually brought it into the possession of Judah, who held it during David's and Solomon's reign as the capital of the kingdom of Israel.

Ver. 19.—The conduct of Achsah in pleading with her father for a further gift of "springs of water," in addition to his gift of "a south land," is very suggestive of how God's children should plead with Him for the gift of his Holy Spirit, in addition to the gift of the inheritance in Christ. The south land was no blessing without the springs of water. Nor is the inheritance of Christ without the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him." See Eph. i. 17. "He gave her the upper springs and the nether springs" is also suggestive of how "He is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think" (Eph. iii. 20).

Ver. 47.—Ashdod and Gaza were afterwards regarded as cities of the Philistines (Jud. xvi. 21; 1 Sam. v. 1), but it should not have been so; they are here given to Judah. Had they now taken possession of them they would have been spared much suffering at the hands of the Philistines in after years.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 7.—Joshua XVI.

Ver. 1.—The two tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh drew one lot between them, as representing together Joseph's portion, and "no doubt because it was all along intended that their inheritances should be adjacent," but they were not worse off than other tribes in consequence; nay, the Speaker's Commentary says: "The territory allotted to these two powerful tribes comprises the central, and, in every way, the choicest part of Canaan, west of the Jordan. The hills of this district making up what is called 'Mount Ephraim' (xx. 7) are less high and far less barren than those of Judah; the water supply is much larger; and the very rich and fertile plains of Sharon and Esdraelon are left between the rocky fastnesses of Benjamin on the south, and the highlands of Galilee belonging to Issachar on the north." We may see in this rich earthly portion a fulfilment of the blessings foretold by Jacob (Gen. xlix. 25), and by Moses (Deut. xxiii. 13), "the precious things of the earth, and the fulness thereof."

Ver. 9.—"The separate cities" of Ephraim being given to them in the territory of Manasseh probably arose from their own territory being too small to contain all their people. Manasseh on the other hand seems to have been recompensed at the expense of Issachar and Asher (xvii. 11).

Ver. 10.—The mention of Gezer in x. 33 and xii. 12 as a city whose king Joshua "smote and his people, until he left him none remaining," makes it all the more indicative of failure—the failure of unbelief—on the part of Ephraim that they should not complete the conquest. Repeated as this record of failure is in Jud. i. 29, it would seem to be what is referred to in Ps. lxxviii. 9: "The children of Ephraim being armed and carrying bows, turned back in the day of battle."

THURSDAY, AUGUST 8.—Joshua XVII.

Ver. 1.—The lot of the half tribe of Manasseh, who settled to the east of Jordan, is next noticed. In ver. 2 the reference seems to be to the other half, which settled on the west of Jordan. Thus, by the division of the tribe, they had, as it were, a double portion, Manasseh being, as ver. 1 says, "the firstborn of Joseph," and, as such, entitled to a double portion.

Ver. 12.—This melancholy record of the inability of the children of Manasseh to drive out the inhabitants of their allotted portion is, in other words, a record of their unbelief. The "could" and "would" are both emphatic in the Hebrew. The "could not" of unbelief gives a triumph to the "would" of the enemy.

Ver. 14.—The complaint of the children of Joseph that they had been given but one lot (xvi. 1), whereas as a "great people" they deserved more, seems to refer, not to their numbers (for according to the census in Num. xxvi. the two tribes united were not very much more than Judah, and one-half of Manasseh had a separate portion granted them), but to their own estimate of their position in Israel in virtue of the special promises to Joseph. Joshua, who himself was one of them, being an Ephraimite, exhorted them to show their greatness in deeds as well as in words, and, in spite of their excuses as to the difficulty of the task (16), urges them to prove themselves "a great people" possessed of "great power," and closes with a prophetic announcement that "thou shalt drive out the Canaanites, though they have iron chariots, and though they be strong."

FRIDAY, AUGUST 9.—Joshua XVIII.

Ver. 1.—In the short compass of one verse, an event of great importance is recorded which now occupied the attention of "the whole congregation of the children of Israel," viz., the setting up the Tabernacle at Shiloh, which hitherto had been at Gilgal. The place was probably chosen by the Lord Himself, as we may gather from Deut. xii. 11, and Psalm lxxviii. 60. It is supposed by some that its name "Shiloh," which means "rest," was given to it at this juncture, when "the land was subdued before them." The honour fell to Ephraim of having God's dwelling-place within their border, perhaps owing to its being the tribe of Joshua.

Ver. 4.—To stir up their zeal as to their taking possession of their inheritance, Joshua sends out a company of twenty-one (three of each tribe of the seven tribes not yet in possession) to survey the land and bring him an accurate report on which he would "cast lots for them before the Lord."

Ver. 16.—The words, "To the side of Jebusi on the south," gave Benjamin possession of what was afterwards known as Jerusalem, but to them it was "Jebusi," for they had not driven out the Jebusite even till David's time (2 Sam. v. 6), and, as he took Zion and made it the city of David, he so far won that part of Jerusalem for Judah.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 10.—Joshua XIX.

Ver. 1.—Simeon's lot was taken (6) out of that of Judah, which proved to be "too much for them." They are honoured by the possession of a town consecrated by its association with Abraham's history, "Beersheba." This was the extreme southern point of the land, so that from "Dan to Beersheba" became an expression for the whole length of the land.

Ver. 47.—Instead of "the coast of the children of Dan went out too little for them," R.V. reads, "The border of the children of Dan went out beyond them," regarding the words as a sort of introduction to what follows, viz., the account of the expedition of the Danites against Leshem or Laish, which is more fully recorded in Jud. xviii. The city was afterwards called Dan, and was at the extreme north, as Beersheba was at the extreme south, of the Holy Land. We read in Jud. i. 34 of what led the Danites thus to make this northern conquest. Instead of expelling the Amorites from the portion assigned to them, they were "forced" by them into the mountain, for the Amorites "would not suffer them to come down to the valley." Hence their expedition against the Sidonian inhabitants of Leshem or Laish, "an unwarlike and peaceable race whom they exterminated, and annexed their city and territory to the portion of Dan." No blessing seems to have rested upon their unfaithful cowardice in the lot assigned to them, and this seizure of a territory not given to them. They seem to have been the first tribe who formally set up idolatry (Jud. xviii. 30), and the name of Dan disappears altogether from the list of the tribes of Israel in Rev. vii.

SOW THE SEED.—Those of our readers who mean to travel on the Continent this summer may do great good at small cost of time, money, and effort, by the judicious distribution of cards, tracts, and Testaments in different languages. The proffered book would often be received with unexpected pleasure, sometimes to become a centre of widespread blessing. The field is wide, and many might be sowers.

THE BLIND AND THEIR FRIENDS.—A good work is being carried on among the blind people of Warrington, and the district, by Mr. W. White, who is employed by the Society for the Home Teaching of the Blind. Mr. White has been labouring in the town and district a little over two months, and has in that time found more than fifty blind persons. He teaches them, in their homes, to read the Bible in raised type, taking advantage of his visits to give them spiritual instruction, by means of conversation and prayer. The clergy of Warrington take an active interest in the work, and afford Mr. White very material and welcome assistance. It is suggested to open a workshop in the town, with a view to the remunerative employment of the blind. At a tea provided for them last week, Rev. F. W. Willis, rector of Warrington, stated that the Royal Commission, which had been making an investigation into the condition of the blind, reported that there were about 30,000 blind in the United Kingdom. Sixty per cent. of them had lost their sight by chipping stones, and the bulk of the remainder by inflammation arising from illness in childhood.

Samuel's Farewell Address.—1 Sam. xii. 1—15.

Golden Text: Ver. 24.

The previous chapter narrates the victory which God gave to Saul over the Ammonites. This seems to have decided in his favour those who had been opposed to him at the first (see xi. 12, 13, and x. 27). Samuel chose that as a suitable time for renewing the kingdom, and declaring to the people the conditions of future success. For this purpose they were assembled at Gilgal, situated between Jericho and the Jordan—memorable as the place where the first Passover was kept in the land of Canaan (Josh. v. 1—10). The address of Samuel to the leaders of the people is a further evidence of his unselfish and noble character. His devotion to the interests of the people is not diminished in spite of their ungrateful treatment of him. To retire from his position without resentment, and to resign the kingdom into the hands of Saul, revealed the beauty of his character.

Ver. 1—5.—"I have hearkened unto you (1).—It had been against the interests of his own position, and certainly against his judgment, yet because God directed him to grant the request of the people, he had done so. He was content to decrease that another might increase. "The king walketh before you" (2).—Samuel uses the same term in reference to himself. It means not simply that the king appeared amongst them; but that, as for many years Samuel had "walked before" them (2), their guide and example, so their new king was now to take his place. They were to expect in Saul what they had found in him. "Witness against me" (3).—Before retiring from his position, he obtains their witness in the presence of God and of Saul as to his character. He asks this, not for his own sake only, but for their sakes, that they might better understand their sin in demanding a king; and for Saul's sake, that he might be moved to act in a similar manner. "Whose ox or ass have I taken?" (3).—These questions were significant in the light of what he had declared would be the manner of the kingdom (viii. 10—18). Even his own sons had yielded to the temptation their position offered (viii. 3). "Thou hast not defrauded," &c. (4).—This was their witness publicly borne after Samuel's seventy years' life amongst them. "His anointed" (5), that is, Saul (x. 1), heard this witness as his reign began. The lessons suggested by these verses are many and valuable.

(1) The importance of early piety.—Samuel had lived before them as devoted to God from his "childhood." (2) The strength and beauty of his character and the powerful influence he wielded resulted from that. The life was early put into God's hands, so that He could mould it according to his will. "The child is father to the man." Not only such Scriptural illustrations as Joseph, and Josiah, and Timothy, but many eminent servants of God to-day testify to the importance of early conversion. If our scholars would have their lives used to the very best possible advantage, they must begin to serve God young.

(2) The inseparable connection between true piety and service for men.—Samuel's religion did not consist solely of devout sentiment; but it made him just and true and honourable in dealing with others. No life can be right with men which is not first right with God. Dishonesty, meanness, selfishness are impossible in a true man of God. Scholars may well imitate such godliness as that of Samuel.

(3) The satisfaction resulting from a faithful life.—Not that our faithfulness can make us acceptable to God; but, being accepted through Christ, our fidelity in seeking to serve God does minister to our comfort. Samuel was more comforted by the people's witness to his uprightness of character than he had been grieved by their rejection of him. To remain true in spite of temptation to evil; to have a conscience void of offence—this is the best kind of success. Not the winning of applause, or position, or wealth, but the consciousness that by the grace of God we have done right—this is the most prosperous life.

Ver. 6—11.—Samuel reviews the history of God's dealings with the nation, beginning with the advancement of Moses and Aaron (6, 8); and ending with Samuel's own day (11). The points to be noticed are: (a) The distresses into which the sins of the people had led them (9). Sisera (Jud. iv. 1—3); Philistines (x. 7, xiii. 1); and Moab (iii. 12—30). But in each case it was not the strength of their foes that explained their captivity, but their own sin. "They forgat the Lord" (9). See Jud. iii. 7, 8, &c. (b) The deliverers sent to them.—These were Jerubbaal, or Gideon (Jud. vi.—viii.); Bedan, either some deliverer whose name is not recorded in the history, or, as some believe (following ancient versions), it is the name Barak, altered by a copyist's error. The deliverance under Barak is in Jud. iv.; that under Jephthah in Jud. xi.; and Samuel includes himself, because the deliverance at Ebenezer must still be remembered by many (chap. vii.). But as the distress came through the people's sin, so their deliverance came through their repentance. "They cried unto the Lord" (10).—God wrought no deliverance for a rebellious and unrepentant people. (c) Emphasis is laid upon The Lord's dealings with his people. See it in ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 11. "The righteous acts of the Lord," &c.—This was the one lesson that the people needed to learn. They were transferring their confidence from God to the king whom they have chosen. Samuel recalls to them the fact that God had been everything to them in their previous history; and to put the king in his place would not only be ingratitude, but must end in failure.

Ver. 12—15.—Their king was demanded and appointed before the battle with Nahash in chap. xi.; but this verse (12) suggests that previous to that time the people had been terrified by the attitude of the Ammonites against them. Their king is now chosen, and Samuel gives them the choice of two courses: one of obedience, and consequent victory; the other of disobedience, with certain disaster (14—15). The review he had just given enforced the lesson, and made it appear which was the wiser choice. In a very important sense their future was in their own hands. Is not a similar choice given to all? In deciding for or against Christ we are deciding whether our future is to be right or wrong. Press for a wise decision.

OBITUARY.

MR. ENEAS DAWSON.

We greatly regret to announce the death of this our beloved friend, and faithful servant of God. In a quiet, unostentatious way, he was a generous supporter of many Christian and benevolent institutions, and entered with warm sympathy into the joys and sorrows of their work. He passed away on Wednesday of last week, a few days after an operation which had become necessary to relieve him from excruciating pain. The funeral took place at Highgate Cemetery on Monday afternoon.

M. GEORGE BRIDEL, LAUSANNE.

For some time to come this well-known Christian will be sadly missed in Switzerland. He has gone to his rest after a life of singular usefulness, over seventy years of age. Brought up under Christian influences, he early loved and knew the Saviour. His name is most widely known in connection with a printing and publishing business which he conducted with honour to himself and to the glory of God. He did much to popularise missionary literature, and among the most interesting of his publications may be mentioned what had come to be known as the Lausanne Version of the Bible. The cause of Sunday-schools and the work of the Evangelical Alliance had in him a firm supporter. A son, brother, and father of Protestant pastors, he was a very valuable church member. His last days showed how a Christian can die, for, having his confidence in Jehovah, he was joyous and serene to the last.

A NOTEWORTY INCIDENT recently occurred in connection with the western branch of the New Guinea Mission. The natives of Murray Island (the headquarters of the Mission), hearing of the financial difficulty of the London Missionary Society, held a meeting among themselves to consider the matter, and, at its close, a deputation waited upon their missionary, Rev. Archibald E. Hunt, and expressed their earnest wish to have a share in removing the debt. Three days afterwards the natives assembled, bringing their contributions with them. Although the population of Murray Island is under 450, the sum of £30 was collected, and sent to the mission house in London as a contribution towards the debt fund. "When we were dark and heathen," said these people, "the Society came to our help, and brought us God's Word; now the Society needs help, and we feel it a pleasure as well as a duty to render them what little aid we can."

Personalia.

Rev. H. Grattan Guinness has had the degree of Doctor of Divinity conferred upon him by Brown University, Providence, Rhode Island, an American Baptist college of high standing.

Miss Florence Nightingale is sixty-nine years of age and an invalid, but she wrote a letter of sympathy for the Johnstown sufferers with her own hand. She seldom leaves her house nowadays, but keeps up a lively interest in all that is going on, and attends to an enormous correspondence from all parts of the world.

Mr. James B. Wookey is on a tour in Scotland, lecturing and preaching on behalf of Dr. Barnardo's Homes. During July he visited over twenty towns, including Dunkeld, Grantown, Forres, Elgin, Inverness, Strathpeffer, Dingwall, Nairn, Peterhead, Braemar, and other places. On Sunday week he preached no less than four times in different buildings in Inverness, and on Sunday last in three churches in Aberdeen.

Canon and Mrs. Butler are about to leave Winchester for a sojourn on the Continent, in hope of relieving the suffering of the Canon. He was much better at Cannes, whence he returned to fulfil his three months' residential duties, which he has got through with some pain and difficulty. He had a fall in the cathedral through weakness, and dislocated his shoulder. We cannot but admire his endurance, and we are sure both he and Mrs. Butler will be remembered with loving sympathy and prayer.

Professor Christlieb. — Dear Sir, — My father, Rev. Professor Christlieb, who has been suffering for four months, and carried on his summer work with much pain and difficulty, is now seriously ill, and desires to be commended to the prayerful sympathy of Christian friends in England. The last work he was able to do, on Sunday week, was to deliver a farewell address to two evangelists in the Johanneum, who are now on the point of leaving the institute for new fields of labour. We shall then have six evangelists working, about ten remaining in the preparatory classes. My father sends you his greetings from his sick bed.—Yours, Marie L. Christlieb.

Bönn, July 24.

[We are sure our readers will unite with us in deepest sympathy and prayer for this valuable and faithful servant of Christ, and for his family, in this trying time.—Ed.]

Mr. Spurgeon.—At the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday evening, Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in referring to the belief of Christians, said that some time ago he became doubtful and sad at heart, and began to wonder if he really possessed what he preached to others. He went down into the country, and found himself in a Methodist chapel, the preacher on the occasion being an engineer. During the delivery of the sermon the tears rolled down his (Mr. Spurgeon's) cheeks, and he was moved with deep emotion. At the conclusion of the service he went and thanked the preacher, who at once asked who the inquirer was, and after being informed, the engineer's face flushed, and he said, "Oh, it was one of your sermons that I preached." Mr. Spurgeon said, "Yes, I know it was." The speaker, continuing, said he felt quite right after hearing the sermon, and was relieved to think that the sermon had had such an effect upon him, and he hoped his words had the same influence on others. He thought it was by the most remarkable providence of God that he should have heard one of his own sermons preached.

OPEN-AIR SERVICES IN THE CITY.—The grounds of St. Botolph's Church, Aldersgate-street, are much frequented during mid-day by workpeople engaged in the neighbourhood, and persons seeking a brief rest from the toil and moil of life. Desiring that, being thus assembled, the people should have a chance of hearing the Gospel, the vicar has set on foot an open-air service movement, and on Monday last the first of a series of weekly meetings, lasting from one to two o'clock, in the care of the curate, Rev. T. Henry, was held. There was a large gathering; and addresses by several friends were listened to with manifest interest. Mr. Henry was heartily supported and helped by a number of Christian workers who had attended the noon prayer-meeting at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street.

Of WEST HADDON, RUGBY, who writes me as follows:—

"I have thought it right that you should know of the case of Mr. E. D., the only son of a poor widowed mother, for whom your advice and medicine effected a complete and marvellous cure.

"I applied to you on his behalf. He had been suffering for several years (the chronic form of consumption). When I wrote he was very weak, pale, and reduced in flesh, and only just able to get about. The first bottle of your medicine gave much relief. By continuing it his flesh and strength returned, so that at last all symptoms of the disease disappeared, and he became quite well and strong—in fact, a robust and healthy man. You may use my name, but, for certain reasons, not the patient's name in full."

In addition to the issue of BOGATZKY in the ordinary form, the Publishers have also produced an Edition, ARRANGED AS A BIRTHDAY BOOK, a form in which it is believed the volume will be welcomed by many. In this "BIRTHDAY" Edition four additional pages are introduced at the close of each month's portions. These extra pages are arranged with thirty or thirty-one blank square spaces—one for every day of the month. Each of these squares is adapted for receiving four entries; consequently, the total number of names which can be inscribed in the special pages of the "Birthday" Edition amounts to OVER FIFTEEN HUNDRED.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Pastor F. Fliedner, of Madrid.

Many will have been surprised and shocked by the terrible picture of degradation and wickedness existing in our West African colonies, which was revealed by Rev. J. Williams at a meeting held at Shales Moor to welcome home some returned missionaries. His details of the iniquities of the liquor traffic were sufficiently distressing, but his account of the system of slavery still to be found there cannot fail to arouse searching inquiry and vigorous protest. He stated that along the Government roads at Sierra Leone slaves are regularly driven, and that the poor creatures are ignorant of their whereabouts and of the fact that they could there claim their freedom.

If it be true that slavery has not yet been stamped out entirely within the limits of our Empire, we shall appear but sorry hypocrites in the eyes of the world when we take up arms and despatch troops and warships to put it down elsewhere. We trust that the matter will not be allowed to drop, and that before this session of Parliament comes to an end, the Government may be pressed to take measures to free the slaves directly they step upon British soil. There is ample work in the House of Commons for a member who would be satisfied to wear the mantle of Wilberforce.

It is not often that our society papers deal in an outspoken manner with topics of religious interest, and it is gratifying to find our contemporary, The Lady's Pictorial, in a reference to Archdeacon Farrar's proposal to establish "mendicant friars," saying "the time has gone by for religious vagabondage, whether attached to the Church of England or not," and expressing surprise that the Canon should have advocated the celibacy of the clergy, implying, as he does in this proposal,

> That a man does better work for God and humanity, when he cuts himself off from the joys and sorrows of home, and wanders about the country without the price of his railway ticket, or of a loaf of bread.

At a recent sitting of Convocation for the Province of York, the encouraging statement was made by the Bishop of Sodor and Man that religious instruction is regularly given in three hundred and forty-eight, out of the three hundred and eighty-five, Board schools of the country; and the Bishop of Liverpool bore testimony to the value of the religious teaching given in the Board schools of that city. The principle that all true education must be based upon religion was practically acknowledged by the Royal Commission on Education, and the bringing up of children without any religious belief or instruction would be fraught with grave consequences, both individually and nationally. The best way to secure a Scriptural education for the children is to promote the election of men of Christian principle to School Boards—men who are not in bondage to any denominational Shibboleths, but who will see that the great facts and foundation doctrines of the Gospel are made familiar to the young scholars.

Though the holiday-season is now in full progress, it may not be too late to sound a note of warning to those who may be contemplating a visit to Paris; indeed, the following extract from the report of the Bible Society for last month may be commended to all thoughtful holiday-seekers :—

> In going about among the people, one sadly feels that it is true of the mass that God is not in all their thoughts. This absolute absorption in earthly matters, which Christ singles out from the other sins of his time, is equally characteristic of Paris at this moment. The sense of it oppresses the Christian. The result of it is seen in the appalling materialism which rules the mind of this brilliant capital. The ignorance of the Bible is almost inconceivable. Working people are frequently to be met with who have never heard of it; many of the elderly ouvriers cannot read it or any other book.

It is too often the case that English people, when abroad, acting upon the mistaken axiom of "doing at Rome as Rome does," allow themselves a freedom and laxity which they would shrink from at home, e.g., in the single matter of Sabbath observance. Christian holiday-makers, whether in France or elsewhere, should beware of all forms of amusement which can only be purchased at the expense of the spiritual welfare of their fellow-creatures.

A recent report by the British Consul at New York contains some words of warning, which intending emigrants may do well to note :—

> "The story," he says, "is repeated again and again. Allured by the vision of sudden wealth, with their families, they left comfortable homes in England, Scotland, and Ireland, and hurried to this country. Men in health, skilled in their trades, have been reduced to poverty, and, when overtaken by illness, the result is worse, and help from home or public charity must be relied on."

We would also take occasion to remind young men that it is a most difficult thing in the West for those who know nothing but book-keeping to obtain work: let them rather learn a good trade. A letter also appeared in a Manchester paper the other day from a resident in Natal, warning young men against certain misleading statements to the effect that there were openings for clerks in that colony. It will thus be seen that emigration, though an excellent outlet for surplus population and energy, should by no means be undertaken without careful forethought.

The first article in the month's Contemporary Review maintains that we are standing at the dawn of a new epoch which will be as momentous as when the Northern tribes broke up the moribund Empire of Rome. To the writer, who withholds his name, there are three present representatives of power: Alexander III. and material force, Prince Bismarck and the might of scientific organisation, and Leo XIII., representing the strength of the Roman Catholic world. The Pope is penetrated with the conviction that the Church has a Divine mission to solve the problems of modern life. His removal from Rome would, the writer holds, give a new lease of action to the Roman Church. Such is the view of one who "has taken a long and careful survey of the situation throughout the world," and his conclusions may at least be noted and pondered.

A Roman Catholic—Father Barry—writes in this month's Nineteenth Century: "I am convinced that society must undergo a transformation or perish." There is in his article much that is exaggerated and doubtful, but, nevertheless, there are some wholesome truths. The Father writes truly of accumulated, heart-breaking misery in the lowest social ranks, and of a Dives spirit in the higher, which lives in waste and luxury, and has for higher matters nothing but Agnosticism, for things around scepticism, and for things below cynicism. The clergy, he holds, should lay aside their musty books and look in God's sight at the problems of to-day. They know how Christ judged the first century of our era, and they ought to open their eyes and judge the nineteenth after his manner.

The decline of Unitarianism, to which we referred in these columns recently as being so very marked in Ireland, is, happily, by no means confined to that country, and it has recently been announced that the congregation of Essex-street Chapel, once the largest congregation of the body in London, "is now so small that the chapel has been reduced in size, and its frontage converted into a shop." As the place was the historic centre of Socinianism in the Metropolis there is more in this downward movement than at first appears, the denomination apparently being unable to bear the expense of keeping up its old landmarks. After all it is not difficult to account for the failure of Unitarianism to fulfil the longings and needs of men. Those who are thirsting for the water of life cannot satisfy their yearnings at the empty cup which is all that Socinianism has to offer. The intensified desire of the present day is for the Divine Redeemer, and those who suggest as a substitute a mere shadow of Jesus must necessarily fail to win souls.

In presenting a petition to the House of Lords the other day, Lord Sandhurst furnished some interesting statistics with respect to the hospitals, medical institutions, and dispensaries of London, from which it appears that there are two hundred and thirty-nine of these institutions, with one hundred and twenty-two thousand in-patients; but although more than a million pounds are yearly subscribed for hospital purposes in the Metropolis, two thousand beds in the various special and general hospitals are unoccupied from want of means to support them.

On the ground that many of the special institutions are unnecessary (the ailments treated therein being capable of equally successful treatment in the general hospitals), and that the expenditure of the former is out of all proportion to the receipts, a

Parliamentary investigation is demanded into the whole question of the finances and management of the medical charities, and it is highly probable that next Session a Commission will be appointed for this purpose. Into the particular points at issue between the general and special hospitals we do not enter: a searching and independent inquiry, however, into the management of both classes should be welcomed alike in the interest of the institutions, the patients, and the charitable public, and it is hoped that the Commission may be the first step towards relieving the present financial distress which is crippling this most beneficent work.

The Cruelty to Children Prevention Bill has undergone an unsatisfactory modification in the House of Lords. The sub section prohibiting the employment of children under ten years of age in theatres and other places of public amusement, has been qualified by a proviso enacting that, where it is shown to the satisfaction of a court of summary jurisdiction that proper provision has been made to secure the health and kind treatment of children exceeding seven years of age, such court may make an order of permission for their employment in such places, which order may at any time be varied, added to, or rescinded, on sufficient cause being shown. In our judgment, the prohibitory proposal, being plain and intelligible, would have worked well; but we fear that besides its unsatisfactory character, the added proviso will not be carried out without difficulty. As it now stands, the section will inevitably give rise to collision, probably also to litigation.

A series of articles now being published in The Japan Weekly Mail gives a very encouraging account of the progress of Christianity in that country. The writer points out that our religion does not find favour merely with the poor and uneducated, but that it is being zealously promulgated by men of the highest social and intellectual position in the country. The rising generation have taken up Christ's cause with especial vigour; they are founding journals, building churches, and holding religious meetings and services throughout Japan for the purpose of propagating the Gospel. A vigorous onslaught is being made upon the old, worn-out philosophy, and Christianity is making its way there by dint of sheer logic and intellectual force, under the influence of the Holy Spirit. Would that the "wise and prudent" of our Western civilisation might learn a lesson, and follow the grand example that is being set them by the sages of Japan.

There are several social questions of supreme importance which have been too long elbowed out of the way by Parliamentary warfare, and swept aside by the muddy current of party strife, and the statesman who will rescue them from neglect will do good service. Speaking at Walsall the other day, Lord R. Churchill aptly pointed out that, in spite of the Act of 1876 and of the Royal Commission on the subject, absolutely nothing has been done to improve the appalling conditions under which so many of the working classes of our large towns live: "rookeries" still exist: merciless exaction of high rents, wretched accommodation, and total neglect by landlords of their duty still prevail: such things the speaker well termed "a scandal and a disgrace to wealthy England."

With regard to the drink traffic, it was urged that popular local control over licensing questions would result in an immense diminution and restriction of the present abuses and facilities. At the same time the speaker laid his finger upon the great obstacle in the way of reform, viz., the wealthy brewers and big distillers, with a powerful political organisation ever ready to defend their vested interests. We would say, let organisation be met by organisation. The friends of temperance must sit loose to mere party ties, and bring their influence so powerfully to bear upon elections to Parliament and to County Councils that the Government of the day will not dare any longer to postpone the settlement of the question.

While so much interest is centred in the condition of the East-end of London, we are apt to overlook other localities in the Metropolis, and in other of our large cities, the condition of which, in regard to the housing of the poor, is quite as bad as, if not worse than, the notorious districts of Whitechapel.

Almost under the shadow of the Abbey of Westminster there are slums which ought not to be allowed to exist for a day, and a few days ago an inquest was held over the body of a working man who had died in one of these dwellings, a place described as "utterly unfit for a human habitation." The medical officer stated that the surroundings were the filthiest he had ever seen, and that "the room, which measured about 10 feet by 12 feet, was so dark that when he entered he almost trod on the corpse." A verdict of "death from natural causes" seems quite out of place in such circumstances, and one which casts the responsibility upon those who derive profit from the existence of such vile places would be more fitting.

In many cases it is the "shame-faced poor" who exist and die in these rack-rented dens, and in the face of such descriptions of the terrible surroundings it is very difficult to comprehend the strange aversion which these people have to "the Union." There must, however, be some grave defects in a system which is so regarded, relief from it being deemed a disgrace by the better-class poor, and the time certainly has come when some plan should be devised and introduced to meet the sad cases of those whose misfortune it is to be proud in their poverty.

We expect so much from the police in the way of civility and watchfulness that it is somewhat startling to find that so far, at least, as the London constables are concerned, there appears to be only too good ground for frequent failures in both directions. It has been stated that—

> A policeman nominally has two days off duty every month, including one Sunday, but the pressure is now so heavy that it has latterly been the practice to work him at least fourteen or fifteen hours a day, seven days a week, without allowing him a penny extra pay.

The sooner this state of things in a Christian country is put an end to the better.

The amount of intemperance in Great Britain is a subject upon which very much surprise is expressed, but when it is the case, as has been shown by a recent official return, that there is a public-house for every 100 persons, excluding children, in England and Wales, there is perhaps little room for wonder that the effect should follow the cause. In London and other large cities the proportion is even more startling, the figures being one public-house for each eighty of the residents, a condition of things almost equivalent to free trade in drink. As a nation we have to pay heavily for the revenue from intoxicants, and it is time that the nation should demand legislative repression of an evil which grows by what it feeds upon.

LETTERS FROM MOROCCO.—2.

By E. F. BALDWIN.

My Dear Brother,—Mr. Sheehan and I are just back from another Matt. x. trip to Morocco city. The needs of the work called us, and we felt it right to go, notwithstanding we knew of the intense heat of the interior. We felt, acting on Matt. x. principles, one could not summer here. The heat in Morocco city was greater than I ever felt it anywhere. It was often much over 100 degrees Fahr. in the shade outside the houses, and there was but little difference between the day and night temperature. In travelling, we found it quite endurable and even pleasant, except in the great plain on which Morocco stands, which everywhere was like an oven. We were preserved from harm of every kind, and were in perfect health, though generally eating only the roughest food, viz., bread and a sort of porridge, both made of maize, and eating only a little early in the morning, and not again until late at night.

In an unfrequented part a band of rough men attacked us, threatening us with clubs, and arresting us, and taking us on with them we knew not where. The Lord delivered us from all fear or even perturbation of spirit. We prayed that He would put his fear upon them. This He did, for suddenly the ringleader fled as if pursued, then another, and then the rest; and we went off on another road, rejoicing that this fiery trial had only "burned off our bands," for it resulted in our discovering we had lost our road, and in finding the right one. Others, taking us for Jews, treated us rudely, and demanded money, of which we had none. But not a hair of our heads perished.

Our beloved Abraham is here with us now, to our joy. He is translating the Gospel of John into Shillah, which is to be printed in England by one of the fac-simile reproducing methods.

In about two weeks Mr. Nairn and I, notwithstanding its being midsummer, go with him (Abraham) on foot, without purse or scrip, to Morocco city, to meet there several of the chief men from the groups of Christians in the interior, who are to be there by appointment in the Great Feast. After that we expect to visit all the places where there are native Christians, being away perhaps several months.

I have stirring news continually from the interior. They write me letters. In one large village in the mountains, where a few who had a Gospel portion were feeling their way into the light, they said that, if this Christ were truly alive and with all power, He could cast out the devils from one possessed of them who was with them, and whom all the Moslem arts and incantations had failed to deliver. They prayed over him in the name of Jesus, and at once this one that had been a dread to them, and had been often bound, and who would tear his clothes and seek to kill men, was healed and the devils cast out. They were amazed, and many believed. They sent a messenger at once to Dimnat, a distant place, where they knew there were believers, asking that someone come at once to instruct and baptize them. The messenger himself was baptized at Dimnat with several others by Abraham.

The Good Tidings of the Reign of God.

III.—SOME QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

(1) What is the difference between the Kingdom of God and the Kingdom of Heaven?

The same difference that there is between the Empire of Victoria and the British Empire. The same difference that there is between the two forms used by the Prophet Daniel: "The Most High ruleth," and "The Heavens do rule." But there is also this further difference—the Kingdom is the same, but the term Kingdom of Heaven suggests the truth that it is more than an earthly Kingdom; that its motives and principles, its glories and rewards, are heavenly, and that as the heavens are higher than the earth, so is the Kingdom of the Heavens higher in essence and character than the kingdoms of this world.

(2) Why does Matthew always say, "the Kingdom of the Heavens," and not "the Kingdom of God," while the other New Testament writers use the latter formula?

I suggest one reason, and shall be thankful to be informed of others. Matthew wrote specially for Jews. They were familiar with the idea of the Kingdom of God; they were the Lord's inheritance, and they were now looking for the restoration of the Kingdom to Israel. They thought that the Kingdom of God should immediately appear. But they had no knowledge of its heavenly character. All they thought of was deliverance from the Roman yoke; the re-establishment of David's throne; and the restoration of their position at the head of the nations. Even the disciples had not learned that the Kingdom was heavenly, for on the eve of the Ascension of their crucified and risen Lord they asked: "Wilt Thou at this time restore again the Kingdom to Israel?" Therefore, with weighty reason the Holy Spirit by Matthew invariably insists on the heavenly character of the Kingdom which Jesus came to establish, now in the hearts of his believing people, and, at his return over the whole world. It was anticipating the Apostles' exhortation, "Set your mind on things above, not on things on the earth." This Paul did himself, and, though a Hebrew of the Hebrews, looked like Abraham for the Heavenly kingdom. Compare Acts vii. 5; Heb. xi. 8—10; 2 Tim. iv. 18.

In writing for the Gentiles, who had been outside of the Theocracy, the other Evangelists consistently use the more general term—the Kingdom of God.

(3) Is the Gospel of the Grace of God another gospel than the Gospel of the Kingdom of God?

There is no other Gospel known to Scripture or revealed to us than the Gospel of the Kingdom—the Good Tidings of the Reign of God. The preaching of the Gospel of the Grace of God (Acts xx. 24) is alternatively described in the following verse as the preaching of the Kingdom of God—which comprehends the former term. The very expression "throne of grace" connects the grace of God with the Kingdom of God. In its highest sense only a King can show grace.

(4) But is not the Everlasting Gospel preached by the angel in mid-heaven (Rev. xiv. 6, 7) different from the Gospel preached during the present dispensation?

Let the Apostle of the Gentiles answer: "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." "Another gospel...is not another." The Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Gospel of the Kingdom, the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God—is not this the Everlasting Gospel? The Everlasting Gospel preached by the angel to every nation, and tribe, and tongue, and people, is in these terms:—

> Fear God, and give glory to Him; because the hour of his judgment is come; and worship Him that made the heaven, and the earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.

It was from this relation to God that man fell, and to this believers are restored. Thus Peter says that Jesus died "the Just for the unjust to bring us to God." "Who by Him do believe in God...that your faith and hope might be in God."

With the Everlasting Gospel of the angel (in italics below) let us compare the records of "our Gospel," and see if they are not essentially the same.

"Fear God."—"And fear came upon every soul." "Great fear came upon all." "The churches... walking in the fear of the Lord." "In every nation he that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is accepted of Him" (Acts ii. 43, v. 5—11, ix. 31, x. 35).

"And give glory to Him."—"Praising God." "They heard them magnify God." "When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God" (Acts ii. 47, x. 46, xi. 18).

"For the hour of his judgment is come."—"For judgment am I come into this world." "The Spirit...shall convince the world...of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged" (John ix. 39, xvi. 11).

"And worship Him."—"The true worshippers shall worship the Father." "We...worship God in the Spirit" (John iv. 23; Phil. iii. 3).

"that made heaven and earth and the sea and the fountains of waters."—"Lord, Thou art God, which madest heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is" (Acts iv. 24; see also vii. 50, xvii. 24).

There is not a thought, a consideration, or a fact, in the angel's Everlasting Gospel which is not found in the Gospel records of the Evangelists and the Apostles. The words of Rev. xiv. 7 are rather to be regarded as enforcing the Everlasting Gospel, than as the Gospel itself. M.

YOUNG WOMEN IN PARIS.

Dear Sir,—You kindly inserted a letter last May from Lord Kinnaird, appealing for help in money and personal service for a Home about to be opened in Paris during the Exhibition for the English girls employed there. A conveniently situated flat, at 40, Avenue Suffren, close to one of the principal entrances to the Exhibition was taken, and the Home has been for more than two months in full working order. In consequence of the high prices in Paris, and in order to carry on this good work till the close of the Exhibition, more money is required. Having recently visited the Home, we can testify to its very real need, and its equally real efficiency and comfort. About twenty beds have been almost constantly full since the very beginning, while three ladies are also in residence, who make the temporal and spiritual welfare of the girls, both in and out of the Home, their special care. We can thankfully record cases of distinct blessing among the inmates, and we look for yet more to come. All Christian friends will be welcomed by one of the ladies in charge. Bible readings are held on Sundays at 3, and on Wednesdays at 8, and we should be very grateful if friends would visit the Home.—Yours faithfully,

Emily Kinnaird.

Village Evangelism.

During the last few weeks The Christian World has contained a number of communications on what it terms "Church Aid and Red Tape." The first was written by Rev. Henry Simon, of Hare-court Chapel, Canonbury. We gather that a Church Aid Society meeting in the Congregational Rooms, London, requires from the village churches which receive monetary assistance a carefully filled up schedule of all matters relating to the number of persons who attend the services, the money raised, and communicants gained, &c. At a Conference at the City Temple last May, called by Dr. Parker, strong objections were taken to this mode of estimating the real work for Christ of these aided churches. The objections have now found more explicit utterance.

We have no right to interfere in this matter beyond expressing a painful conviction of the dangers to evangelical religion which now threaten our village populations. The future of England very much depends upon the maintenance of a pure Protestantism in our agricultural parishes. The Committee of the Church Aid Society have probably good grounds for their action, and their defence has not been heard; but a case which has come up in the correspondence is well known to us, and relates to a village in Sussex we have visited. Rev. William Guest writes of an evangelist in this village, where High Churchism is so pronounced that the clergyman made it a condition of receiving a deputation from the British and Foreign Bible Society that no Dissenter should appear on the platform. Testimony is borne that the evangelist is a man who is well aided by his wife and family, whose consistency of life is a witness for religion, who is exceedingly loved by his little flock, whose preaching is full of Gospel fervour, whose services are well attended, who carries the Gospel to sick-beds all round the region, and who is known as a man to whom villagers can turn in all times of heart-awakening or sorrow. These spiritual results cannot be tabulated, nor estimated by an arithmetical process. Yet he is pressed to retire professedly in order to make room for a more aggressive agent.

The point is important; the desire for the kingdom of God to come with observation reaches to foreign mission stations as well as to those at home. But no one can measure the influence of true Christian work in homes and private circles, or how far it may extend in counteracting error in a community. Just now we have not only in England erroneous teaching, but strong prejudices created by false doctrine. And in days of extraordinary peril to Evangelicalism, few duties are more incumbent upon the Lord's servants than that of exhibiting practical sympathy towards those who in our agricultural parishes are holding up the one banner of Gospel truth.

SUNDAY TRAVELLING.—Rev. Dr. Gritton, secretary of the Lord's Day Society, 20, Bedford-street, Strand, in a letter referring to the recent conflict with the London and Brighton Railway Company, on the question of cheap traffic on Sundays, says: "Our position is greatly improved. On the former occasion we obtained 1160 proxies; this time 2070 were placed in our hands. Then we had 28,200 votes, now 39,700. The influence thus exercised should be constantly at work. Each company granting premiums on Sunday travelling ought to be canvassed. We are willing to do the work, if friends of the Lord's Day will support us. Several companies are guilty in differing degrees, and use their lines so as to make them mighty opponents to the rest and holiness of the Lord's Day."

A Cry from a Dark Place.

The little town of Blankenburg, in Thüringia, lying in the valley between wooded slopes, and which to most English visitors possesses a quiet, quaint beauty, does not know that the Lord has just visited his people in it. A Conference was held in the first week of July, called by Fräulein A. von Weling, which has lovingly represented, on a small scale, different denominations and different nations.

If the Lord regards the assemblies of his people, not according to their numbers but their needs, their difficulties and lonely positions, then this Conference in Blankenburg is of more importance than Mildmay or Keswick. Germany, of course, America, England, and Finland, as countries, and English and German Brethren, German and American Baptists, the Church of England, the German Methodists, and the National Lutheran Church, as companies of believers, have all been represented.

The Conference made it evident that a speaker whose only language is English, has a place for addressing those ignorant of it. Indeed, there seemed almost a charm to those knowing only German in the addresses of the English speakers sympathetically and effectively interpreted by Fräulein von Weling, who, on her mother's side, is English.

The Vereinshaus, where the Conference was held, and which is a solitary light in an almost limitless area, utters an intensely pathetic appeal to all English Christians who have competence, or who seek a sphere where to minister the word of the Lord Jesus, so doubly, trebly precious in these days. Fräulein von Weling stands altogether alone in the work of the Lord, a soul-gatherer under sore discouragements. Near to hand she has no one to encourage or to help her, not even should illness overtake her. Her heart yearns over the people, an intelligent and pious people, thirsting for God in the dark, but from whom the key of life has been stolen.

If the Vereinshaus—as a house of rest (one of its objects), with the bed-rooms of the beautiful second house just opened, with its preaching-hall, could only pay its own expenses, the longings of its founder's heart would be realised. An influx of visitors for rest or work would do this by paying for their board. But now Fräulein von Weling's entire private income is absorbed in maintaining the house with the dear little orphan children she has adopted.

Blankenburg cries for an evangelist, not only to relieve the solitary and lonely worker, when autumn brings its constant strain of nightly meetings, but also to carry the tidings of the love of Christ to the many villages around. Difficult as it is to find a suitable person, at this moment the very one needed could be engaged if his stipend were assured. A Bible-carriage, too, is urgently required for the summer, in order that the message of life may be carried to every lonely home.

"Whom God loves," said Luther, "He gives a house in Thüringia." Do you thank God for Luther and the Reformation? Then pity the place where it was cradled and grew. With the obdurate downward tendency of human nature, "the Church" and the sacraments are now in the place of the Lord Jesus, and faith in Him, its "first love," is a mere memory. Thüringia has gone into darkness, its candlestick is removed, insufferably self-satisfied at the same time that its light is the only one! Mansfeld, where Luther was born; Eisenach, where his street-singing attracted the tenderness of Ursula Cotta; Erfurt, where he was a monk; Wittenberg, where hundreds of receptive students flocked to his lectures; and the Wartburg, where his friends shut him up, and whence he gave God's Word to Germany—these all are household names to loving English ears, and all in the Reformer's own land.

Any friends who contemplate visiting this lovely spot for rest or work should communicate with Fräulein von Weling, Das Vereinshaus, in Blankenburg, Schwarzathal, Germany.

On the Wing.

By ANNIE MACPHERSON.

After leaving Stratford and its quiet resting time of six weeks, seeing over seventy of our growing up children of all ages, my whole being was just filled with praise for our having, as a family, been entrusted with such a blessed work for the weal of suffering little ones in our great city. The sunny side far exceeds the shadows, but who can say that a trial when it comes is not just to teach a still sweeter lesson, or bring a soul to the feet of Jesus for life evermore?

Our first visit was to St. Catharine's. Our dear fellow-workers gave us a warm welcome for our work's sake and our own. For three days we talked over our forty young people growing up in and around that centre. We went to call upon some, others came to see us. Some had taken all her loving motherly counsels, and were in the enjoyment of lives of usefulness; others shunned them, and had married all too early in life.

One had just entered upon a three years' training course as a nurse in a New York hospital, several were surrounded by children of their own, whilst two had gone to keep their brother's house in Toronto. The whole visit was one of deep interest, Accompanied by a young lady in whom our heart is deeply interested, we then attended the Niagara Conference, where much soul refreshment was experienced through such faithful servants of God as Dr. Brooks, Dr. Pierson, Rev. G. C. Needham, and others. The subjects were various foundation doctrines, and the coming of our Lord. The various winds of wrong doctrine were also practically dealt with.

The faithful missionary, Rev. Hudson Taylor, was given the first place as to opportunity in exalting his blessed Master, and the work and need of China's millions. The unbinding was very marked after the second day, both in faces and manners, but the flowing out of soul, after we had waited together and in his presence remembered Calvary, was a touch that greatly encouraged many a weary one, making us willing to watch and wait and "occupy till He come." This was the only motto for our mortal eyes over the platform, until it was all but hidden by the great map of China's millions. This spoke louder than words. We resolved that if spared another winter's campaign, we would offer our varied works for young hearts to come and test their gifts for a month, to find out if the Lord was indeed calling or thinking them worthy to be used to hasten his glorious return to reign as King.

To-day we are off 1500 miles for the first time by steamer viâ Lake Superior, to attend to the business among our grown-ups in the North-West, asking the prayers of all the dear saints who seek by prayer and means to aid us on in this blessed work among orphans and fatherless.

My sister, Mrs. Birt, is, with her daughters doing similar work of supervision in the Eastern province, whilst, for the future of both the London and Liverpool work, our path is that of pioneering, for the sake of the eight thousand now in the Dominion of Canada, and those yet to follow.—Yours ever most gratefully,

Annie Macpherson.

THE JAFFA HOSPITAL.

The very interesting character of the work done in Jaffa by the late Miss Mangan is well known to many of our readers. We are glad of an opportunity to refer to what it is as well as what it has been, by calling attention to a pretty little book just issued by Messrs. Wm. Hunt & Co., 12, Paternoster-row, and entitled, Light on an Eastern Shore: The Story of a Mildmay Mission. In a preface full of kindly interest, the Countess of Meath briefly describes the Hospital, from which devoted deaconesses spread blessing upon the whole country-side, and tells how, during the spring of 1888, she was glad to avail herself of its shelter, and the loving attention of its managers while recovering from a fever which she had taken while staying in Jerusalem.

The story, as told by "A. U.," is twofold, "How the light was kindled," and "How the light shines." Close to the very spot where Peter learned, in wondrous vision, that Christ's salvation is free to all the sons of men, the glorious Gospel is now preached to Jew and Moslem, Greek and Latin, Maronite and Druse, and by deeds of love and pity earnestly commended to their attention. The first part is full of pathetic interest, but the second, setting forth the ever-growing work which Miss Mangan so bravely planted, is still more enchanting. Let any who may doubt the blessedness of Christian effort in the East, read these pages, and they will be compelled to allow that it is in every sense, and in a high degree, blessed and beautiful. Last year the attendance of out-patience reached the enormous aggregate of 13,217, the large majority of them Moslems. Thus thousands who would otherwise never hear of Christ, have the Gospel presented to them, and by other agencies good impressions are supported, and the glory of God promoted. The concluding page of the book contains the statement that contributions towards the hospital will be thankfully received by the hon. sec., Miss Cooke, 68, Mildmay-park, London, N.

WESTERN AUSTRALIA.—Rev. D. Shearer, of Perth, Western Australia, again very thankfully acknowledges receipt of tracts and periodicals, as well as copies of The Christian for distribution, from several kind friends. Many of these are posted to people living beyond reach of the means of grace; in some cases, hundreds of miles from any church. Mr. Shearer remarks that there is great need for a visit of an able evangelist to Western Australia. He will be glad to correspond with and to do all in his power to assist such an evangelist. Meanwhile, he asks earnest prayer for the Lord's work in the colony.

THE PERTH CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE is to be held this year on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, Sept. 10 to 12. The subject to be especially considered is: The Holy Spirit in and with our Lord Jesus Christ, in and with the Written Word—in the World, and in the Church on Earth and in Heaven. The work of God on the Continent of Europe and in Africa will be spoken of by brethren specially conversant with those fields. Evangelistic meetings will be held as usual in the evenings. Further information respecting the Conference will be furnished by Mr. James Mudie, Montrose, N.B., to whom also requests for prayer may be sent.

RATCLIFF STRANGER'S REST.—The monthly meeting of workers and friends was held at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliffe Highway, E., on Friday last, Colonel Noble presiding. The secretary, Mr. J. T. Isaac, stated that the open-air work has lately been specially encouraging. Tracts in German and Scandinavian, and also workers who can speak these languages are greatly needed. The meeting was addressed by Rev. James Stephens, of Highgate-road, whose words were very stimulating and helpful, the subject being, "Filled with the knowledge of his will." On Monday last (Bank Holiday) the workers in the Highway had a busy time. A number of meetings for seamen of different nationalities, and several open-air services were held and a free tea given to sailors; by speech and song the good news was proclaimed to a large number of people, and good results were witnessed.

College Boys at Northfield.—4.

[From our Special Correspondent].

As the days pass, and the Conference draws to a close, the interest deepens. Every hour is utilised; Mr. Moody is unwearied and cares for his guests, seeking to make each one at home. All will certainly go away with pleasant memories of his kindness. Now and then the students make addresses pertaining to College work or the Y.M.C.A., in their respective fields. Not the least valuable are the speeches made by

THE DELEGATES FROM GREAT BRITAIN.

Thus one gets an insight into the work of associations in different parts of the world, their methods and plans, and the problems which have to be worked out. Mr. J. Northridge, of Dublin, spoke with enthusiasm of the work in this Conference, and then vividly portrayed missionary work in Ireland in the past. One of her Bishops said: "I would rather my son be a foreign missionary than Prime Minister of England." Mr. J. H. McLean, of Glasgow, described a University settlement, as it is called. A number of students hire a flat in the lower part of the city, live there, and endeavour by their influence to raise those about them, and still continue their studies. Here they study human nature, which is needed as much as theology, and in the slums of a city they see an important section of the world. Home mission work not only deepens one's spiritual nature, but is a vast help in settling men's doubts. Mr. C. E. Wilson, of Cambridge, reported as to work done in his university, especially on Sundays, where they visit men compelled to work on that day. Mr. A. S. Martin, of Edinburgh, emphasised the need of preparation for mission work. In his own university there were three kinds of this preparatory work carried on—first, in the slums of the city; second, among the aborigines of India, as he called them; and the third, in special work among the students themselves. Mr. J. V. Bartlet, of Oxford, spoke tersely and effectively, and Mr. R. A. Lendrum, of Aberdeen, urged a vivid, active, heartfelt, enterprising, confessing religion. Though the men were sincere, the hardest difficulties to overcome were the intellectual difficulties. There are in our colleges true and noble men who do disbelieve or doubt that which to us is plain and simple. We must deal honestly and kindly with such, and

NOT LOOK UPON THEM AS REPROBATES.

We quote the following remarks as bringing out a point never before touched upon in these Conferences. "Let me commend to you, as a student who has lived in that atmosphere, the men in your colleges who are honestly and sincerely trying to grapple with the doubts that gather around the great verities of our faith. I fear somewhat that if these men had been here they would have been repelled, for I think there has been a tendency to run down the doubter. What we want to do is to go to the doubter and open our hearts and lead him, and not fight him. Perhaps some of us here who are undergraduates will ourselves yet have to go through struggles and doubt. Let us not banish doubt, and show it into a dark chamber, for there it will breed all manner of evil; but let us go straight forward, believing in Christ Jesus, knowing that if we are willing to do his will, we shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God."

The informal gatherings in parlours or on hillsides are very helpful. Such a one for the ladies, held in the parlour of the new and elegant hotel, was specially interesting. There were present on this occasion Baron Von Starck, secretary of the Berlin Y.M.C.A., who made a few remarks, and then introduced Miss Nellie Dunn as the first speaker, who spoke of the humble beginnings of great historic movements, and alluded to the first meeting at Mount Hermon, where over a hundred pledged themselves to foreign work, and outlined the movement till the present time.

Mr. Moody, if disposed to be vain, would be flattered by the rousing enthusiasm displayed by the students when he rises to speak. Every word he utters is treasured up, as of especial value, as indeed it is. His intense earnestness is convincing, and he wastes no words, but shoots directly at the mark. He was asked on one occasion by a student present, "Do you believe the whole Bible?" and, with characteristic promptness, replied "Indeed I do. Why, I've been the laughing-stock of the town for ten years, because I've said I believe the Bible from front to back, and I believe it now better than ever before. I understand that some of you say that Dr. Driver and I don't agree on this point, for he doesn't believe the whole of it." Here the Doctor spoke up and said, "I do believe it every word." "Of course you do," responded Mr. Moody, "or you wouldn't be here. No man is invited to this platform who doesn't believe the whole of it, if I know it. I may get caught, but I don't mean to."

The close of the Conference has come, and the men go forth to their fields of service, enthusiastic for Christian work. No man can come under such influences for ten days and not catch the inspiration of these most valuable meetings. Mr. Moody is the world's benefactor, for through such gatherings he is helping on the incoming of the kingdom of Christ.

AMONG "HOWLING DERVISHES."

Mr. George Mitchell (lately of the North Africa Mission), of Tripoli, in a recent letter to Mr. Glenny, describes visits he paid, in company with Mr. Harding, to a meeting of "howling dervishes." The dervishes, though all Turks, carry on their praise-meetings in Arabic, a language which, notwithstanding, very few of them understand. Christians call them "howling," because of the way in which they conduct themselves at religious assemblies. Mr. Mitchell says: "On arriving at the place, a house some distance outside the town, we left our shoes at the door, and were shown into a room, with divans round the walls, opening out of the courtyard where the 'exercises' are carried on. In this room was seated the Sheikh, a small man, of about forty-five, with a long black beard, and a kind, mild look. He was dressed in a long white jebba, with the white burnoose, and a very big white turban of the Egyptian form, having a broad black band part of the way round it. Several dervishes stood about in the room, and as fresh ones came in, they made a low obeisance to the Sheikh, and kissed his hand, also placing it on their foreheads three times. When about twenty-five or thirty dervishes were present, they went out to prayers in the courtyard, led by the Sheikh, like whom all of them were attired. On the opposite roof of the courtyard we could see a party of veiled women watching the proceedings. The regular prayers were gone through first, portions of the Koran being repeated, and various prostrations being made.

"Then they all sat in a circle on the ground, with two of them, little boys of twelve or fourteen, in the middle, and the formula, 'There is no God but God,' in Arabic, was said, at first slowly, and then, each one swaying his body from side to side, more quickly and louder. This proceeded until the words became a roar of inarticulate sounds, the bodies being frantically thrown from side to side, and backwards and forwards, until we could not but fear that some of their backs would be dislocated. Sometimes they sat, at other times they knelt, again they stood, and so kept up movement and utterance for some time. All this while one of the party was chanting a kind of song. Suddenly, however, all was still, and the Sheikh commenced in a low musical voice to sing some long portions of the Koran. Then collective repetition was resumed, and again the simultaneous swaying of the body with hoarse roaring.

"The meeting was over about midnight, after about two hours or more of the most frantic exertions. All then re-entered the room, and the Sheikh took his seat as before. Two gentlemen from the Custom House, friendly to us, came and in turn interpreted for me from Arabic into Turkish to the Sheikh, and we engaged in an exhaustive discussion as to the truth of Islam. I took the opportunity of telling the Sheikh the glad news of salvation in Christ. There was no excitement or heat of argument, but the quietest, most friendly discussion. At one juncture I took occasion to say: 'I have brought a message from God to you. He offers eternal life to whomsoever will accept it in his Son.' Turning to the whole company, I said: 'If any man of you will come to God, as dead in trespasses and sins, and condemned in his sight, and will plead the death of Christ his Son in your stead, He will give you eternal life, the resurrection life of Christ.' Questions were raised, and the conversation went on until nearly three o'clock. I begged their pardon for having kept them so late, but they replied that they were delighted, and hoped we would come again. I intend to learn Turkish on purpose to facilitate intercourse with such persons as the Sheikh, who knows little or no Arabic."

After a second visit to the dervishes, Mr. Mitchell writes: "I came home much distressed. Mohammedanism is, I believe, the only system of religion which deliberately, as a point of faith, denies the Godhead and atoning death of Christ, and also the Holy Spirit of God. I never realised so painfully as now how entirely we are dependent on Him for wisdom, or how necessary is the revelation of God the Holy Ghost to dead souls."

THE BRETON EVANGELICAL MISSION

Friends of this Mission, the nearest of the foreign missions to our coast, will be glad to hear of the great success which has crowned the prayers and labours of its conductors. The debt which it has had to struggle against for several years is now entirely extinguished, and in addition funds are in hand, from generous donors who have visited the Mission, toward the enlargement of the girls' school at Tremel, kindly given by Mrs. Ball, of Bath, and the erection of a Protestant Orphanage.

The new chapel at Brest will, after almost insuperable difficulties and fierce opposition by the Papists, be opened (D.V.) on the 16th inst. On the 17th the prizes to the school children of Tremel and Pont Menon will be distributed, and the foundations of the new orphanage and school extensions will be laid, followed by a general fête. On the Sunday following, services of thanksgiving will be held at the chapel at Tremel in English, French, and Breton. Pasteur Lecoat asks us most heartily to thank the friends in the United Kingdom who opened to him and Madame Lecoat so many sympathetic doors. The central address of the Mission is Tremel, par Plestin, Côtes du Nord, France.

INDUSTRIAL HOME FOR GIRLS, 125, Sloane-street, S.W.—During last year thirteen girls left this Home, nine of them for service. The inmates admitted also numbered thirteen, the Home still keeping up its complement of fifty-two. The school inspector reports that all the classes have done well, while of the young servants who have been trained in the Home satisfactory accounts are continually being received. Mrs. Hopwood, 1, Eaton-terrace, S.W., is hon. sec. of this excellent institution.

IN THE VALLEY OF THE NILE, from Alexandria to the First Cataract, there are seventy-nine mission stations, with seventy Sunday-schools, attended by 4017 children. In week-day mission-schools 5200 pupils receive instruction. During last year 965 Bibles, 8955 religious books, and 19,179 school books were sold in the region.—Le Chrétien Belge.

NOTES FROM GIBRALTAR.

It is often our privilege, when ships of H.M. navy call here, on their way to or from the East, to meet on board some earnest followers of Christ, both among officers and men. Among other vessels which have called during the past few weeks, have been H.M. ships Heroine and Sapphire, each from China, on both of which I found a goodly number of devoted Christian bluejackets, many of whom, it transpired, had been converted through the efforts of workers connected with the China Inland Mission. During the stay of these ships at Shanghai, some of the brethren and sisters of the C.I.M. were granted permission to hold Gospel meetings on deck, the result being a large band of converts in each ship. Several of these men, who are good types of sound, robust Christians, took part in two of our Sunday evening services during their brief stay here, and it was very refreshing to hear one after another testify to the blessing received a couple of years ago at Shanghai.

We have also had a visit from H.M.S. Penguin, from the East Coast of Africa. Captain King-Hall, who is in command of this vessel, and an officer of another ship, both addressed our meeting, officers and men alike testifying to the glorious reality of a full salvation. It was very saddening to hear, from the men of the Penguin, of the cruel sights which they have witnessed while engaged in the suppression of the slave trade on the East African coast. Slave dhows which they have captured have been packed with men, women, and little children, jammed closely together, and in an almost starving condition, the Arabs in charge of the dhows armed to the teeth and ready to strike the head off any who dared to murmur. Perhaps the saddest part of all was that numbers of them were native Christians, stolen from mission stations and plundered villages. We are told in official blue books, issued in England, that this infamous traffic is dying out; but in the opinion of these men, who have been actually engaged in its suppression, it is not so. They say that slave dealers formerly captured are often recaptured after an interval of a few months, showing how lax must be the punishment meted out to these wholesale murderers.

We have had very cheering news from Morocco. A wonderful work has sprung up among the Spanish and Jewish people of Tangier. Meetings, commenced two or three months ago, have been held in Spanish, addressed through an interpreter by some brethren of the North Africa Mission, and there has been an intense eagerness to hear the truth. The Holy Spirit has carried home the Gospel message with conviction to many hearts, and a few days ago the brethren informed me that seventeen Jewish and Spanish converts were baptized, and others were waiting for baptism. The meetings have been crowded night after night, so much so that the friends in Tangier contemplate hiring a music-hall, at present used for midnight revelry and sin. This revival has aroused the enmity of both rabbi and priest, consequently bitter persecution has followed. Several Jewish inquirers have been beaten in the synagogue, converts have been dismissed from their employment, and the priests have offered bribes and made threats to the Spanish converts, to induce them to cease attending the meetings, but so far the converts are holding firm. The hire of the music-hall and the temporary support of some of the converts dismissed from their employment will, I am sure, be a heavy tax upon the slender funds of our Tangier brethren. Since the persecution, open-air meetings have been held in the Sōk (market), and large numbers have listened to the truth; they have been chiefly Moors, as the Jews have been forbidden either to attend the meetings, or speak to the missionaries.

AN APPEAL FOR WORKERS.

There are about 20,000 Spanish-speaking people in Tangier, including Moors, Jews, and Spaniards. Here indeed is an open door for Christian workers. And if this is true of Tangier, it is equally true of Gibraltar, where there is a Spanish-speaking population of over 20,000 (British subjects), with thousands coming in daily to do business from the surrounding towns and villages. Yet absolutely nothing is being done, or has been done, to my knowledge, during the past eight years, to supply the spiritual needs of these people, notwithstanding that here English liberty and protection would be certain. I have myself distributed many Gospels and Testaments, in the town and country adjacent, among Spanish soldiers and civilians, and have always been thanked, and often asked for other copies. The majority of the people here, I believe, have no regard for the Church of Rome or the priesthood, and are fast drifting into practical infidelity. Spiritualism is common, and weekly meetings are regularly held. Sunday is looked upon as a general holiday, dice, card-playing, and music being popular pastimes.

The field is indeed white unto harvest. Numbers of missionaries annually pass here on their way to distant mission fields, yet here are thousands of British subjects being comparatively neglected by the Christian Church. Malaga, Granada, Cadiz, and other large Spanish towns are within easy reach of Gibraltar, and the readiness with which copies of the printed Word of God are accepted is a sign, I think, that Christian workers would be well received, and, indeed, warmly welcomed by the people. An unsectarian evangelistic mission is what is really needed. May the Lord soon raise up some to enter these sunny regions with the Gospel of peace.

AMERICANS IN CONFERENCE.

THE Chelsea All-day Convention of Christian Workers held its sessions on the beautiful summit of Mount Washington, on Tuesday, July 9. The grassy height, upon which the commodious tent was pitched, commands magnificent views north, south, east, and west, of the Atlantic and its curving coast, and the busy city of Boston, with its great number of outlying and rapidly growing towns and villages. The vision is an inspiring one, and marks the spot as wondrously adapted for an assembly of this kind.

The meetings, morning, afternoon, and evening, were well attended by deeply interested audiences, workers arriving from Chicago, New York, Worcester, Providence, and various New England cities.

The morning services were ably led by Evangelist H. W. Brown, of Chicago, a faithful worker of extensive experience, with Bible-readings on 1 John i., opening with the perfect demonstration of the incarnated Word of Life to eye-witnesses, and closing with the declaration of restoration to fellowship.

Some practical thoughts came from Mrs. Pearson, of Gospel waggon work, upon Mark xi., clear points being made upon confession of sins by their true names when forgiveness is sought, completeness of service required by Christ, and the difference between "faith in God" and the "faith of God."

The general arrangements were cared for by Evangelist William F. Davis, whose preaching on Boston Common, and consequent imprisonment for a year in Suffolk County Jail, have attracted wide interest to the subject of free preaching of the Gospel in public grounds, which has been prohibited by public officials. Mr. Davis and Pastor A. H. Plumb, of Boston Highlands, gave stirring addresses on the questions involved. Most excellent singing was rendered by a quartette of young men from D. L. Moody's Mount Hermon School at Northfield, Mass., and a hymn, composed in Suffolk County Jail, was sung, by request, by Brethren Davis and Williams.

The exercises of the afternoon were increasingly interesting. The first address was given by Pastor Bliss, of South Boston, son of the missionary at Constantinople, upon the subject of "Christian Socialism."

Pastor Cyrus Cunningham, of Boston, delivered a sermon of great earnestness and power upon the "Second Coming of Christ." Seldom has it been our privilege to listen to so grand a presentation of Bible truth.

A very expressive and apt address from Brother Schwabb, a young Christian worker amongst the Germans, followed, and he, in turn, was succeeded by Evangelist H. W. Brown, with an inimitable relation of personal work and experiences, interspersed with many beautiful and touching incidents. The afternoon closed with general witnessing for Christ by nearly everyone present.

The evening services were made memorable by a finely illustrated explanation of the prophecies contained in Daniel ii., touching the vision of Nebuchadnezzar, with a chart prepared for the purpose, from Pastor Cyrus Cunningham. Further remarks upon this subject were made by the son of the foregoing brother, and pastor of the first Baptist Church of Somerville, Mass.

Altogether the day abounded in rare feasts to all permitted to be present. It is proposed to make next year's meetings cover one month.

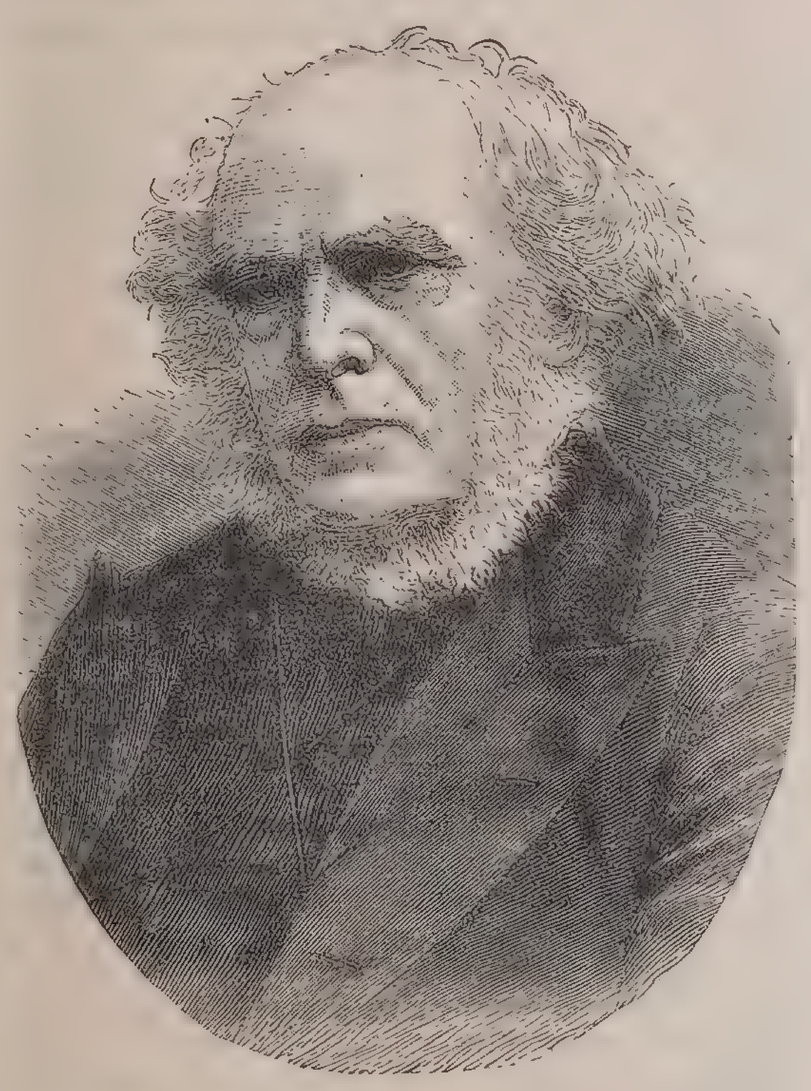
POPULAR EDITIONS OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.—Encouraged by the successful publication of the Scriptures in weekly numbers by a Milanese newspaper proprietor, the editor of an Oporto daily has asked and received the permission of the British and Foreign Bible Society to issue in a similar way their translation of the Bible in Portuguese. A secular journal in Barcelona is also following suit. Thus men who do not profess to have any interest in evangelical religion themselves are sowing the precious seed broadcast.

THE LATE REV.

HORATIUS BONAR, D.D.



ON July 31 this faithful servant of God, and singer of his love, passed through the gates of death into the presence of the King. Fifteen months ago he made his last appearance in public, when, on April 5, 1888, he completed the jubilee of his ministry. On that occasion, in his own church (the Grange Free Church, Edinburgh), before a large representative gathering, the Lord Provost of the city presiding, he received through the hands of Sir William Muir, Principal of the University, a salver and a purse of 1000 sovereigns, "in grateful recognition of the eminent services rendered by him to the Church, by his hymns, his writings, and his faithful ministry." He was barely able to endure the fatigue of the presentation, and the words that came from the once strong man in reply were like the words of a little child. Yet were they very sweet, and ever-loyal to Him with whom he seemed to be alone amid the throng that crowded around. That bony framework, the wreck of the grand physique we all remembered, dominated by the noble head, now skull-like in its outline, with pinched and pallid face, seemed to echo the words of his beautiful hymn:—

> Beyond the parting and the meeting,
> I shall be soon!
> Beyond the farewell and the greeting,
> Beyond the pulse's fever-beating,
> I shall be soon!

He looked like a dying man; and we thought the end would be much sooner than it was. But the brave heart within bore up the flickering life; and it almost seemed as if the blessed hope, that had been the Bethlehem star of his pilgrimage, was holding body and soul together, as by miraculous bond. A few years ago he lost his wife, who was a daughter of Rev. Mr. Lundie, of Kelso. This happened not long after the sadly memorable death of his son-in-law, Rev. G. T. Dodds, of the McAll Mission, Paris. Outwardly, he seemed to accept both blows with patient acquiescence in God's will; but where the inner man triumphed, the outer man succumbed. Not that he recognised the stroke, for his spirit was ever one of singular freshness and buoyancy; but we who loved him saw the beginning of the end. Slowly his strength declined. The broad shoulders and capacious chest still looked as of old, but the healthful glow left his cheek, and his steps grew weary and feeble. An assistant was suggested; but, this he would not have. Was not his brother John, of Greenock—his senior by some years—still carrying on the warfare alone? But soon the health gave way, and he had to rest for several months. He came back a shadow of his former self, and now a colleague and successor was recommended. But no; an assistant would do all that was required. He could preach as well as ever! The only help he wanted was in visitation. At last he came to see the necessity. "Then," said he, "give me a young, strong man who can climb stairs (referring to the Edinburgh flats); that I may go on preaching the everlasting Gospel." And his indomitable spirit, and his intense love of proclaiming the glad tidings to lost sinners, the ruling passion of his life, still carried him on, spite of friendly remonstrance and exhausted nature. It was a sublime spectacle—that noble old man, struggling with Death itself, that he might serve his Lord and Master with his latest breath!

Dr. Horatius Bonar was in his 81st year when he died, and had preached his last sermon about two years previously. Since last September he had been almost confined to his own room, and but few besides his own family had been permitted to see him. But the strong life ebbed away so imperceptibly that his nearest and dearest were unprepared for the end when it came.

Dr. Bonar was born in Edinburgh on December 19, 1808, and was the sixth son of Mr. James Bonar, Second Solicitor of Excise for Scotland, who was the author of several philological treatises. The Doctor loved to tell of his covenanting ancestors, and how James Bonar, the minister of Maybole, stood by the side of Alexander Henderson in his struggle against Episcopacy, and how John Bonar, a minister of Torphichen in the end of the seventeenth century and beginning of the eighteenth, suffered for his devotion to the Presbyterian form of faith. John Bonar, of Perth, and Archibald Bonar, of Cramond, had also adorned Scottish pulpits. Such traditions doubtless helped to influence the three sons of James Bonar in the choice of the Church as a profession; but most was due to godly upbringing and early conversion. Rev. John Bonar, of Greenock, the eldest of the three, and far beyond the four-score limit, has but recently retired from his pastorate, and the beloved Andrew Bonar still officiates in Glasgow to a large City congregation. All three brothers came out of the Established Church at the Disruption in 1843, and added an appreciable strength to the contingent of young men who joined that splendid band of preachers and divines that constituted themselves into the Free Church of Scotland. All three have lived to become Doctors of Divinity, and each has been promoted to the highest Ecclesiastical dignity in the Church, the Moderatorship of the General Assembly. A fourth brother, James Bonar, W.S. (Writer to the Signet), also cast in his lot with the protesting Church, and a nephew, Horatius Bonar, W.S., has been for some years an elder in the Grange Free Church. Add to this, that the only son of the subject of our sketch is a probationer (a minister not yet ordained to a charge) in the Free Church, and it will be seen how much that Church is indebted to the family. Mr. Andrew Redman Bonar, cousin, remained in the Auld Kirk of Scotland at the Disruption, and subsequently became minister of the Canongate Church, Edinburgh. He was a man of culture and fine literary gifts. After attending the High School of Edinburgh, of which his younger brother, Andrew, became the Dux, Horatius entered the University. Here the brothers Bonar met those earnest young men who afterwards became known as the McCheyne Band. Among the other members were William Burns, of Islay; Dr. Robert McDonald, senior minister of North Leith Free Church; the late Professor Smeaton, of the New College, Edinburgh; Dr. Moody Stuart; Dr. Robert Purves, late of Jedburgh; and Rev. Mr. Cochrane, of Cupar, who remained in the Church of Scotland. After passing through the Arts Course, Horatius Bonar, in company with this consecrated brotherhood, entered the Divinity Hall, at the very time when the great Thomas Chalmers was in the zenith of his power. No wonder that such a professor and such fellow-students should have brought to white heat the evangelistic fire that already burned by inheritance, if we may so say it, in his bosom. The meetings of that devoted company of students during those years, as they knelt in prayer together in each other's lodgings, have had an influence which no man can estimate, not only on the Free Church of Scotland, but on Scotland itself, and, through it, on the world.

After being licensed to preach the Gospel, he was appointed an assistant in South Leith. This terminated in his ordination to the pastorate of the North Church, Kelso, on November 30, 1837. This charge owed its existence to the Church Extension scheme of his old professor, Dr. Chalmers. Roxburghshire was highly favoured in obtaining, about the same time, the ministry of Dr. Bonar in this border town, and of Dr. Purves in the neighbouring county town of Jedburgh. In many a soul-saving mission were the two united, and often were other members of the old student band enlisted in the campaign. They, in their turn, would mount the midnight mail coach, or board the coasting steamer or smack, to lend a helping hand to McCheyne or Burns at Dundee, Andrew Bonar at Collace, McDonald at Blairgowrie, or Smeaton at Auchterarder. At the Disruption in 1843, as we have already said, he came out from the National Church, and the Kelso Free Church was founded under his pastorate. In this beautiful spot, under the shadow of its venerable tenth-century Abbey, at the junction of Tweed and Teviot, the first and largest half of his ministry was passed. Here he became known all over the land as the preacher of a salvation full, free, and immediate, and his services were in continual demand. Here, too, he quite unconsciously and unintentionally laid the foundation of his poet fame. He had always loved children, and understood their ways and wants. Sabbath-school hymns were then neither so numerous not so appropriate as they are now, so he wrote some for the use of his own scholars, little thinking what a future there was in store for them; and that through them, down the centuries to the end of time, would be preserved the name and fame of Horatius Bonar, when, it may be, half of the religious denominations that have imported them into their church hymn-books have disappeared from the earth.

As soon as his hymns appeared, the poetic beauty of the thought, the simplicity of the diction, the logical construction of each verse, and the gradual evolution of the theme that ran through all the stanzas, gained immediate popularity. Each hymn was a gem—a perfect whole, with a well-defined subject, which was so treated that not a verse could be omitted, and not a word could be changed. This was always a marked characteristic of Dr. Bonar's style; his poems became as recognisable as a friend's handwriting. Then a certain minor key of sadness, like Scotch music, gave peculiar sweetness to the expression, alike of man's wants and woes, and of God's compassionate love. Their striking catholicity and fulness of Gospel truth commended them to every devout soul, and the result has been that they have obtained a wide representation in the hymnals of Christendom. Perhaps the best known of all his hymns, and, in the estimation of the late Bishop Fraser, of Manchester, the finest in the English language, is "I heard the voice of Jesus say," 1850. We may also mention such well-remembered numbers as "Thy way, not mine, O Lord," 1856, "When the weary, seeking rest," 1866; "A few more years shall roll," 1842; "Calm me, my God, and keep me calm," 1856; "Help me, my God, to speak," "Yet there is room," "I lay my sins on Jesus," 1843; "I was a wandering sheep," 1843; "Here, O my Lord

I see Thee face to face," 1856; "No, not despairingly," 1866; and "The Church has waited long," 1845. Dr. Bonar has published two collections of poetry, entitled, "Hymns of Faith and Hope," which have had a large circulation, and "Hymns of the Nativity and other Pieces."

The degree of D.D. was conferred on Dr. Bonar by the University of Aberdeen in the year 1853, and in 1866 he was called to the Grange Free Church, Edinburgh, or rather the Chalmers Memorial Church, it having been built as a memorial to that great preacher and theologian. Here pastoral and literary labours mainly occupied the last twenty years of his ministry. He had no taste for the discussions of Church Courts; but, when any vital principle or practice was in debate, he was prominent in the fray. He was always a fearless denouncer of false doctrine and doubtful practice, and the present tendency to Broad Churchism was his special aversion. He was deeply pained as he saw the influence exerted over the young by the open infidelity of the newspaper press, and the writings of prominent Agnostics. But what grieved him most of all was that kind of preaching, now, alas! so common, that has no Cross in it. Nor were milder dilutions of these views less repugnant to him. In every instance he traced them to the same origin—human pride seeking to exalt creature-hood at the expense of Deity. Jealousy for God, fearlessness of man, loyalty to the Cross, and sympathy with the Saviour in his treatment by the world and by those who called themselves his friends, were the prominent characteristics of his life and work. He loved preaching the simple Gospel, and the sermon that prefaced each Sacramental season was practically an evangelistic address. His manner was slow, sententious, and very impressive, and we never heard him deliver a sermon that had not Gospel enough in it to save a soul. He preached without notes, and the hearer instinctively felt that he was listening to one who knew intimately Him of whom he spoke, and that he was in communion with Him as he was speaking.

He was specially happy in addressing the young, and would frequently interrupt his discourse by a sudden exclamation of "Young men! this is for you," and then he would, with telling intensity, launch some weighty sentences that they could hardly fail to remember. In the same way he would single out young women and children, suiting his words specially to their cases and requirements. For many years before his illness, he conducted a monthly evening service for children, on which occasions the church was barely large enough to hold the crowds of young and old who attended. Here he was in his element, and the little ones seemed to have no fear of the venerable old minister, whose air of dignity and severity of expression often awed their elders, who were less quick in discovering the warm heart that beat under that cloak of reserve. D. M.

Dr. Bonar's remains were interred in the Canongate Churchyard, Edinburgh, on Monday afternoon. The procession numbered several hundreds of people, including many prominent citizens and ministers of various denominations. The service at the grave was conducted by Rev. R. H. Lundie, of Liverpool, brother-in-law of the deceased.

In Memoriam.

Sweet spiritual singer! Has thy song
At length been hushed for ever upon earth?
No words of mine can fully tell the worth
Of one who did to the whole Church belong;
In praise as loud as he in faith was strong.
And is thy hallowed voice for ever stilled
That led the praises, so thy Father willed,
Of thousands who shall join thee in that throng?
Well hast thou tuned the Church's faltering voice;
Lovely the forms in which thou hast expressed
Thanksgiving, worship—and thy thoughts how choice!
Where all is harmony thou art at rest.

FROM THE CENTRAL SÛDAN.

Mr. Graham Wilmot-Brooke's second letter from the Central Sûdan, relates interesting contact with natives, and progress in preparation for the work of setting the Gospel before them. As elsewhere, so along the African coast, the words of those who preach the Gospel are largely robbed of their power by the fact that numbers of church members show by their lives that they have undergone no real change of heart. Printed copies of the letters may be had by sending a penny stamp to Mr. T. Arthur Garnett, 33, King-street, Manchester. We reproduce a few sentences:—

"May 12.—Attended service in Brass Church. It sounds very funny to hear how heartily the congregation join in singing the English hymns, not more than a dozen of them (at the outside) understanding the meaning of the words. The preaching is done by interpretation. In the afternoon I went off with one Kruman in a small canoe to a neighbouring factory where two traders had very kindly promised to collect their Kru labourers for me to speak to them. They all stared at me when they saw me kneeling in the bottom of the canoe and paddling, as they look on a white man as a helpless kind of doll who is only fit to sit still and be moved about by able-bodied men. There were between thirty and forty of them. They listened with unusually close attention. I now endeavour on all occasions to give the suddenness of Christ's advent the same prominence that it has in Scripture as a motive for immediate repentance.

"May 15.—Continued our journey eastward. Visited the mission station of Abonama, in the New Calabar district. We went ashore in the afternoon, Mr. Shaw and I taking the Häusa lad, Belu (pronounced Báyloo), to teach us by the way. We found the town very clean, with wide, beautifully swept squares, the huts all of a fair size, with strong walls built of straight poles about four inches thick with palmfrond thatches. All the superior ones were roofed, and some of them walled, with corrugated iron, of which there seems a very large quantity in the town. Mr Packer first went to Chief Bob, the more important of the two principal men... From here we went on and made similar calls on three other chiefs. A sad event occurred close to this place about eight days previously, at a place five hours' steaming from here called Impe's Town, where the mangrove swamp ends and the mainland begins. The old chief, Impe, had died two days before, so there was a terrible human sacrifice of several dozen unfortunate slaves to accompany him to the spirit world. Their arms and legs were broken, and they were tossed into the grave, and, when they tried to wriggle out, their heads were cut off by people standing by. Some white traders, arriving unexpectedly, unintentionally witnessed some of these horrors."

From May 21 to 27 was spent in study on board the steamer. Finney's "Lectures on Revivals of Religion" is a volume which afforded matter for much profitable thought. Two days later, while at Breaker Island, some five miles from Bonny Town, down at the mouth of the river, Messrs. Brooke and Shaw received a letter from the finance committee of the Niger Mission, asking them whether they would be willing to occupy the C.M.S. station of Okrika for about a fortnight, the Society having no one to put in the place of the late agent, who has been obliged to give up work. The place is such a stronghold of Satan that our young friend says he felt such an opening to be a great privilege.

THE GOSPEL IN MEXICAN.—A neatly-bound Gospel of Luke in the Nahuatl, or pure Mexican language, has been issued from the Methodist Mission Press in the City of Mexico. The Nahuatl language is variously estimated as spoken by from 1,500,000 to 3,000,000 people.

THE WANDERER'S RETURN.

I've wandered far from home,
I'm weary, sad, and sore;
I weep, but yet I roam,
Wounded—I wander more;
From treacherous friends shall I seek comfort? No!
I will arise, and to my Father go.

I've squandered all my store;
My every hope is quenched;
Repulsed from every door,
From all my moorings wrenched,
In my extremity of sin and woe
I will arise, and to my Father go.

I'll tell Him all my sin,
I'll show Him all my pain;
Perhaps He'll let me in
To the old home again;
But all my guilt and misery I'll show;
I will arise, and to my Father go.

All worthless as I am,
Poor, helpless, guilty, lost;
Through the atoning Lamb,
And by the Holy Ghost,
Because my sins and sorrows overflow,
I will arise, and to my Father go.

My Father's name is Love,
His mercies aye endure;
He calls me from above,
His word of grace is sure;
Leaving my sin and misery below,
I will arise, and to my Father go.

DR. COMANDI'S WORK IN ITALY.

In the opening sentences of the triennial repor of the Boys' Protestant Industrial Home, Dr Comandi glories in the goodness and mercy which God continues to cause to follow those who have in hand the work of the Gospel in Florence. As the operations have extended many difficulties have been encountered, bu all along there have likewise been evidences o the loving-kindness of the Lord. The funds in support of the work have come from many countries, a number of English friends assisting in their turn.

A great help on the spot has been a Dorca Society, composed of ladies of various nationalities, who provide underclothing for the inmates of the Home. The number of the boys has averaged seventy, of whom twenty-one are paying pupils. As for the schools, they are still maintaining their high reputation, while the workshops have so grown in importance that some of them are considered the best in the city. Even zealous Roman Catholics bring orders, confident that the work will be well done. The auxiliaries are numerous and interesting, some designed to help young men on leaving the Home, all of them designed to commend the Gospel to the people of Florence. Some of the lads have testified to change of heart, while of many who have been instructed in the Scriptures, there are good hopes.

By various measures the Papists have harassed the work, one Bishop having by subterfuge caused a lad to be withdrawn from Dr Comandi's care. The Sunday-school is an important evangelistic agency, the pupils ranging in age from twelve to seventy years. The attendance averages three hundred, speaking different languages; this divides them into classes, the teachers being also of various nationalities. Village work is another promising department, carried on in a spirit of love, and commanding the respectful attention of the people. The poor are not forgotten, but, without distinction of denomination, they are aided in a kindly manner, and also told of Him who is the bread of life come down from heaven. We sincerely trust that as this good work continues to develop, it will be increasingly owned and blessed of God for the good of Italy.

For the Young.

HIS OWN EXECUTIONER.

'HAT excitement there was, to be sure, when other read out to us, at breakfast-time, one orning, a letter from Uncle Harry, stating at he and grandmother were coming to spend few days at our house.

Uncle was a great favourite with us all—deed with everyone who knew him. To us ungsters he seemed like a great, jolly, kind ant. The most remarkable thing about him, owever, was what I want to describe; and yet ardly know how to put into words. There as a certain expression on his happy face hat I never remember having seen elsewhere. was always there, even when he was tired, disappointed, or sad; and I used to lie wake in bed sometimes, and wonder whether his was how Stephen looked just before they oned him.

As soon as mother told us Uncle was coming, determined I would speak to him upon this ubject. I felt sure that it had something to o with his religion—for he was a thorough hristian—and I made up my mind to get the ecret out of him before he went away.

The long-looked-for day came at last. The arriage was heard coming up the drive, and ve were soon upon the door-step, hugging and issing grandmother and her son. There was dear old Uncle," as we called him, with that right glow still upon his kind, loving face.

The visitors had been with us three days. Uncle had driven mother and the boys to a eighbouring town, and grandmother and I ere sitting by ourselves in the dining-room.

"Grandmother," I said, after pondering the ubject nearest my heart, as I sat at work by he window, "what a dear, good, happy, always-like sort of fellow uncle is, isn't he?"

"Ah! my dear girl," replied Granny, "I often ay that I don't believe there's another man is equal on this wide earth. I'm sure I ought o be very, very thankful to God for giving me such a son, to bless and comfort me in my de-clining years."

"Was he always like he is now—I mean, always so bright and joyful?" I asked.

"He was always a kind-hearted boy," she nswered, "although his boisterous spirits ometimes gave me a deal of trouble and anxiety. He found the Lord when he was wenty years of age, and since then he has been the same dear fellow that he is to-day. Why don't you speak to him yourself, Alice?"

"I intend to, granny dear; only I wanted to ask you first whether he had that strange look of bright joy upon his face before he was converted to God."

I need not trouble the reader with any further account of our conversation that afternoon; for the very next day I had the pleasure of walking six or seven miles alone with Uncle, and I felt that God had purposely given me this opportunity of learning the secret for which my young heart yearned.

"Uncle," said I, after we had been pleasantly chatting for about half an hour, "I want to ask you a question."

"Right you are, my dear," he replied, taking my hand in his, and leading me to the trunk of an old tree that lay by the roadside. Upon this we both sat down, and then I continued:—

"I want to know what it is that gives your face such a sweet, happy expression."

Uncle was in one of his jocular moods; so he sprang from my side, walked right to the end of the tree, and hid his face in his hands, as if my remark had made him feel very bashful. I could not help laughing out loud at his attitude; and quickly rising from my place, seated myself again by his side.

"Uncle," I said, "do please be serious. I have wanted this little talk with you for a long time, and cannot help feeling that God put it into your heart to bring me for this delightful walk in answer to my prayers. You are really a very happy man, are you not?"

"Yes, Alice," he replied quite earnestly, "I think I am one of the happiest men alive. But what made you ask me such a strange question?"

"Is it because you are a Christian?"

"Certainly. Do you think any man can be truly happy who is not one?"

"Decidedly not; but how is it that all Christians are not as happy as you are? How is it that I am not?"

"Aren't you a happy Christian, then, Alice?" inquired my Uncle, looking steadfastly into my face.

At this question my eyes filled with tears, and a big lump came into my throat and took away the power of speech. The kind man took my hand in his and put my thoughts for me into words.

"You are happy at times, I suppose, and unhappy at others. Like the quicksilver in the thermometer, you are sometimes up and sometimes down. Isn't that it?"

"Yes," I replied, in a voice quivering with emotion; "that's just it. I am very full of joy now and again; but it doesn't last. I do so want to be like you, Uncle; you seem as if you were always in heaven."

A smile played for a second upon the man's face; but he said nothing. Presently he drew a little, well-worn Testament from his pocket, and began to turn over its pages, apparently in search of some text. While he was doing so, he asked, "Did you ever try the execution remedy, Alice?"

"The what, Uncle?" exclaimed I, in a voice of surprise.

"The execution remedy," he repeated. "I have been a happy man ever since I became my own executioner." Handing his Testament to me, he pointed to Luke ix. 23. I read the verse slowly and thoughtfully: "And He said to them all, If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow Me."

My prayers were answered that day, and the secret was mine! I learnt that a disciple of Jesus Christ is one who denies himself for the sake of Him who died upon Calvary. I found out that the "cross" means more than patiently bearing some trouble or affliction; that it means the voluntary, daily acceptance of the will of Christ, as revealed in his Word and by his Holy Spirit; that the "new man" carries the cross to nail the "old man" upon whenever he tries to assert his authority. A new light at once flashed upon such passages of Scripture as "For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if One died for all, then all died: and that He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them, and rose again"; "For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's"; "Our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin"; "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Paul's Epistles have had from that hour a sweetness and a reality that they sadly lacked before; and I discovered, or rather learned, that the way to be happy is to live daily and hourly with one all-absorbing aim in life—viz., pleasing Jesus.

This was Uncle's last visit to our home. A few months after our conversation he was drowned at sea. But, though years have wrought untold changes in my life and experience, I thank God that, in my humble way, I am permitted to excite curiosity in the minds of my fellow Christians; and again and again, in answer to the question, "How can I be as happy as you?" I reply, "Have you tried the execution remedy? I am my own executioner."

Must Jesus bear the cross alone,
And all the world go free?
No, there's a cross for ev'ry one,
And there's a cross for me.

The consecrated cross I'll bear,
Till death shall set me free;
And then go home my crown to wear,
For there's a crown for me.

ON YARMOUTH SANDS.—The secretary of the Evangelistic Mission Children's Service Band (Head Office, Kilburn) has met with a large amount of encouragement as the result of his labours at Yarmouth sands, daily, during the month of July. Not a few of the adults have much cause for praise to God, for the way in which they have been blessed at the services, and the children have been deeply interested at the varied meetings held on the sands. The closing night, Sunday, the 28th ult., was crowned with definite blessing, and at the farewell service the next day several local ministers spoke in the highest terms of all the past meetings, and promised the secretary, on any future occasion, their hearty support.

THE GUARDS' MISSION.—The work done by Sergeant George Pullinger, at 58, Hugh-street, Ebury Bridge, S.W., deserves hearty support. A lady who attended a tea-meeting recently, at which a goodly number of non-commissioned officers and men were present, writes: "There is no distinctive mark on the house, and that is what the soldiers like; for one of them said to me, 'This is my home.' The money for the tea was sent by some villagers, who had heard that Sergeant Pullinger wanted help, and they wished to show their love for a lady who kindly visited them." The Sergeant and his wife are ever ready to show friends over the place, which is a veritable rest and refuge to steady soldiers.

ST. LUKE'S GOSPEL MEDICAL MISSION.—The dispensary of this Mission is now located in the Memorial Buildings, Roscoe-street, Bunhill-row, E.C. Dr. Hingston Fox, the physician, in last year's report, refers to the sad need of many of the residents. "Few, probably," he remarks, "are aware of the large mortality amongst young children in the poorer classes. I often find that mothers have lost one-third, one-half, or even more, of their children, whilst it is the exception to find a family intact. During last year 5763 men, women, and children, were treated for various ailments, "school-headache" being one of the commonest among the ill-nourished juveniles. The trained nurse paid over 1900 visits to 130 cases. The work is conducted with the greatest economy, but, nevertheless, the year closed with a deficit. The hon. sec. is Mr. G. M. By Rev. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

XX.—"COMING, IS HE?"

My old friend, Billy Bray, of Cornwall, was a right down happy soul. He was always singing and rejoicing, not only in voice but in every gesture of his body. He had a theory that if he praised God with his mouth only, at the resurrection he would be like those things on the tombstones, all mouth and wings. If he clapped with his hands, he would rise with a pair of hands. But what a funny thing Billy Bray would be with mouth and hands! But if he danced on his feet, then he would rise complete, and men will see what the dear Lord can make of poor Billy Bray.

There was some inkling of truth in this quaint and facetious saying. The good fellow intended to give himself up entirely to the Lord for ever, and he had done it.

Miss Havergal expressed a like sentiment in more civilised language, in her hymn,

> Take my life and let it be,
> Consecrated, Lord, to Thee;
> Take my moments and my days,
> Let them flow in ceaseless praise.
> Take my hands, and let them move,
> At the impulse of thy love.
> Take my feet, and let them be,
> Swift and beautiful for Thee.
> Take my voice, and let me sing,
> Always, only, for my King;
> Take my lips, and let them be > Filled with messages from Thee.

These two children of God undoubtedly meant the same thing, but Billy's theology was not so scriptural, for it never rose higher than singing about going to heaven, or to Canaan, as he called it, when he died. His continual theme was,

> Canaan is a happy place,
> I'm bound for the land of Canaan.

While singing these words, he used to clap his hands, and dance with joy. I had again and again to show him that Christian hope does not consist in going to heaven merely, any more than resting in the grave. It consists rather in the coming of the Lord to change the body of humiliation, and to make it a glorious body like his own.

"Oh, that will be grand," he exclaimed. "'Our face, like his, shall shine. Oh what a glorious company, when saints and angels join.' Oh, that will be joyful when we arrive at home."

His thoughts more frequently flowed in the words of hymns than in those of Scripture. I seldom tried to teach him anything, but what he immediately went off, expressing himself in the lines of some hymn or traditional chorus. Very often these favourite verses of his were sadly unscriptural; but Billy did not know this.

Upon one occasion I asked him what all the fighting we read about on the other side of Canaan referred to. "What fighting do you mean?" he asked. "There's no fighting in the sweet fields of Eden, on the other side of Jordan. No poverty there, the saints are all wealthy. No sickness there, no fighting, sure enough."

Then the incorrigible man began to sing again,

> I'm bound for the land of Canaan—
> Canaan is a happy place,
> I'm bound for the land of Canaan.

All my efforts to enlighten him upon this subject seemed hopeless. The glorious truth of the coming of the Lord to change us is something which we can only fully apprehend under the quickening touch of the Spirit's teaching. As faith, by which we receive forgiveness of sins, is the gift of God, and divine love is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given, so in like manner we need the operation of the same Spirit to teach us about the glory of the coming Christ, which is the object of our hope.

Billy Bray, however, was so content with salvation and the idea of going to heaven that he did not give his attention to any other teaching. I often endeavoured to show him that it was a very selfish thing to avail ourselves of the sufferings of Christ, and care nothing for his glory. No, he did not see it; he was looking at something else.

One day he listened to what I had to say so quietly, and with so much more patience than usual, that I really thought I was breaking ground with him, and he was taking in the idea of the Lord's coming. I told him that it was by no means the same thing as our going to be with the Lord at death, for when we go to Him at death, it is only in spirit; we leave our bodies behind. But when He comes from the heavens for us, we shall depart with spirit, soul, and body too, and that in a glorified state. He seemed to be enjoying what I was saying, but it turned out that he was not following my words, but his own thoughts. Being pressed into a corner for an answer, he looked at me and said: "What is that you say about the dear Lord? Coming, is He?"

"Yes," I said. "The Lord is coming, and that I believe soon."

"I shall be fine and glad to see Him!" said Billy, looking radiant with happiness; "fine and glad to see Him, for I do love the dear Lord!"

"He is coming," I continued, "to 'change our vile body, and fashion it after his own glorious body.' This change is more certain than death itself."

"How is that?" said Billy.

I replied: "We are told in Scripture that we shall not all die or sleep, but we shall all be changed (see 1 Cor. xv. 51). Multitudes of believers will be alive upon the earth when the Lord comes to call his saints. The Apostle Paul says, that 'we which are alive and remain...shall not prevent (or go before) them which are asleep,' but 'the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord' (see 1 Thes. iv. 16—17). The Lord may come before you die."

"Then," said Billy, as if disappointed, "I shan't go to heaven at all! That won't do for the like of me." And off he went singing about Canaan. Dear Billy kept his thoughts and views about heaven to an advanced old age; and, though he may have assented to some of my teaching now and then, his heart was full of the thought of going to heaven when he died. A little time before his departure, he was ordered to take a short sea voyage. He went out upon the broad Atlantic with some fishermen friends. While they were out a great squall arose, which threatened to be violent. On this account "Uncle Billy," as he was called, was sent below into the cabin. The squall developed into a storm, and raged so furiously that the fishermen came to see how he was. They found him as happy as usual singing to himself.

"Uncle Billy," said one of his friends, "I don't think that we can weather this storm!"

"All right," answered Billy cheerily, "I would as soon go to heaven from here as elsewhere. If Father has any more work for me on the land, this storm can't do nothing."

It was so, the storm did nothing, it did not even frighten this trustful child of God.

Billy was safely landed again, and lived to see the conversion of many more precious souls, and, upon his death-bed, that of his doctor. "You will meet me in heaven, doctor," were among his last words. So he departed to be "with Christ."

THE WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.

An earnest spirit pervaded the meetings of the Pastoral Session of the Wesleyan Conference, at Sheffield, presided over by Rev. C. H. Kelly. The various deputations had cheering words to deliver. Rev. Charles Inwood, from Ireland, speaking of Romanism, said: There have been great spiritual movements inside Romanism—movements alien in spirit and principle to the false assumptions and errors of Romanism—movements which, though not fostered by the Roman Catholic hierarchy, have conferred untold spiritual good upon the people who have come within their reach and power. It is my firm conviction that something like that is now going on in Ireland; and what the people of that country might think and become to-day, the Irish race throughout the world would realise and feel to-morrow.

Rev. J. Wood (France), observed: It is true that in the large centres there are numbers of people who call themselves free-thinkers; generally, however, they do not think much, and their philosophy is embodied in the saying, "Religion is a pack of nonsense." But France is not atheistic; it is still Roman Catholic, and in favour of that system there has clearly been a reaction. In fact, Romanism has a deep root in the heart of the French people, who, though they frequent evangelistic meetings, and may be moved to tears, will not hear a word about becoming Protestants, much less Methodists. Nevertheless the work proceeds with faith, and encouragement is not lacking. Rev. Frederick Mason, from South Africa, reported a large increase of members. Twenty-five years ago there was not a single native minister; now there are over sixty, with an ever-increasing force of local preachers, and other workers. Can Kaffirs, Bechuanas, Hottentots, be saved? An affirmative answer has been long since given, and to-day no Christian man denies the fact, whatever views he may hold as to the best mode of carrying on missionary operations. Seven-eighths of the membership of the South African societies consists of natives.

Rev. Edward Smith has consented to remain in charge of the central branch of the London Wesleyan Mission, and will retain his position as pastor of St. John's-square Chapel, Clerkenwell. Rev. J. H. Hopkins, of Dulwich, is appointed superintendent of the new Mission centre in Southwark. Rev. W. D. Walters is to act as paid secretary of the London Mission Committee.

In the midst of the deliberations of the Conference, there was a pleasant break on the occasion of the visit of a deputation of ministers of various denominations labouring in Sheffield. Rev. J. L. Pearse concluded a graceful speech with the words: Our cause is one; one Captain leads the whole host of God; we go to the same armoury for our weapons; your anxiety about your churches is a feeling shared by us; your inspiration, and the source whence it has flowed, are also ours; your Gospel and the glory to which you look forward are our hope; we have one Lord, and one faith, one God and Father of us all. May that God, yours and ours, help us all in our common work for Christ. Dr. Bowman Stephenson, in acknowledging these words of brotherly comfort, enlarged upon the urgent need there is to-day for pure and faithful Gospel preaching.

A YOUNG JEW lately said to Mr. T. E. Zerbib, missionary of the London Jews' Society at Mogador, Morocco, with tears in his eyes:—"I have still the New Testament that you gave to my father several years ago, when you passed through Azmoor with your wife. He often read it before his death, and it was a great consolation to him during his long illness. I also read it often, and I take great care of it, as a precious souvenir of my father; and really I find many good things in it. How God loves sinners; how patient He is with us who are so wicked; and He even gave the Messiah to save us."

Captain W. E. Smith,

Honorary Secretary of the Evangelisation Society.

THE subject of our sketch this week is widely known as an earnest worker in the cause of Christ, and one filling with conspicuous ability a sphere of great usefulness. God led him by unexpected paths in preparation for the post he now occupies; but for years past every faculty and a varied experience of the fully equipped man have been consecrated to work in connection with the gospel of Christ.

William E. Smith was born almost within sound of "Bow Bells," and was educated in London, Edinburgh, and France. As a youth he was placed in a banking establishment to acquire business habits, and at the age of eighteen he sailed to the colony of Victoria to join a merchant in business.

Melbourne was then a small town, and country life soon presenting far greater attractions, he purchased a sheep station, near to Melbourne, relinquished soon after on account of its circumscribed character. He then with his partner travelled three hundred miles (with stock and belongings), until they came to unoccupied country, and thus they became the pioneers of the lower Riviera district. Indeed, they were the first settlers in that part of the country. After a residence of twelve years in Australia, sheep property having very much increased in value through the discovery of gold, our friend returned to England in his thirty-first year. Had he remained, his property would have become an exceedingly valuable one, but the Lord was directing every step.

An idle life at home soon became irksome to one accustomed to great activity, and the dream of boyhood was speedily gratified. The Nottinghamshire regiment of militia was entered, being then stationed in Ireland. After passing through his recruit's drill, he was sent to the Government School of Musketry at Hythe to qualify for the position of Officer Instructor of Musketry. Having obtained a first-class certificate, he returned to his regiment. After twelve months' training, owing to the regiment's proficiency in shooting, the Instructor was sent to the island of Guernsey to instruct the field officers and staff of the Guernsey militia in musketry. From thence he was appointed to the permanent Staff of the school of musketry at Hythe. Having served several years at Hythe, he was, owing to the reduction of the Government School of Musketry at Fleetwood, placed on half pay in the year 1867.

From this time, weapons used in a different warfare, were put by the Lord into Captain Smith's hands. Whilst the Government and country had been faithfully served, spiritual truth, first received into the soul through the ministry of the late Rev. Capel Molyneux, had been delighted in, and the Captain was asked to accept the appointment of honorary secretary of the Evangelisation Society, to which greatly honoured agency he has faithfully devoted time, strength and energy for twenty-one years.

It is impossible in the space of a few lines, or even of a few pages, to convey any idea of the growth of the Evangelisation Society under Captain Smith's loving and skilful direction. When he became the hon. secretary, it had little beyond a name. There were no evangelists whose time could be depended upon, and no fixed rules to guide the work; subscribers were few, and its friends could probably have been counted without much difficulty. Now it is the largest undenominational organisation in England, or in the world. It has nearly one hundred preachers paid wholly or in part; another one hundred volunteer helpers, who take occasional services. It is known from the North of Scotland to Jersey. It is beloved and honoured by the clergy of the Church of England who preach the Gospel of the Lord Jesus, and by the godly and earnest ministers of all denominations. It works heartily and cordially with all who seek its help. It never establishes a new body of believers in any place it visits, but seeks to strengthen existing bodies. It has an income of about £12,000 a year, independently of the large sums spent locally in the arrangement of series of meetings. It has never spent £50 on the purchase of any meeting-place (other than tents), so that all of its funds go to the direct work of sending forth the Gospel. Its friends, largely amongst the poor, are numbered by tens of thousands, and the results of its work can only be known in eternity.

There are seven reasons which may in part, account for the success which, under God, has been seen in connection with this Society:—(1) Any abuse of any kind, or laxity of expression, is at once corrected when brought to the notice of Captain Smith. (2) The Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ is alone heard at its meetings. Subjects which divide Christians in opinion or in heart are avoided. (3) Sensationalism and methods which have no Divine warrant or sanction are not permitted. (4) The greatest possible care is taken in the choice of evangelists, and personal feeling is never allowed to influence in the selecting, retaining, or dismissing of a preacher. (5) Strictly business habits of conducting the business part of the work. (6) The training of its evangelists to the explaining of the Gospel as laid down in the well-known "five points," which may be tersely summed up in the words:—Ruin, Redemption, Reception, Renewal, Responsibility. (7) The honour given to the Word of God, and prayerful dependence upon the Holy Spirit to use and own that.

We need hardly emphasise the fact that there is great need in England to-day for faithful, unadulterated preaching of the Gospel of Christ. The 21,000 meetings, attended by some 3,000,000 people annually addressed by the evangelists who go forth from 21, Surrey-street, Strand, are doing much to stem the tide of superstition, lawlessness, and irreligion, which cause many an anxious thought on the part of those who love their country's highest and truest interests.

SCUTARI MEDICAL MISSION.

This Mission, founded by Dr. and Mrs. Alexandrian, is becoming a real power for good in Scutari. Since the American Board began its good work of evangelising in the East, great changes have taken place, both as regards the enlightenment of the people and the improvement of the relations between the various nationalities in the dominion of His Majesty the Sultan; so that there are now greater facilities for establishing friendly relations between the Mohammedans and the Christians.

One aspect of the Scutari Mission that will interest the public is that it is almost patronised by several Moslem Pashas. After a careful scrutiny as to its political bearings and suspected revolutionary tendencies, they have begun to admire the unmixed faith of its promoters, and their devotion for the welfare of the community.

Dr. Alexandrian's Dispensary is often quite thronged with people, and I have seen as many as a hundred there—some of them strolling about in the garden, as the waiting-room could not possibly hold them all. Belonging to various nationalities, they listen with evident interest to the words spoken to them, and all keep order and silence during prayer. Not long ago one of the Armenian notaries in Scutari (a class of men who seem to cherish an indexible hatred for everything that savours of Protestantism) asked a Moslem woman, when she was going away from the Dispensary, what it was she had heard spoken to her, and whether she was at all benefited by it. She replied: "Why, I have heard many good things—simply the commandment of God. I believe they are good people, and wish you were as good as they are." The simple faith and trust of the woman awakened his interest, and he is now trying to do all in his power for the furtherance of the work. He has visited the Dispensary and the Orphans' Home, has established friendly relations with Dr. and Mrs. Alexandrian, and has promised to exercise his influence for the support of the Mission.

The Orphans' Home has now twenty-five destitute girls, whose bright and cheerful faces attract the visitors. They are being trained by governesses, assisted and superintended by Mrs. Alexandrian.

The Dispensary work is daily growing. Dr. Alexandrian works hard; attending from fifty or sixty up to a hundred patients in one day, and dispensing medicine for them all, involves a good deal of labour. There ought to be a dispenser, so as to leave a little more time for attendance on the patients. Moreover, many who come to the dispensary are really cases for a hospital. The patient has no means for good nourishment and nobody to nurse him, therefore cannot carry out the directions, and consequently there is a loss of valuable drugs. A man came in with a swollen foot while I was there. He needed rest, nursing, and nourishment, but his home was too far for visiting, and his daily work prevented his remaining at home even for a day. We were obliged to send him away, but we supplied him with the necessary means to support himself for a few days.

This and the like occurring every day show very plainly that a Medical Mission can do comparatively little good work without a hospital. In a hospital, too, the patient is obliged to stay for a few days; so that Christian truth and goodness can be instilled into the mind. A man suffering from heart-disease, who had applied to the dispensary not long ago, was taken into a house in the neighbourhood, and nursed there. Not infrequently patients come from the country, in a most deplorable condition, asking for help. Dr. and Mrs. Alexandrian are peculiarly fitted for the work they have undertaken, which is calculated to overthrow the prejudices of men, to undermine the barrier existing between various nationalities in the East, and thus to work out a slow but sure revolution in the moral condition of the Oriental classes.

A FAVOURED VILLAGE.

Those who recognise the great need for earnest Gospel preaching cannot but rejoice at every demonstration of its elevating and saving power. For a long time the administration of the parish of Pakefield, Suffolk, has been in the hands of true servants of God, and not in vain has the glad message of redemption been proclaimed to its population. A member of our staff, who recently made a brief stay in the village, writes:—

"The testimony for Christ is uniformly pure and plain, and as often as God's salvation is offered, the absolute need for regeneration by the Holy Spirit is emphasised. The rector, Rev. Lewis Price, has no doubt about his duty; inspired by cheerful purpose, and constrained by the love of Christ, he urges his parishioners to turn to God and serve Him. It is quite delightful to witness the workings of the aged rector's influence. A spirit of genuine worship pervades the public services whether in church or schoolroom. The congregations at church are larger than is the case in many more populous parishes, and the fishermen and their families make the ancient walls ring with melodies from "Songs and Solos," for the singing is as essentially congregational as the entire service is hearty. There are two prayer-meetings a week, and in the summer months outdoor services are held in the evenings, the members of the Gospel Army rallying right joyously round the clergyman. On Sunday last the sermons were faithful denunciations of sin and corruption, and statements of Gospel faith, hope, and love. In a word, Mr. Price preached the Gospel of the kingdom in all its saving power. Being King for God, Christ expects to rule the entire lives of his people; and, as He will prove victorious over his enemies, so He will be the judge of those who disloyally reject Him. Such were some of the germinal thoughts derived from Ps. ii. The parish schoolmaster, Mr. John Munnings, is a valued coadjutor of the rector. He is organist at public worship, and also ready at any time to read the lessons, and thus relieve the hard-worked pastor. I was glad to learn that these earnest workers have abundant reason to know that their efforts are not in vain in the Lord."

HOP-PICKING begins with September. I shall be thankful for help towards this, my sixteenth season of work amongst the pickers congregating in this part of mid Kent. Money for free teas, old garments of all sorts and sizes, books, &c. (sent viâ Wrotham, L.C.D. Railway), will be most thankfully received by yours in Gospel bonds.

THE PERSONALITY OF PAUL.

That the conversion of Paul the Apostle furnishes abundant proof of the truth of the Christian religion, has been allowed by some of the greatest minds of our race. Many have set forth the argument from the point of view of the Apostle's character and life, but we doubt if the case has ever been more briefly and pointedly stated than by Dr. Underhill, in his useful little work, The Divine Legation of Paul the Apostle (Hodder & Stoughton), to which we called attention in a recent issue. As Moses was raised up to deliver Israel from Egypt, so Paul was chosen and equipped to take the Gospel to the Gentiles who knew not God.

Not from man did Paul receive either his knowledge of Christ, or his commission to preach: he personally saw the Lord, and was privileged to hear his blessed voice. This not only accounts for his conversion, but explains his claim to an apostleship not one whit behind that of those disciples who sojourned with the Lord in the days of his flesh. "Armed with divine and authoritative revelations, Saul, the persecutor, became the minister of salvation to the Gentiles, and through unequalled sufferings, the qualified and faithful servant of the Lord Most High. As Paul the Apostle he stands in the same line with those fathers and prophets to whom in old time it pleased God by direct and personal manifestation of Himself to communicate his will."

What with the many visions and revelations which God vouchsafed to him, and of which he speaks in his Epistles, Paul was no mere doctrinaire, but a man who really and truly knew God in Christ, and was perfectly convinced of the verity of the Gospel which he preached. The Apostle was not dependent upon secondary information, so if he were to-day to re-appear among men he would have nothing to learn from other disciples; but, as a faithful servant of Christ, he would simply continue to discharge the legation he personally received. Of the strong personality of the Apostle, Dr. Underhill admirably writes:—

"The Apostle Paul attributes all his knowledge, his wisdom, his ability, and his success, to the unmeasured grace and gift of God. He wishes us to see in his teaching, in his ministry of the Word, in his instructions to the churches, not the workings of his 'intense individuality and marvellous intellectual power,' but the wisdom of God, conveyed to him by direct intercourse with his Master, and the abiding, operative presence of the Holy Spirit. Great as might be his character from a human point of view, his humbleness of mind, and his consciousness of the guilt of his unregenerate days, made him shrink behind the person of his Saviour. The risen Lord was the author of his salvation, of all his knowledge, and the source of all his gifts.

"Mark the anxiety of the Apostle, that his Corinthian converts should in no sense regard either Apollos or himself as the author of the salvation they had received. 'What, then,' he says, 'is Apollos? and what is Paul? Ministers through whom ye believed, and each as the Lord gave to him. I planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase. For we are God's fellow-workers: ye are God's husbandry, God's building.' These eminent ministers of Christ were indeed companions in labour, but made no claim to be regarded as the authors of the Gospel they preached. They were only instruments in the hands of God, by whose direction the one planted and the other watered the truths He gave them. They were assistants, but not principals.

"Too much in these days is attributed to the personality of the Apostle. Great as were his services in the first promulgation of the Gospel, we are after all, indebted for them to the grace of God and to the marvellous revelations given him on the way to Damascus, in the solitudes of the desert, and in his retirement at Tarsus. We hear in his voice the voice of Christ—not a mere echo of it, but often the very words in which the Great Revealer chose to make his salvation known. Paul's communications were messages of peace from the presence of the Lord. Were Paul now living, he would repudiate and destroy the pages of panegyric often poured forth upon him, and by which the person of his Lord is frequently obscured. The servant is too much credited and praised for truths and teachings not his own, but which were 'received' by him from the Lord Jesus. They are spoken of (may we not even say stigmatised?) as 'Pauline Theology'; whereas they are the 'theology,' if such a word is applicable at all, of heaven, and the Author of it is the Son of God."

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

[CONCLUDED.]

[By Our Special Reporter.]

FRIDAY, JULY 26.

At the eleven o'clock meeting to-day, Mr. Robert Wilson read a letter that had been sent to him by a gentleman attending the Convention, expressing his disappointment at learning that the price of the new tent had not been fully subscribed. Towards this the writer enclosed £50 as a thankoffering for much spiritual blessing received through the meetings. Mr. Wilson added that it was with reluctance he referred to the subject at all; but he might state that the tent and its appurtenances would cost about £330. He was glad to have heard from many sources that its acoustic properties were much better than in any previous tent. This last remark was amply justified. The example of the donor referred to was followed by not a few at the farewell missionary meeting, as our subsequent report will show.

The first address at the forenoon meeting to-day was by

Rev. J. B. Figgis, of Brighton,

ON A HOLY WALK.

As a keynote he selected 2 Kings iv. 9: "Behold now, I perceive that this is an holy man of God, which passeth by us continually." There is no more deeply felt want, he said, in the hearts of those present, than that of being holy. There may be some here who have tried and failed so often that they are in a state of despondency and well nigh of despair. I would crave to be able to help any such, so that it may be henceforth said of each of them that he, as "an holy man of God," "passeth by continually." I do not like to attempt a definition of holiness; instead of that, let me give you a text: "Ye shall be holy unto Me: for I the Lord am holy, and have severed you from other people, that ye should be mine" (Lev. xx. 26). "I have severed you." Holiness has for its beginning separation from the world and from all sin. Why should it be thought a hard thing that God should ask us to come out and be separate? Christ says He would separate us, "that ye may be mine." Oh, sweetest word on earth or in heaven, "My beloved is mine, and I am his." We remember that Jesus was "holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners." Separation, then, is a needful mark of sanctification. Another mark is consecration. "Who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?"—or, as it is in the margin, "willing to fill his hand." If we want to know the meaning of that, we turn to Lev. viii., where we find that various things were put into the hands of the priests when they were consecrated, as a wave offering unto the Lord. So our hands are filled that they may be emptied in an offering to the Lord. Then there must also be dedication. All that we are and have must be set apart, so that we may be wholly the Lord's.

Let us look at this matter of holiness practically, not as a mere ecstatic emotion in which the soul is so occupied with God that it has no time to give to man. It will be impossible for us to be holy if there be any disregard of what our fathers called "distributive justice." There must be in all commercial life, in all political life, in all ecclesiastical life, the highest regard of the interests and the rights, not only of ourselves, but our neighbours. There are some who get on very well so long as they confine themselves to their own class and their own clique, or to those whom they can afford to patronise. But let them come into contact with those of another grade, and they are upset. There are some who get on by utterly ignoring those who are working side by side with them in the same battle, under the same Captain. I think I can after all attempt a definition of holiness; and it shall be in one short word: L O V E. Let there be true love toward God and toward man, and assuredly it shall be said of him who is thus perfected in love that he is "an holy man of God, passing by continually."

Where is this holiness to be manifested? We are not referring to its manifestation in heaven, or in the Millennium. When Christ comes, I suppose it will be a comparatively easy thing to be holy. But He wants us to be holy here and now, where it is by no means an easy thing; in the presence of the world, the flesh, and the devil. It is to be in the presence of the world. "May I go to the theatre?" said a young convert to Dr. Chalmers. "Go as long as you can," replied the Doctor, well knowing what kind of a person he was dealing with. In this case it was not long, for he found it to be a very insipid thing. But I am not sure that I dare give such advice to many who come to me asking that kind of question. There is in many forms and presentations of worldly pleasure so much of affinity and attraction, that many a young convert—ay, and many an old Christian—never breaks away from the fascination of the basilisk eye of the pleasurable world. Ay, and there are Christians who never enter a theatre; who would not give a fig for a ball; but who are as carnal and as worldly in heaping together their pile of notes and gold, and in seeking after the pelf of this world, as any pleasure-hunter is in seeking after pleasure.

Then it is to be also in the presence of the devil. I wonder what sort of people they can be who doubt the existence of the devil. I believe there is not only one devil, but tens of thousands of them. "Mr. Romaine," said one to that divine in his old age, "do you ever doubt?" "Do I ever doubt?" the good man answered; "do I ever breathe?" If doubts were as common to him as breathing, who bred these doubts in the mind of holy William Romaine? Must not the father of lies have been whispering in his ears, and telling some falsehood to his heart? And as with doubts, so with lusts. There are Christians living saintly lives, and who are doing good work for Jesus, who have now and again strong gusts of temptation that are like the fierce wind on the Atlantic, that sometimes sweeps a man overboard. Do not these things come from the breathings of Satan and his angels upon the children of God? They would not matter much if there were no tinder upon which such fiery sparks may fall; therefore the mischief of the world and the devil becomes ten times greater because of the presence within us of the flesh.

How may we follow this pursuit of holiness? That is the marrow of the whole matter. Every time we sin our will takes a wrong turn. I heard one who has spoken on this platform once say to men tempted by strong drink: "Remember that Satan can never get you to commit sin without your consent." Our brother Theodore Monod once said, on the other hand, speaking to another class of people: "You can never get to such a state of grace that you will be able to please God without your consent." But suppose we could get our will to turn the right instead of the wrong way. If we could have our Father's hand on the helm, not only in providence, but in grace, then would not the bark of life take a straight course for the haven where we would go? Thank God, there is hope that this may be so continually. "Lord, Thou wilt ordain peace for us: for Thou also hast wrought all our works in us" (Isa. xxvi. 12). Or take the yet plainer passage in the New Testament: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Here is the secret of the whole subject: It is not quietism or perfectionism that we are bidden to work out; but the important thing to note is that God worketh in us to will as well as to do. If He will indeed work in us to will, then surely there is the hope and the assurance of holiness. Because this is so, we are not to lie upon our oars. But, if God dwell in me, walk in me, and work in me to give me the right suggestion and the right inclination, and if He gives me the grace to bring the same to good effect, then I may go on my way rejoicing.

Rev. G. C. Grubb,

ON THE SAVIOUR'S SOUL-THIRST.

After reading the brief narrative in 1 Chron. xi. 17—19, of how David's "three mightiest" procured for him the water from the well at Bethlehem, and how the king would not drink that which was the price of their blood, Mr. Grubb said there must be some divine and eternal principles underlying this incident. David longed for this water. What does Jesus Christ, David's greater Son, thirst for from his people? At the well in Samaria, we know that He thirsted for the salvation of a sin-sick soul. We must learn that any blessing we have received is of little use unless we thirst for the salvation of those whom we meet on life's highway. An awful thirst also came to Christ on the cross—not for the salvation of one soul, but of the whole world. Have we ever thirsted for the salvation of the world? This Convention will do us little good until we hear, it may be in our dreams, the agonised cry of the millions of India, China, Africa, and the islands of the sea. Has the salvation of the world ever cost us a single tear in our prayers? The only thing the world ever gave to the thirsting Jesus was a draught of vinegar. Many of us have given the Lord the bitterness of our sins; shall we now give Him a cup of cold, refreshing water, as we say, "Lord, endow me with quenchless thirst for the salvation of souls"?

Notice some of the eternal principles of action that underlie this narrative of David's mighty men. One is this: An expressed wish is law to a loyal heart. It was enough for these men that King David longed for the water. Is there any expressed wish of King Jesus to us that we are refusing to obey? If there is, can we be really loyal to Him? Another thought is that love does not wait for orders, but anticipates the desires of the loved one. What shall we say about the attitude of the universal Church towards the express orders of its King that it should evangelise the whole world? We learn, again, that Christ values our gifts according to the motive and according to the sacrifice. If we are doing any work for the sake of Christ, we do not faint or grow weary in it. Fainting generally proceeds from weak action of the heart; and it is to be feared that many professed Christians are suffering from this weak action of the heart towards the Lord Jesus, which is a very dangerous complaint. One touch from his hand will heal us. If we would have our love to Him renewed, let us lay down our life at his feet. We cannot do this without knowing it. Paul said: "I am ready to be offered up"—or to be "poured out." Let us seek to attain to self-sacrifice like that. Who is willing to be a drink-offering to Jesus, to-day?

One more thing that Jesus desires. He said: "With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer" (Luke xxii. 15). That passover was symbolical of the intimate communion, the holy fellowship, the constant intercourse that should obtain between my soul and my Saviour's heart. After the salvation of souls there is nothing the Saviour desires more than constant realised communion with our souls. If this Convention is to be a blessing to me, I must learn the secret of living in constant communion with my Lord and Saviour.

Friday evening came at length. The friends, as a rule, gather very quietly at these meetings; and the murmur of low, eager conversation bespoke an unusual event. Rev. G. C. Grubb led in intensely earnest prayer, and the first address was by

Rev. J. Gelson Gregson,

ON THE KNOWLEDGE OF CHRIST;

the text being, "Have I been so long with you and yet hast thou not known Me, Philip?" It would be easy for us to condemn the ignorance of this disciple. At any rate, there is not a single person here who does not know something more about Christ and Christly living than he knew when he came to Keswick. If you expected to have some lofty pinnacle of piety exhibited, which almost dazzled you at the thought of climbing so high, you must have learnt that the highest pinnacle is down at the feet of Jesus, and in the valley of humiliation to learn of Him. There may still be those here who do not really know Jesus. Philip knew a vast deal more about the outward life and doings of Christ than we can do, but he did not truly know the Lord. How are we rightly to know, and understand, and apprehend Christ? How do you form a friendship? First it is a nod, then a question, then a little conversation, and a letter or two. We might bring in the Scotch maxim that we do not know a man till we have had a business transaction with him. What transactions have you had with Christ? Have you ever been to his Bank and presented your note? Or have you been intensely admiring Christ as you admire some jewels in a shop, which you can never possess? There is no need here to strain after the impossible, or to have a desire that cannot be gratified. Those who know Christ know that He neither wants admiration, nor lays down principles which are impossible. If ever men had reason to thank God for another man's ignorance, we have reason to thank God to-day for the ignorance of Philip, for we have here developed truth after truth, with that grand illustration of the vine, and the agonising intercessory prayer. We may suppose that the Master said to Himself: "My disciples shall never again be able to plead ignorance of my character, or of my purpose."

Let us see for a moment how Christ has provided a method whereby the revelation of Divine knowledge is to come to our souls. There are some men who are getting so desperately clever that they will positively say: if certain matters of inspiration commend themselves to their judgment, they will accept them, and if not, in their superlative wisdom, they will not. But God does not speak to man through the mind; hence those who speak thus are trying to get Divine knowledge through a wrong channel. You might as well expect to get a telegraphic message through a gas pipe, as to think that God will reveal His will through the human intellect. Surely the mind and intellect of Philip had been wrought on to such a degree that he must confess He was the Christ; yet Philip did not know Him. How are we to know Christ? You might as well try to fly like an eagle as to know Christ by imitation. It is these human efforts that have wearied men, so that they say: "We will try no longer." Christ tells the disciples that it was the Spirit who should come, that would reveal and show to them the truth concerning Himself. If God has provided this channel of communication between Himself and man, man must accept it, or for ever remain in darkness concerning God. All the force of the human intellect, and all the boasted culture of the nineteenth century, cannot prevent the power of God's Spirit from flowing in the channel He has created; to irrigate the desert and waste places of this world, that the Church of the living Christ may receive the waters of the living God.

Look again and see how it is fulfilled. If you take away the Divine medium, the power of the Holy Ghost, you will have a life unfinished and the purpose of God uncompleted. I assert that the birth, crucifixion, and ascension of the Lord need one completed act, which is the manifestation of the Holy Ghost in them that believe. You want evidence to prove that our faith is not a fable. You may weary your brain looking over the biggest MSS. in the British Museum. It is right that a few choice men should wade through all these tomes, but the man who can spell out the "Gospel" can put his hand upon a proof stronger than all you find in manuscripts or in archeological remains. You point to one and say: "That man was a blasphemer and a drunkard; ask him what he knows." "I know Jesus." "How do you know Jesus?" "His Spirit is abiding in me." We need no more books to apologise for our faith; we need living witnesses throughout the length and breath of the land to testify by their lives that the Holy Ghost is abiding in them. Then we shall understand what is meant by being filled with the Spirit.

What, then, have we learned at our gatherings? Some precious truths never to be forgotten while memory lasts, and the Spirit abides within us to remind us of the things of God. We have learned that that creeping thing called self must never again possess our souls; that there is to be a distinct separation between the believer and the world; that the whole of our life is to be solemnly and honestly placed in his hands. You say it is high, and you cannot attain to it: the Apostles may, but you can never possess this precious gem. Nothing of the kind; you are ignorant of Christ if you say that. The possession of Christ is the dethronement of self. When Christ is there all becomes his. There stands the prophet in the vision, and how simple are his words, "I have seen the King." When he saw the King in all his glory, brightness, and power, he cried, "Unclean, unclean." Then the seraph took a live coal from off the altar of sacrifice, and touched his lips and said, "Go." The Master said: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." We may see no cloven tongues of fire descending into this tent; we may hear no blast of wild wind going through it. But it is possible for every living soul here this night to receive the Spirit of God, and to say: "We do know; we do love; we will obey the Lord Jesus Christ our Master."

Rev. C. A. Fox

ON ANGELS OF THE PILGRIMAGE.

The words on which Mr. Fox built up the closing exhortation of the Convention were these: "Jacob went on his way, and the angels of God met him" (Gen. xxxii. 1). I believe, he said, in surprises from the presence of the Lord; I believe there are angels of God ready to meet us to-night and to-morrow as we move forward, if only we are in the path of the Lord. Let me put before you one or two angels whom, I believe, we shall see on our way. First we shall meet the Angel of the Covenant—the angel of power. This is what we need; as much as did weak, crafty, designing, but yet believing Jacob. He prayed to the God of his fathers: "Thou saidst." That is a good prayer; hang on to something God has said, and you will have something you can really hang on to. We read that an angel wrestled with Jacob and disjointed him; and then the angel actually had to supplicate Jacob to let him go. It is when God has entirely disabled us that we prevail with Him. This is the angel of humiliation. You will very likely be so humbled and broken in pieces by the power of the Lord that you will think you have lost the blessing you received. Cling to Him and claim from Him in your brokenness, and you will in the end prevail. Remember, He is the God of Jacob—the God of the broken and outcast ones. I do rejoice in the name of the God of Jacob, because I feel that He is the God I need. He shall give us such a blessing that we shall never lose it—the blessing of Himself as our Redeemer and Lord.

Another angel we shall meet is the angel that met poor Hagar cast out of her home into the wilderness. He commanded her to return and submit herself to her mistress. This is the lesson that we all need. The secret of a holy happy life is to return and submit ourselves to the power and will of God. "Whatsoever He saith unto you do it." If you do your part of the work, the Lord will respond in Divine grace and liberality. Remember how the angel met Elijah and supplied his needs. All is well with us, if we have Jesus with us, the angel of the everlasting covenant. Another angel we shall meet is the angel of guidance. "Behold, I send an Angel before thee, to keep thee... and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared...obey his voice" (Exod. xxiii. 20, 21). There is nothing surer in all Scripture than that the Lord keeps his people; page after page, book after book resounds with the leading and keeping; with the echoing of the voice of the blessed guardian Jesus. Remember how God led his people in the wilderness by the cloud and the pillar. And when they entered into the land, "the captain of the Lord's host" met them at Jericho. Joshua said to him "What sayest thou, my lord, unto thy servant?" This is what each of us must say to God every day, and He will lead us up against all the Jerichos that come in our path of duty.

We read in Gen. xix. of the angels of warning that came to Lot in Sodom. Lot's history has its terrible lessons for us. He first pitched his tent towards Sodom; soon he was inside the city, and then he became one of the leading persons in the place. Such is the power of the world even over a Godly man. It took several angels to drag Lot out of Sodom when it was to be burned. He went and warned his sons and daughters-in-law, but they only mocked him. Christian parents, when your children see your inconsistency they will only ridicule your faith. They will say: "You do not practice what you profess to believe; why should I?" Oh, we must be detached from our worldliness in some way or another. God is bound to do it, and He will certainly do it.

In Isa. vi. we have the angel of service. You remember how the prophet, beholding the glory of the Lord, fell on his face in the dust and saw his own uncleanness. Then an angel touched his lips with a live coal. Only out of burnt lips can the message of the Lord proceed. We very often speak of the things of God with too great ease. There is a glibness and fluency that is unconscious of the awfulness of truth, and of the God of truth. Oh to recognise in whose presence we speak, and that before the manifestation of God's glory we may fall at his feet as dead! This will be the preface to the power for blessing and for service. I have seen much seeking of the Holy Ghost, and I fear a great deal of it is done by wrong and unscriptural methods. The ethods of God are true humility; not trying to persuade God to give that which He s already given, but with a surrendered being iiting on the sovereign grace of the eternal ord. Then, after being burned and chastened God, He would lead us on, with eyes that ve seen the King, with willing feet, with edient hearts, our ears ringing with the hoes of the "thrice holy" of the heavenly aces. This is what we need as messengers of sus, and as missionaries going forth to the ds of the earth. But it is the part and the ivilege of every child of God to have this holy aptism. It is not for a few ministers or issionaries. We want it as much at home as e do in the mission field. All our daily house-old duties ought to be done in the power of the oly Ghost. David went back to the keeping his flock after he had been anointed king ver Israel, and quietly did his work just as efore, till the appointed time came when he as called to reign over the people. All our usiness transactions of to-day ought to be done the power and presence of God the Holy host. "Choose out men for this business full f the Holy Ghost and wisdom," were the direc-ons of the twelve disciples to the early Church. tephen, the first martyr, was a business man. o true work can be done for the Master except the power of the Holy Ghost.

One more angel we read of in Acts xxvii. as ppearing to Paul in the midst of the ship-reck. Such a place to have a vision of ngels! "There stood beside me this night an ngel of the Lord whose I am and whom I erve." Are we ready to greet God's angel thus? ou remember how the angel said to God's ervant: "I will give thee all who sail with hee in the ship." Here is a promise for our iends who are going to other lands; God give hem the souls of all that sail with them, and hake them a blessing to all. Then you recol-ect what Paul said to his fellow-passengers: Ye cannot be saved except ye abide in the hip." May we not apply this: Unless we bide in the Lord and rest in Him, the vision f his salvation will be neutralised and spoiled.

The last angel mentioned by Mr. Fox was hat we read of in Rev. xxi., who said to the postle: "Come hither, I will shew thee the ride, the Lamb's wife." This is the angel of he dawn. As we travel our pilgrim way, the ngel of the Second Advent, the angel of our ctual introduction into the presence of the Lord hall meet us, and show us, not the bride, but the Bridegroom Himself. We are near the dawn; re we ready to meet the angel of the dawn? n an hour that we think not the Son of Man ometh. We may go to Him, or He may come o us. Let us be wholly occupied in his blessed ervice till the hour of our meeting comes. Mr. Fox closed his address by the Doxology, in which he was joined by the whole congregation —"Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and o the Holy Ghost; as it was in the beginning, s now and ever shall be, Amen."

Rev. H. C. G. Moule was divinely led in his prayer which followed. Then Mr. Hopkins conducted the after-meeting as before, bringing the different classes in the audience to the point of a personal acknowledgment of the blessing received or desired, till all were stand-ng. Dr. Elder Cumming offered the closing prayer, and the company sang with a will—

All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all.

The Bible-Readings.

These morning assemblies at nine o'clock, from Tuesday to Friday inclusive, were not the least attractive or profitable part of the Convention proceedings. By his valued utterances, Rev. Hubert Brooke now seems to possess a sort of prescriptive right to the professorship of Biblical homiletics at Keswick. He gave three out of the four readings, the other being given by Mr. Moule. In a compressed report, it is impossible to do more than indicate the chief points in the construction of such expositions. The following brief notes of the first afford an idea of their practical nature:—

PREPARING THREE WAYS.

On Tuesday Mr. Brooke founded his remarks on three passages in Isaiah—xl. 3: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord"; lvii. 14: "Take out the stumblingblock out of the way of my people"; lxii. 10: "Prepare ye the way of the people; cast up the highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people." Here three ways are to be prepared—the way of the Lord, the way of his people, and the way of the peoples of the earth. God wants all believers to be road-makers. What is the way of the Lord? The place where He walks. "I will dwell in them, and walk in them" (2 Cor. vi. 16). We read that God walked in the midst of Israel's camp. So the way of the Lord is up and down the Christian's life; in and out of the Christian's home; and through the Christian's heart. He not only walks with us, but in us. What is the stumblingblock in the way? We read in this passage in Deuteronomy that it is some "unclean thing," that makes the Lord turn away from his people. In Mark vii. 20, 21, we have a black list of things that defile the man, and the command of God is that all such things must be put away. Many of them are things that men of the world would have nothing to do with; but there are others which even the Lord's people are not sufficiently exercised about. Covetousness, pride, and foolishness are put by God on the same list as the other things, and for the sake of them the Lord is too often made to turn away from walking with his people. In Ezek. xiv. 3 we read of those who "set up their idols in their heart, and put the stumblingblock of their iniquity before their face." Covetousness is idolatry; so are pride and foolishness, and these stumblingblocks must all be cast out, or God cannot walk with us and dwell in us.

The second way is "the way of my people." What is this? It is the "highway of holiness" (Isa. lv. 8). We are to have a share with God in preparing this way and in removing the stumblingblocks that hinder. These are like the report brought back by the ten spies, who saw nothing but difficulty in the way of entering into possession of the promised land. How often do elder disciples put hindrances in the way of younger Christians; just as these spies brought back a false report. Our Lord utters some very strong warnings against offending "one of these little ones," to which we do well to take heed. The Apostle says, in Rom. xiv. 13: "Let us not therefore judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that no man put a stumblingblock or occasion to fall in his brother's way." It is related of one who came into a room, that he overheard a remark about someone being "a very peculiar person." "Who is that?" he asked. "Miss So-and-so." "Yes, I think she is a very peculiar person; I never heard her say an unkind word about anybody else." The Lord's command to his people is to "lift up the hands that hang down, and the feeble knees," and to "make straight paths for the feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; let it rather be healed." What stumblingblocks to other believers are the worldliness and the doubtful practices of those who are looked up to.

Lastly, there is "the way of the peoples." We are now on wider ground. Year by year, as a certain season comes round, we repeat the words: "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light." Do we know that half the nations of the earth have never yet seen a glimmer of that light; and of the remaining half how few comparatively are walking in that light. Over two hundred million souls are without a ray of Gospel light. And all that the millions of the Christian Church can muster up, to send this great light to those who sit in darkness, is some 5000 souls. Is that a great light? There must be some gigantic stumbling-block somewhere in the way of the peoples of the world. I would say to those in the mission field—not in judgment, but in sympathy—Is yours a great light? You may fairly say: What supplies do you send? The last new thing the Church of Christ has discovered is that the world wants cheap missionaries. Just as it asks for cheap goods—which are shoddy goods—so now it wants shoddy missionaries too. Surely it is only that people may live in greater luxury at home, that they want to cheapen the rate of missionaries abroad. The great hindrance is the want in God's people of an intelligent apprehension of what is meant by self-sacrifice.

Closing Missionary Meeting.

The extent of the missionary element, and the depth of the missionary interest in connection with the Convention, were shown by the vast congregation, quite filling the tent, at ten o'clock on Saturday morning. This was the very last meeting of the Convention proper, and it was pleasant to think that, after having enjoyed so rich a spiritual feast, the assembled Christians were turning wistful eyes to the great needs of the mission fields. Mr. Bowker was in the chair, looking almost fresher and better than on any preceding day; though Mr. Eugene Stock took in hand the active conduct of the meeting. The platform was a very cosmopolitan one.

Rev. F. B. Meyer prayed that the tide of holy feeling that had filled the hearts of the people might be turned into a stream of undying desire for the salvation of a lost world. He pleaded also that the coming year might be marked by a great outpouring of the Holy Ghost in all parts of the world.

As a representative of the Jew, Rev. J. Wilkinson, of Mildmay, gave five minutes to some thoughts from God's Word about his ancient people, and another five to God's work among them. "In thee and thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed" was the primal promise to Abraham, and this promise shall not fail of fulfilment. But the first offer was to the Jew, and we must never forget that. Out of a full heart Mr. Wilkinson traced out the Apostolic method in the early days of always going first to the Hebrew with the offer of salvation. If we lay hold of the Jew, we have a powerful agency in helping to the conversion of the world. Then the speaker told something of the encouraging progress of the work with which he is specially connected; making reference to the distribution of the Hebrew New Testament among the Jews of the European Continent. Within the last few days word has come that the remainder of 50,000 copies has been given out in Russia. One copy has brought a whole family to the saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Mr. Stock read the letter written to Mr. Bowker last year by an anonymous friend who offered £10 as a thankoffering, which gift was the foundation of the "Keswick Mission Fund." It was suggested that this unknown friend's example might be followed by many this year also.

Rev. H. E. Perkins told of wonderful growth in missions in the Punjaub, where there are now many native clergy. The Lord there has gone down very low into the social strata in taking out a people to Himself. The Anglo-Saxon race carries many curses to the heathen, but they have also been honoured to be pioneers of his Gospel everywhere. He appealed to parents to devote their children to mission work from their very childhood.

"From sultry India to the snows of the North-west" we were carried away by Archdeacon Phair, a twenty-five years' worker among the Red Indians, who told something of Gospel effort in that field. He described the death of a Red Indian who testified in his last moments to the blessedness of Bible truth, and to the comfort of Christ's presence in the soul.

Mr. Stock said that special prayer had been asked for the Shah of Persia, remembering that in the days of Cyrus that nation had shown kindness both to Jews and Gentiles. Japan was also unrepresented in the meeting, but a letter had just come from a lady now working there, who spoke of the rest of heart she had as well as an intense longing for the salvation of the people; she was at Keswick last year and spoke. Rev. G. C. Grubb then led in prayer for the Shah, for Persia, for Japan, and for the North West of America. He prayed that Japan might not be too quickly converted, and that the people might be saved from a mere political religion.

After a hymn, to enable any to leave who had to go by an early train, we had in succession three representatives of CHINA.

Mrs. Stott had ten minutes in which to tell something of "the goodly land" of the Chinee. The children of Anak are there, it is true, but in the strength of God we are well able to overcome them. As specimens of the clusters of rich fruit from China she could display, Mrs. Stott told of specially interesting visitation work in the outlying villages. A travelling pedlar in one place, selling tapes and needles and pins, carries with him a Testament and speaks to the people about Jesus. During a visit she conversed with forty inquirers, all of them the fruit of this humble man's testimony. This was only one of the very encouraging items in Mrs. Stott's report of the goodliness of the flowery land. Who will go and gather other bunches of the fruit?

Mr. F. Baller held aside the curtain and showed something of the great and crying spiritual needs of China. While many parts of the East-end of London are regularly visited "three deep," there are multitudes in China without the faintest streak of Gospel light. Two immense provinces are without a single Protestant missionary. Men are wanted there who have a knowledge of God, of his Word, and of their fellow men.

Mr. George Nicol said there were no Keswicks or Mildmays in China, but Jesus Christ is there, and He makes his presence felt in the very loneliest posts of service. He spoke of the need of effort among the Shans in South China; another tribe, the Lolos, in the north, are a much-oppressed people, and also without witnesses for Christ. These last are allied to the Karens in Burmah, among whom the Gospel has had such wonderful triumphs.

Mr. Bannister, of Foochow (C.M.S.), led in very earnest prayer for China.

Mr. Stock said that missionary meetings would be held at Friar's Crag by the lake each evening during the following week. A request having been sent in for prayer in view of the royal wedding taking place to-day, Rev. Hubert Brooke offered earnest petition on behalf of all the members of the reigning House, and especially for the Princess-bride.

INDIA

was next brought to the notice of the meeting. Rev. John Barton, of Cambridge, who is going out for a season to Tinnevelly, spoke of the growth there. It is the native brethren to whom we must look to do the great bulk of the work, but they need help and encouragement. The Tamils are a most enterprising, active race, and he asked prayer that he and others might be able to bring to them some of the blessing they have received at Keswick.

Miss Bernard, of the Church of Scotland Mission, Poonah, said that if all who go to China or India on pleasure or business would testify for Christ, it would do much to advance the kingdom of God in these lands. Miss Aitken, of Lahore, Punjaub, asked for sympathy and prayer on behalf of the women of Upper India. On the Christian girls largely depends the future of the churches there. There are no real "homes" among the Mohammedans, and much prayer is needed on behalf of the women. Village work in India is hard in one sense, but also hopeful, because the people themselves are inviting the missionaries to come and visit them. The women suffer greatly because of the lack of medical relief, which no one can take to them but sisters. Will not the Keswick Convention give one or two volunteers for this medical mission work? As a nation, we have used India to our own advantage; let us think more of the claims of the people upon us.

Miss Asquith, of Tinnevelly, pleaded for the little girls of India. They are not shut up in the zenanas till they are ten years old, and if we had taken to them the light of the Gospel in their early youth, there would not be so much zenana darkness as there is to-day. There is no difficulty in getting at the little ones in the schools. "I'm Jesus little girl," said one of them; "He died for me." Those taught in the schools can never be the heathen mothers they would otherwise have been; and zenana work in houses where they live is much more easy. When little girls are brought to Christ, their first desire is to bring their mothers also. There is a large institution in which the Christian girls are being trained to go out and do missionary work in the villages.

Rev. Hubert Brooke read a letter from Rev. David Wood, a missionary brother in Colombo, telling of the great need of women workers there among the Tamil as well as Mohammedan women and girls. Two or three ladies who could go out at their own charges would be a great acquisition.

Rev. John Fordyce, late of Simla, told of the spiritual needs of the English-speaking people, and how they are being met as far as possible by the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society. Gifted young men are needed who will volunteer to do this work of visiting the scattered Englishmen and Eurasians in India. Many of them are very spiritually destitute; do not let us forget or neglect them.

Mr. Armstrong, of Madras, led in prayer for India.

AFRICA.

Mr. Spencer Walton referred to the monetary needs of the North Africa Mission, and then gave some details of the Cape General Mission, on behalf of which a farewell meeting was held the same afternoon at Friar's Crag. Speaking of Swaziland, he said there was only one missionary there, and he was no missionary at all, but a political agent, who was greatly influencing the king against any real missionaries.

Rev. J. A. Robinson, from the Niger, said he could not convey an idea of the vast mission fields of the West Coast of Africa and the Soudan. Might God burn the word "Africa" on many hearts. The population of the Niger are very degraded cannibals; they murder twins and turn out the mother, and there is an enormous waste of human life in sacrifices. The Western Soudan has been wholly untouched, though there are there some of the finest races in the world. There are some sixty millions of them, and no missionaries yet. Mr. Wilmot-Brooke and Mr. Ernest Shaw have gone out there, and Mr. Robinson said he wanted at least six men to go with him next autumn, on his return to these regions. Will not some young men come and devote their ardent lives to Christ. It will be no "feather bed" work, as there is a malarial climate, besides the savagery of the native peoples. But surely these things will not cause any dismay in the hearts of those who would serve Christ, or suffer for Him as He may appoint.

"Just that we might not forget Europe," a few minutes were allotted to Countess Wedel, who referred to the needs of Norway. She spoke of the work of the Salvation Army and of Gospel Temperance effort in Christiania. She and a fellow worker (Miss Esmarck) had come to Keswick and got a great blessing. She pathetically entreated for prayer for the wealthier classes of Norway, and for more workers.

While the meeting was in progress, many money gifts or promises were sent up to the platform, and read out by Mr. Stock. They were given mostly as thankofferings for spiritual help received at the Convention, an the amounts, varying from 5s. to £50, wer designated as for the new tent, the Keswic Mission Fund, the Church Missionary Society the China Inland Mission, or other mission that had been referred to.

The very last word of exhortation cam from Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, who said it wa most cheering to see the many responses tha had come up to the platform. Those wh have offered themselves had as yet been com paratively few, but it was hoped that other would volunteer. Notwithstanding the in creased interest shown here and there, Mr Radcliffe went on to emphasise the fact tha all that has yet been done or purposed i utterly incommensurate with the vast needs o the world. Let us get the mind of the Lor Himself, who when He beheld the doomed cit wept over it. In our own city of Londo what misery and crime. He said he did no plead for foreign missions, but for the evan gelisation of the world. See the little result o our many efforts at home; is there not some thing wrong? Our Bible tells us how we ar wrong. We have been concentrating ourselve in England while uncounted millions are i Africa and other lands without anybody to te them of a Saviour. Why have we lost the fol lowing of the plain teachings of the Bible? Wh does Jesus weep over England and our Churche and even over our blessed Convention? Be cause we do not know the day of our visitation This Conference happily is setting other con ferences a blessed example in the way o thinking of the needs of the heathen. If w were to rise to the occasion and the need, w should soon see England like a watered garden But we cannot bring a blessing down on Eng land while we are in disobedience. We are no keeping the commandments of God, and ye we are wondering why our churches are bein deserted. God is surely going to bless u mightily; let us be expecting and believing tha the Lord of the harvest will thrust out a vas army of workers to all parts of the missio field. Let us give ourselves to fasting an prayer, and lean heavily on our heavenl Father, in the name of Jesus, and we shall se wondrous things done.

Then we betook ourselves to prayer. All wh were going out as missionaries stood, and wer presented at the mercy seat by Rev. G. C. Grubb Those who are trusting to going out as mission aries, and also those who are asking guidanc as to their future path in service abroad, aros —a great company of them. Rev. C. A. Fo prayed for them, and then pronounced th benediction. The meeting extended over thre hours, but nobody seemed wearied. It wa truly a happy and hopeful finish to a mos blessed week.

[Note.—By an oversight, several closin paragraphs of our last week's report of th mid-week missionary meeting were omitte These were to the effect that after Mr. Eugen Stock had read out the list of C.M.S. and kin dred missionaries, the remainder of the name including those of the China Inland, the Cap General, and other Missions, were read out b Mr. Broomhall. Earnest prayer for these an also for missionaries in the field was made b various friends before the meeting closed.]

The Early Prayer-meetings.

These seven o'clock meetings were ver largely attended, and enjoyed as much perhap as any. The freshness and coolness of th mountain air and the quiet of the morning were helpful to the receptiveness of the sou The number of special petitions handed in th year exceeded by far those at any previous Con vention, and necessitated the classifying o them under general headings.

On Wednesday morning, Pastor Theodor Monod gave a very searching and solemn wor on Gen. xii. and Lev. xxv. In these tw chapters we see the Canaanites dispossessed an srael put in possession. But how much really elonged to them? "Every place that the sole f your foot shall tread on, that I have given nto you." The land does not belong to our nemy. It belongs to God, and He has given to us, under the guidance of our great Joshua. All things are ours"—life and death. Nay, ne thing is not ours. "Ye are not your own." s long as we are our own, we have to shift for urselves; but when we become his, He says: Son, thou art ever with Me, and all that I ave is thine."

On Thursday morning the requests for prayer ere so many as to prevent anything like an ddress being given, and a brief word of exhortation was given by Rev. J. G. Gregson.

On Friday morning over 300 requests for rayer were presented, after which Rev. C. A. Fox gave an address, which was blessed to nany. Much prayer having been offered for nissionaries, Mr. Fox said: "I believe in telerams to far-off souls by the power of the Holy Ghost. May the blessings we are receiving ere be theirs!" He then spoke on four erses, which show us a man four times peruaded, and in each a condition attached, vithout which the promise is not obtained. he verses were 2 Tim. i. 12, Rom. iv. 21, iii. 38, and Heb. xi. 13, 14. There is one ondition, that we act as strangers and pilrims, and declare by our lives that we are uch. The Church does not declare plainly its tranger life; alas, our dress and our habits do ot declare that we seek a country out of ight.

On Saturday morning the usual praise-meeting was held. There was an immense gathering. The greater part of the time was taken up with the repeating of portions of Scripture, irst by the ministers, and then by those throughout the audience. The passages were mainly those expressive of trust or triumph; while others were of a hortatory character as bearing on life and testimony, e.g., "Feed my sheep"; "Follow thou Me"; "Draw out now and bear to the governor of the feast"; "Let us not, therefore, judge one another any more"; "Serve the Lord with gladness." It was altogether very inspiring and strengthening thus to feed on the very finest of the wheat on the morning of the last day of the feast.

Ministers' Meetings.

The meetings for ministers only were very helpful; hundreds gathered on several occasions in the Drill Hall, for counsel on the difficulties and responsibilities of ministerial work. On Wednesday, one of the largest and most interesting of those meetings was held, when Pastor MONOD spoke on Mal. ii., iii. 3, and Isa. vi. 1—8. The Gospel is being attacked in all quarters, he said, not only in France, but in this favoured land. Take the case of a young man of sixteen or seventeen beginning to think for himself. He begins to question whether the Gospel is a mere tradition of the elders, or a living power. If he looks on anyone of us, he has a right to do so; for we not only profess but we teach that the Word of God is true, and that Christ has brought and can bring deliverance. If we who profess to teach this, do not show forth in all our life that Christ is to us the wisdom and the power of God, how can that young man receive it? Our position is one of great privilege, and, in another aspect, of fearful responsibility; for no minister can exert a neutral influence, if there is such a thing. If not witnesses for Christ, we are witnesses against Him. Let us see to it that we are really doing all God would have us do, and especially that we are all God would have us be. Take care also that what we are doing is done in the right spirit. Let "God with us" be the watchword of our warfare, and we shall then realise that the world cannot stand before a ministry strong in the grace of God.

Brief addresses were given by Revs. H. C. G. Moule, Evan Hopkins, J. G. Gregson, and F. B. Meyer; many of those present indicated a desire for the infilling of the Holy Spirit.

The Testimony Meeting

on Friday afternoon was a very practical proof of the good results of these yearly Conventions. There was no lack of witnesses to the influx of spiritual blessing experienced in former years and at this gathering. Some told how they had come to Keswick accidentally, as it seemed, but they would never cease to thank God that He had led them hither. Others spoke of prejudices they had entertained as to the Keswick teaching, and described how a closer acquaintance with the truths declared had not only dissipated these feelings, but had brought them into the full tide of blessing, and given them a power for living and for serving to which they had hitherto been strangers. The testimonies came from all sorts of people, and were evidently of a very genuine and deeply felt description.

Ladies' Meetings.

(BY A LADY CORRESPONDENT.)

THE ladies' meetings have always been a feature of the Keswick Convention. They were originated by Mrs. Harford-Battersby, wife of the beloved founder of the Convention, who followed him so soon into the presence of the Master. Her thought in arranging them was that the truths taught in the tent could at the ladies' meetings be enforced in a more homely and direct way, as bearing on the daily matters where so many women have their only kingdom. From the first, under the care of Mrs. Michael Baxter, there has been such special blessing by their means, that the foresight which founded them has been justified over and over again.

On this occasion, as in several previous years, they were in the charge of Mrs. Bannister, Mrs. Tottenham, and Miss Nugent, and again God gave much blessing. The first day, the starting point was given in prayer in the words, "Forgiven...even until now." We gathered as "forgiven ones," who longed to know how to serve Him without hindrance. Mrs. BANNISTER was the principal speaker throughout. Her opening words were, "Jesus Himself," with "Whom I shall see for myself, and not another." Let us fix our thoughts upon this one aim, and then there should not be disappointment. Another day, she spoke very strong and plain words on the cleansing; how full it might be, and how unlimited in the one who yields. Yet that this cleansing could not be eradication (which is no Scriptural word to begin with), because that eradication implied sin being a "thing" which could be laid hands on. It was far too subtle a thing to be materialised or localised, and nothing but the indwelling presence of the living Lord, by the power of his Spirit, could counteract it. Only by saying "His dominion shall be from sea to sea" (Zech. ix. 10) could it be made true in practice, that "sin shall not have dominion over you."

On one morning there were words given, full of quiet power and force, from Lady VICTORIA FREKE, who took the subject of the girdle, in Jer. xiii., bringing from it what He meant us to be: a girdle round Himself; and the thought of the nearness and clinging which was his plan for us, left every one of us with the keen desire, "Lord, make me what I am meant to be to Thee!" The next morning the same subject was taken by Rev. H. Brooke, at his Bible-reading in the tent, which was one of the many little signs of the closely knit design of spirit which this Convention brings out so strongly.

MRS. TOTTENHAM'S words that came home firmest and clearest were on four "alls," which God lays out before us to claim. The first was in Titus ii. 14. One of her points was that described by Isaiah, "the whole head sick, and the whole heart faint." There was little use in going at one little detail of life or character after another, piecemeal, until after that the whole being had been laid open to the incoming and possession of the only Cleanser, who could touch the very springs of our being.

Miss NUGENT'S main thought was, God being able to make strong on the weakest points, after the life and faculties had been surrendered to Him. From the keynote, "The lame take the prey," and "they that stumbled are girded with strength," she showed how incessantly God pledges Himself not only to build anew, but to do it on the desolated spots, so that "the land which had been as the wilderness might become as the Garden of Eden," and fame be given for shame (Zeph. iii. 19), and fasts be turned to feasts (Zech. viii. 19).

The testimonies on the closing morning showed how God had been pleading, and how many had opened to Him. In less than a minute each, a number gave thanks, and then another stream told how blessing formerly received had been retained.

Besides these meetings each morning, there were two for young ladies. These were in special charge of Mrs. Tottenham, and it could not but give a thrill of joy and hope to see the throng of young girls gathering together, eager to learn how they could best give the freshness of their lives to Him who had bought them all. So we separated, with the glad trust that many and many a home and hidden life will be freshly lit by Him to his glory and honour.

[Our readers may be glad to know that full reports of the leading addresses given at the Convention will appear in the September Life of Faith. (2d Marshall & Co.)]

A BRIGHT SPOT.

IN the course of a yachting cruise in the Irish Channel, undertaken in the first instance to visit the lighthouses and lightships on the west and south coasts, we visited the Island of Lundy on Friday, July 19, and remained until the Monday. We were surprised in our ignorance to find what a lovely spot it is. It stands high over the sea, surrounded by lofty cliffs, and is above three miles long and one broad.

The land is fully cultivated, and the owner is a clergyman of the Church of England, who is much loved by the inhabitants (fifty-eight in number)—and no wonder. He spends his time going among his people, seeking the welfare of their souls and bodies, and as there is no doctor or school on the island he is counsellor to those in sickness and teacher of the young. He is assisted in his labour of love by his two sisters who are equally beloved. We had the happiness of attending his little church on Sunday, in which over two-thirds of the inhabitants were present, and we much enjoyed the service.

This little place of worship was consecrated by the Bishop of Exeter four years ago. The Bishop also at the same time held a confirmation, when several were converted to God.

The other residents are a gentleman from Northampton, who farms the island, and his family and workpeople, an agent of Messrs. Lloyd and his family, and the lighthouse people and their families, and a few fisher folk. One is much struck with the happy faces of the people, and the marks of culture and refinement among the children. We held two open-air services, one on Friday and one on Sunday, which were both very blessed times, when many testified to a knowledge of Christ. We would ask your readers to extend their prayers to Lundy Island.

MRS. HATTIE GIBSON HERON, wife of Rev. J. W. Heron, M.D., American Presbyterian missionary at Seoul, Corea, has been sentenced to death by the Corean Government, which has recently made a dead set against all Christian missions in that kingdom. Mrs. Heron was one of the first victims of the new policy. She was arrested on a charge of making converts to Christianity; and, after the semblance of a trial, was actually sentenced to death. But America is diplomatically represented in Corea, and it is not considered likely that the sentence can have been carried out.

SURSUM CORDA.

By Rev. JOSEPH COOK, Boston, U.S.

Christ, the Son of God, is born—
Evermore to men draws near;
Lo! his light brings earth its morn,
Now burns God's Shekinah clear.

As the noon outshines a star,
So Time's noon his glories drown;
He whom prophets saw afar,
He who is Creation's crown.

Sinless He our nature takes,
Perfect God and perfect Man;
His Right Arm our fetters breaks,
In his wounds our peace began.

Rebels Thou dost disenthrall—
Measureless Atonement! White
Raiment hast Thou given for all
Who in holiness delight.

When we Thee as Saviour see
Sin Thou meltest from our souls;
Pardon prompteth loyalty;
Grace guilt's burden from us rolls.

By thy words we stand or fall,
Show us God and show us man;
Thine the Kingdom over all,
Finish what thy Cross began.

OBITUARY.

SIR WILLIAM EWART, M.P.

The death is announced of Sir William Ewart, M.P., of Belfast, which took place in London on the evening of the 1st inst. One of the leading manufacturers of Belfast, Sir William employed daily between five and six thousand hands. He was an Alderman of the city, and occupied the civic chair in 1859—60. Besides being president of several associations, he was a member of the Representative Body of the Episcopal Church, Vice-President of the Protestant Orphan Society, of the Association for the Employment of the Industrious Blind, of the Sailors' Home, and of the Young Men's Christian Association. He was, moreover, honorary secretary of the Belfast church Extension Society, and took a leading part in the erection and endowment of seven churches. He was a man of warm evangelical sympathies, supported every good object, and lived an upright and blameless life. Sir William was born in Belfast, Nov. 22, 1817, and was, therefore, in the 72nd year of his age.

THE FLOWER MISSION of the American Women's Christian Temperance Union, which has blossomed out so wonderfully from the invalid room of Miss Jennie Casseday, of Louisville, Ky., has become a mighty power in prison and reform work. Once every year, on Flower Mission Prison Day, the Flower Missions of every State send out to all state and local prisons, reformatories, and almshouses within their borders, a bouquet for each inmate, with a pretty Scripture card attached. During the last year alone, 89,000 of these fragrant offerings were distributed.

CONSUMPTIVE HOME, ECHUCA.—The number of consumptives in Victoria is constantly being increased, by sufferers from the old country seeking relief in its mild climate. The position of Echuca, with its high elevation and dry atmosphere, specially qualifies it for the residence and cure of persons suffering from pulmonary diseases, and recently a much-needed Home for poor patients in the early stages of the disease was opened there by Mrs. Henry Varley and Mrs. Sergeant. Much local sympathy was shown, and Drs. Sergeant and Smith, who reside at Echuca, generously give their medical services. Already several English sufferers have been admitted into the Home, and although in some cases they were without resources, they have yet received kind Christian attention, while being benefited in health. In a letter to us, Mrs. M. E. Sergeant, hon. director, says: "While Australian friends are thus helping, surely English ones are called upon to share in this work of mercy. It is not a mission to Australians, but to unfortunate English arrivals, many of them coming to the colony in compliance with medical instructions."

WILTON HOUSE, ST. LEONARD'S.

This new House of Rest at St. Leonard's-on-Sea, of which we gave an illustration last week was duly opened on Thursday, August 1. Lord Radstock, Sir Robert Phayre, K.C.B., Rev. W. Haslam, B. W. Bucke, of Lee; J. A. Jamieson, of St. Leonard's, and Archdeacon Phair, of Rupert's Land, were the chief speakers. Mr. C. Russell Hurditch's account of the steps which led to the purchase of this magnificent house, in the best position in St. Leonard's, was full of interest, showing how the good hand of God had been manifest at every step. It has been objected by some that the house and its furnishing are grander than was necessary for Christian workers. But the value of the freehold is already considerably enhanced, and everything inside has been purchased at first cost. To weary workers, whose days and nights in many cases are spent amid squalid surroundings, the refreshment and reinvigoration are doubled by the completeness of the change. We commend this beneficent undertaking to the sympathy and help of all such as are interested in those who, "toiling on, toiling on," do so much more than their own share of work, and sometimes faint under it.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Charles Boyall, of the Evangelisation Society, has just finished a fortnight's mission in a tent, at Great Barton, Suffolk. The meetings were well attended, the tent being crowded on the Sundays, and many professed to find the Saviour.

Bootle and Kirkdale have of late been aroused by open-air and other evangelistic meetings. Many Christian workers put their hearts into the effort, and a large number of people professed to accept Christ as their Saviour. Some who took part in this assault upon the strongholds of sin have taken the holy fire into the various churches to which they belong, and it is hoped that much more fruit will yet appear to the glory of God.

Union Hall Mission.—We are thankful to God for many tokens of blessing in several of the London halls of this Mission. A very blessed work of grace has for some time been going on at Union Hall, and many have been brought to Christ, both adults and children. The same may be said of the work at Queen's-park Hall. The meetings in our three tents are attended by encouraging numbers, and the workers are cheered by constantly witnessing conversions; especially is this so in the town of Brentford. I would ask the earnest prayers of readers of The Christian on behalf of our work.

Robert Bilke.

Abergeldie, Greenhill-park, Harlesden, N.W.

Mr. W. E. Lewis, evangelist, who has for five years been labouring at North Malvern Mission Chapel, has accepted a call to the Pastorate of the Leicester "Gospel Mission."

PARIS AND ITS EXHIBITION is the subject of a Pall Mall Gazette Popular Guide. It is a really splendid sixpenny worth of very readable, entertaining, and "guiding" material for the stranger within Parisian gates.

THE GOSPEL THROUGH THE POST.—La Mission des Lettres Affectueuses, conducted by M. Samuel Porchère, at St. Etienne, Loire, is proving a very successful means of arresting the attention of all classes to the duties of time and the solemnities of eternity. How often has affliction and bereavement been made, in the mercy of God, a stepping-stone to a life of devotion to a Saviour known and loved! Some persons who cannot be approached by those who would speak to them words of warning and comfort, may be reached by letters. The "lettres affectueuses" have been drawn up so as to improve various occasions and incidents in life, and it is hoped that as they become more widely known, they will, by the Divine blessing, prove increasingly useful in the Gospel cause. Many have alreadg borne testimony to good received through this channel, and by means of text cards and envelopes which have also been issued in large numbers, from the little Mission-house at St. Etienne.

Letters to the Editor.

"THE PRESENT CHRISTIAN SABBATH."

Dear Sir,—I heartily endorse the remark of your correspondent, "Theophilus," that the "closer we follow the clear and distinct teaching of God's Word, the safer shall we be." Had he followed this excellent rule, he would not, I think, have written the letter which appears in your issue of July 26. The theory which "Theophilus" propounds in it concerning "the present Christian Sabbath" is not only without foundation in the Scriptures, but is opposed to "the clear and distinct teaching" thereof. That the seventh day which God sanctified at the creation (Gen. ii.) is identical with the Sabbath Israel was commanded to keep is proved by the words of the fourth commandment (Exod. xx. 8—11): "Remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy...the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God...for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the seas and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath-day and hallowed it."

Could anything be plainer? It is here clearly and distinctly stated that the Sabbath which God enjoined the Israelites to keep holy was "the Sabbath of the Lord thy God," and the reason given for their observance of it is that it was on that day the Lord rested, and therefore sanctified and hallowed it.

In conclusion, I would remind your correspondent that nowhere in the Bible is the first day of the week, which we now observe, called "the Christian Sabbath."—Yours very truly,

H. G. Carbon.

Dear Sir,—To admit the truth of the theory advanced by "Theophilus" we must refuse the plain statement of Scripture. In the Gospels we have overwhelming proof that the Sabbath and the Lord's Day are distinct, for example: Matt. xxviii. 1; Mark xvi. 1; Luke xxiii. 56, xxiv. 1; and John xix. 31, xx. 1. Let me point out to "Theophilus" that his view ignores the glorious truth of the new creation.

At the cross of Christ everything connected with the first man and the old creation was for ever wiped out. On the first day of the week Jesus Christ rose from among the dead, the Head of the new creation. "Old things are passed away." We who are "born again" are associated with Him in that new sphere, and to us now "all things are become new." We know no Sabbath as in the old order of things; but we rejoice in the ineffable blessing of the "Lord's Day"—the day of the mighty triumph and transcendent victory of our living, loving Lord. May we know what it is to prize it more deeply, and, like one of old, be "in the Spirit on the Lord's Day."—Yours truly,

Wm. Bramwell Dicke.

9, Cumberland-street, Edinburgh.

[We cannot devote space to a further discussion of this question. Both sides have expressed their views, and it is worthy of remark that the duty and privilege of observing the Lord's Day was as fully acknowledged by "Theophilus" as it is evidently recognised by the writers of the foregoing letters.—Ed.]

MR. GEORGE MULLER is still in India, where he has been preaching and addressing a large number of meetings—calling upon the unconverted to turn unto the Lord, and inciting the Christians to increased love and good works. He stayed in Darjeeling for several weeks, and, while there, was very active. He intends to remain for some time at Simla, where he expects to find a large sphere of service.

MR. AND MRS. DANIEL MATTHEWS, of the Maloga Aboriginal Mission, with Paddy and Jenny Swift, the two aborigines whom they have brought with them from New South Wales, were at the Gospel Hall, Wood Green, N., on Sunday last. They spoke and sang at three meetings during the day. Their evangelistic appeals were with great power; the evening service especially was felt to be a time of blessing, and there was an earnest waiting upon God for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit. The friends were also much interested by Mr. and Mrs. Matthews' narrative of the Lord's work among the Australian blacks. Mr. Matthews has since been at Redcar, Yorkshire. He purposes remaining in England until about the end of October, and will be glad to make arrangements to hold services. He should be addressed to the care of Mr. J. T. Matthews, 72, Cornhill, London, E.C.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 11.—Joshua XX.

Ver. 2.—The appointment of the cities of refuge here narrated was the carrying out of the directions given in fuller detail in Numb. xxxv. 9—34.

Ver. 3.—Mark, both in the passage of Numb., just referred to, as well as in Deut. xix. 4—13, how carefully the distinction is drawn between deliberate murder and unintentional homicide. Those alone who had committed the latter were eligible for refuge in the "cities of refuge," and their being such was determined by the citizens of the city to which each fled, when he stood "before the congregation for judgment." Previous to this, however, he told his story to the elders at the gate, and (4) was admitted provisionally, until his case was fully investigated before the congregation.

Ver. 6.—If he was accepted by the congregation as not a deliberate murderer, he must dwell in the city of refuge until the death of the high priest. The usual explanation of this is that "the atoning death of the Saviour (here) casts its shadow before on the statute book of the law. The high priest... was pre-eminently a type of Christ, and thus the death of each successive high priest pre-signified that death of Christ by which the captives were to be freed, and the remembrance of transgressions made to cease."—S. C.

Ver. 9.—If the sites of these cities be looked at on a map, it will be seen that they were so disposed as to afford three cities of refuge on each side of Jordan about equi-distant from one another, and so within easy access of the north, middle, and south parts of the land. The spiritual lesson of the cities of refuge is to be found in Prov. xviii. 10, and Heb. vi. 18.

MONDAY, AUGUST 12.—Joshua XXI.

Ver. 1.—After the cities of refuge had been provided, those that were to be set apart for the priests and Levites were next allotted to them, according to the Lord's command to Moses (Numb. xxxv. 1—8): first, to provide six cities of refuge, which should be also for the Levites, and, in addition to these, forty-two, making in all forty-eight cities for the Levites.

Ver. 4.—A striking proof is afforded by thirteen cities being appointed to the priests by lot in the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, and Simeon—the tribes nearest to Jerusalem—where their services would be hereafter wanted, that "the whole disposing" of the lot was "of the Lord" (Prov. xvi. 33). He alone could know what city he would hereafter choose "to put his name there" (Deut. xii. 5).

Ver. 41.—As sceptics cavil at the number of these towns provided for Levites and priests, it may be well to note that they "were not the sole possessors of these towns, but simply received the number of dwelling-houses they actually required with meadow land for their cattle in the suburbs, while the rest of the space still belonged to the different tribes."—Keil.

Ver. 43.—These three concluding verses represent generally the state of things about the period of Joshua's death (see his words xxiii. 14). They emphasise the fact that so far as God's promises went, there was no failure on his part to make them good. What failure there was arose solely from Israel's slackness to go and take possession. "It is true the Canaanites were not all exterminated; but those who were left were become so powerless that they could neither attempt nor accomplish anything against Israel, so long as the Israelites adhered faithfully to their God, or so long as Joshua and the elders who were his contemporaries were alive (Judg. ii. 6), because the Lord had overwhelmed them with fear and terror before the Israelites."—Keil. "It is right to distinguish well between the clear unwavering and certain fidelity of God in the fulfilment of his promises, and the weakness and indolence of the people, which caused the blessings of God to slip from their hands."—Calvin.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 13.—Joshua XXII.

Ver. 1—6.—The dismissal of the two and a half tribes to their inheritance beyond Jordan enables Joshua to remind them of the condition on which they held their earthly blessings. "Take diligent heed to the commandment and the law, which Moses the servant of the Lord charged you, to love the Lord your God, and to walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments, and to cleave unto Him, and to serve Him with all your heart and with all your soul." The mention of Moses as the one from whom they had received the law reminds one of Gal. iii. 19, 20, "in the hand of a mediator; now a mediator is not a mediator of one," i.e., it involves two parties, or is conditional. The failure of one party to observe the terms of the covenant nullifies all claim to blessing under it.

Ver. 11.—The words, "and the children of Israel heard say," show the mistake of Israel in acting on mere "hearsay" evidence. An accusation of so serious a nature against any of their brethren as wilful rebellion and disobedience to God's commands (16) should not have been lightly preferred. They should have, before making such a charge, made sure that it was deserved. Many a dispute among Christians productive of alienation of heart and schism has arisen from groundless charges too lightly preferred.

Ver. 22.—The spirited protest of the unjustly accused tribes against the charge brought against them is full of truth and dignity, and quickly dissipates the wrath of Israel. Though this wrath was too hasty, one cannot but admire the zeal of Israel against what they wrongly assumed to be a serious breach of God's commandments. In the end the mistaken charge on the one side, and the satisfactory clearing of themselves on the other, tended to the ultimate brotherly union of both. We can see, however, what a grievous sin it would have been had there been erected any other sacrificial altar in Israel but the one.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 14.—Joshua XXIII.

Ver. 1.—Joshua's anxious solicitude for Israel's future welfare after his approaching death (14) has New Testament parallels in the Apostle Paul's anxiety for the Church of Ephesus "after his departure" (Acts. xx. 29), and in that of the Apostle Peter (2 Pet. i. 13-15), but most of all in our Lord's tender solicitude for his people, as shown in his last interview with his disciples before his death (John xiii.—xvi.), and in his prayer of commendation of them to his Father (John xvii.).

Ver. 3.—We here learn that in the rapid conquest of Canaan, and defeat of her kings, it was not Israel's doing, but "the Lord your God is He that fought for you."

Ver. 5.—What the Lord had done in the past, was to be to them a pledge of what He was ready to do in the future.

Ver. 6.—Their courage was to be shown more in obedience than in fighting, "very courageous to keep and to do all that is written," &c.

Ver. 8.—Mark the contrast between their duty and their privilege to "cleave unto the Lord," and what became their snare (12) to "cleave unto the remnant of these nations." Compare the New Testament parallel (Acts. xi. 23).

Ver. 12, 13.—These verses afford a sad summary and compendium of Israel's future history. Even their last great sin which drew down upon them their present judgment of national destruction and dispersion was not without their "cleaving to other nations" here spoken of. Compare their own words: "We have no king but Cæsar."

Ver. 15, 16.—These two verses seem not only to contain a solemn warning, but a prophetic announcement also of what will be the end of Israel's history, at least under the covenant of works which they had accepted at Sinai. The only hope for Israel's future lies in the covenant of grace of which Jer. xxxi. 31 speaks.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 15.—Joshua XXIV.

As the last chapter gave us Joshua's own last words of warning to Israel, so in this chapter he appears as the mouthpiece of God to convey his message to his people. Hence in ver. 2 he prefaces what follows with, "Thus saith the Lord God of Israel."

Ver. 1.—Israel was solemnly assembled through their representatives to hear God's message; so we read: "They presented themselves before God."

Ver. 2.—We learn from "They served other gods" that Abraham was called out of an idolatrous family.

Ver. 12, 13.—The brief summary of God's dealings with Israel since the call of Abraham is appropriately closed by his reminding them that they owe everything which they now possess to Him: "I have given you a land for which ye did not labour, &c.

Ver. 14.—It is here hinted that during their sojourn in Egypt the children of Israel fell into idolatry. Hence their idolatry at Sinai with the golden calf. See also Acts vii. 42, 43.

Ver. 15.—Joshua here speaks his own determination, for himself and his house, to remain faithful to Jehovah, even if all Israel forsook Him.

Ver. 19.—"Ye cannot serve the Lord" would be better understood if rendered (as often elsewhere) "Ye are not able to serve the Lord," i.e., of yourselves. The words were not intended to discourage them, but to throw them upon God, to seek his strength to serve Him (Ps. cv. 4).

Ver. 21.—In this answer of Israel there was a sad exhibition of self-confidence and want of holy self-distrust.

Ver. 31.—The personal influence of Joshua and of the elders who outlived him preserved Israel for a time from that falling away which appears so continually in their history as recorded in the next book of Judges. So did the personal influence of the Apostles preserve the Church in comparative purity during the first century, but soon the apostasy set in, and the leaven did its work till all was leavened.

THE BOOK OF JUDGES.

Judges is the title given to this book, from its containing the history of those non-regal rulers who governed the Hebrews from the time of Joshua to that of Eli, and whose functions in time of peace consisted chiefly in the administration of justice, although they occasionally led the people in their wars against their public enemies.

The date and authorship of this book are not precisely known. It is certain, however, that it preceeded the second Book of Samuel (cf. ix. 35 with 2 Sam. xi. 21) as well as the conquest of Jerusalem by David (cf. i. 21 with 2 Sam. v. 6).

Its author was in all probability Samuel, the last of the judges (see xix. 1, xxi. 25), and the date of the first part of it is fixed in the reign of Saul, while the five chapters at the close might not be written till after David's establishment as king in Israel (see xviii. 31).

It is a fragmentary history, being a collection of important facts and signal deliverances at different times and in various parts of the land, during the intermediate period of 300 years between Joshua and the establishment of monarchy.

The inspired character of this book is confirmed by allusions to it in many passages of Scripture (cf. iv. 2, vi. 14 with 1 Sam. xii. 9—12; ix. 53 with 2 Sam. xi. 21; vii. 25 with Ps. lxxxiii. 11; v. 4—5 with Ps. vii. 5; xiii. 5, xvi. 17 with Matt. ii. 13—23; Acts xiii. 20; Heb. xi. 32).—Brown and Fausset.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 16.—Judges I.

Whether this book is taken to represent the disorders of the professing Church, or those darker ones which convulse the soul, this chapter is full of holy lessons and instruction. Israel began right by asking counsel of God, and by endeavouring to ascertain his plan (1). If only we would build according to God's pattern, seek the works He has prepared, and war in this spirit, we should be more successful and useful. And there is much beauty in the suggestion that the different tribes of the one Church should help each other in the war (3; Luke v. 7). When shall we learn that the success of one is the success of all (1 Cor. xii. 26)?

(1) Judah's success (4—11).—Judah was to be first, because the strongest tribe, and strength is given for service. To whom much is given, of him much is required. And is it not true that the Lion of the tribe of Judah must ever lead the way? But our strength avails not unless God gives the victory. The fate of the tyrant was acknowledged by himself to be deserved (Jas. ii. 13; Rev. xiii. 10); at the same time it was a barbarous infliction, which shows how vast is the change wrought on the world by the Spirit of Jesus. It was impossible for God to lead men immediately into the gentle manner of the Gospel (Matt. xix. 8).

(2) Caleb's portion (12—15).—Twice over is this incident told (Josh. xv. 13—19). Thus does God love to emphasise the exploits of his people. Kirjath-sepher is the city of books, and was perhaps the university town, or the records of the nations were kept there. Othniel afterwards became a judge (iii. 9). Our Father, like Caleb, loves his children to ask freely for what they want. He gives to all liberally, and upbraideth not. We should argue from the possession of lower gifts to the granting of better ones.

(3) Failure (19—36).—The Lord was with them, or, as the Chaldee version puts it, the Word of the Lord was their helper, i.e., the Lord Himself, the true Captain of the host. But the people did not avail themselves of his help. Either through unbelief or cowardice, or both, Israel failed to expel their foes, and settled down amongst them, laying up for themselves some very bitter experiences. Asher even submitted to the predominance of the Canaanites among whom it dwelt. Ah, how many of us shrink from the cross, and from waging war against inbred sin to the knife? And thus, when we had seemed to be free from Satan's thrall, we are brought again into his captivity. We must give no quarter to sin. We must pursue each evil with relentless severity. We must, by the grace of the Spirit, appropriate the cross of Christ as our lot and destiny, and mortify each unholy passion. We have only to avail ourselves of God's help, and all this is possible.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 17.—Judges II

This was the first of many bitter remonstrances that were to come to Israel. "The messenger Jehovah" must be He of whom the prophet spake (Mal. iii. 1), the Word and Son of God.

(1) There is a recital of the true cause of their failure (1—3).—It was due, not to any failure on God's part, but to a great failure on theirs. They had made a league with the people, and had not extirpated their idols. Was this guilty complicity due to any shame of their allegiance to an unseen God; or was it owing to their love of the sinful orgies which characterised the heathen festivities? We, at least, may learn this solemn lesson, that the Church is no match for the world, so long as it is allied to the world; and that the way of separation is the only path of victory and safety.

(2) The sins and sorrows of Israel (6—15).—What a marvellous relapse was here! How the heart of man abhors the spirituality and purity of God (Jer. ii. 11, 12). But those who turn from God, lay themselves open to bitter sorrows. If your heart is not perfect with God, your best plans will be spoilt by spoilers, and you will be sold as a slave to the flesh.

(3) God's compassion (16—18).—How touching is the account of God's pity (18). Even though we have brought grave sorrows on ourselves by sin, yet will God interpose to avert the full brunt of penalty. God can always find or make deliverers in the most degenerate age of the Church.

(4) The madness of their apostasy (19—23).—After a while God left the people to the results of their own choice, and, as they had permitted the Canaanites, they were allowed to suffer from them, and the discipline which refined them came through the results of the sin from which they were to be set free.

THE LEYSIAN MISSION.

This old-established Mission, formerly called the Whitecross-street Mission, was established by the late Mr. George Vigeon. The workers connected with it are doing a very real work; their chief aim is to raise the people from the depths of sin by telling them the old old story of the Saviour's love, while, at the same time, they minister to their temporal wants.

The Medical Mission, under the superintendence of Dr. S. C. Griffiths, who gives his own services gratuitously, and pays the salaries of an assistant and dispenser, is a means of much good to the souls and bodies of the patients. Gospel services are held by different ladies, each Tuesday and Friday, before the Doctor prescribes for the patients.

The present buildings are inconvenient, and not large enough to carry on efficiently the various branches of work; viz., mothers' meetings, a crèche, clothing club, girls' parlour, educational work and Gospel services, Bands of Hope, and temperance meetings. Mr. F. A. Holman, 23, St. Mary Axe, E.C., or Mrs. Griffiths, 45, Finsbury-square, E.C., will be happy to communicate with friends whose interest is aroused.

THE ABORIGINES OF NEW SOUTH WALES.—Dr. Sergeant, of Echuca, has been appointed medical missionary to the Cumercogunga Mission, and is endeavouring, with the co-operation of his devoted wife, to promote the highest interest of the comparatively small body of people over whom he has thus been placed by the Aborigines Protection Association of New South Wales. The white man has by no means been a true friend to the poor blacks of Australia; every vice has been taught them, and hundreds are sinking to a drunkard's grave. The old people of the tribe are mentally dark and morally degraded, but the children are objects of hope, as they are coming under religious as well as educational influences. For every pound sterling subscribed, the Government of New South Wales grants a subsidy of two pounds. Copies of last year's report may be had from Mrs. M. E. Sergeant, Percy-street, Echuca, Victoria.

SAUL REJECTED BY THE LORD.—1 SAM. XV. 10—23.

GOLDEN TEXT: VER. 23.

ALREADY Saul has been guilty of one act of public disobedience, in consequence of which God has refused to continue the kingdom in his family (xiii. 8—14). And in the opening verses of this chapter another act of disobedience is recorded. The Amalekites, descendants of Esau's grandson, Amalek, were old and cruel enemies of the Israelites. They occupied the southern border of Palestine, and lived chiefly upon the results of their plunder, often obtained with great massacre. Sentence had been pronounced against them long before (Exod. xvii. 14; Deut. xxv. 19), and to Saul was committed the work of executing that sentence. He was to destroy them utterly, for, doubtless, their iniquity was now full, and demanded their entire extermination. But the command was only partially obeyed (comp. 3, 9). And thus the whole character of this expedition was changed. It was not intended to be merely for victory, still less for plunder, but only for justice. Saul's method of carrying it out entirely frustrated this purpose. Not humanity, but pride and covetousness prompted him to spare Agag and the best of the spoil. Hence the severe punishment pronounced upon him in this lesson.

Ver. 10, 11.—Samuel knew of Saul's sin before his return from the battle. He lived in fellowship with God, hence God revealed secrets to him (Ps. xxv. 14; Amos iii. 7). "It repenteth Me" (11).—This does not imply any fickleness of purpose on the part of God (see ver. 29). It means not change of mind, but change of dispensation. Saul had broken the conditions upon which God's favour depended, so God's attitude towards him changes. "Hath not performed my commandments" (11).—God makes no recognition of Saul's partial obedience. This instructs us as to the kind of obedience God will have (Ps. cxix. 6). "It grieved Samuel."—R.V. says: "Samuel was wroth," not against God, but against Saul. As on a former occasion, he sought help in prayer (viii. 6). When a man is displeased his first duty is to pray. Samuel would not meet Saul until he had spent a night with God. He thus obtained firmness and gentleness to perform a difficult and painful task. Every scholar may learn this lesson.

Ver. 12—23.—Saul returned from Amalek, and passed by Carmel—not Mount Carmel, but a city a few miles from Hebron. Here he "set up a place," R.V., a monument (12).—This indicates the spirit of pride in which he had conducted this expedition. He and Samuel met at Gilgal—memorable to both of them (See xii. and xiii. 13—14). Saul saluted him, and said, "I have performed the commandment" (13). This loud profession of obedience is suspicious. It suggests that his own conscience was not quite easy, and that he feared Samuel's reproof. "What meaneth then this bleating?" &c. (14).—The results of his disobedience gave the lie to his profession. No one can ever deny his sin successfully. There is some result of the wrong-doing which will make its voice heard. "Be sure your sin will find you out." (Many illustrations of this, notably, Gehazi, Eugene Aram's Dream.) Saul's excuses for his sin (15, 20, 21) are pitiable; and, like all attempts to excuse sin, they miserably fail. "They have brought"—"the people spared" (15)—"the people took" (21). He would shift the blame from himself to the peoples, as Adam sought to blame Eve (Gen. iii. 12); and as Aaron sought to make the people responsible for the golden calf (Exod. xxxii. 22, 23). This is as contemptible as it is useless. Even if the people urged it, he was guilty in listening to their voice against the command of God (24). It is not in being enticed, but in consenting, that we commit sin (Prov. i. 10). "To sacrifice to the Lord (15, 21).—As though even disobedience for such a motive would be justifiable. How little Saul understood the claims of God! Samuel's message hardly notices Saul's first excuse (16—19). By ignoring it, he condemned it as untrue. Even Saul had not made it sincerely. "When thou wast little," &c. (17).—By this he reproves the pride of Saul. If he had continued to be little in his own sight, how well had it been for Saul! But pride led him to spare Agag in order to grace his triumph; and to set up his monument at Carmel (12). In ver. 18, 19 he contrasts God's command with Saul's disobedience, and shows the real reason why the spoil was spared. "Wherefore didst thou fly upon the spoil?" It was not desire to sacrifice to the Lord, but covetousness which influenced Saul. God knew the eagerness with which he flew upon it. The excuse about sacrificing (21) was adding hypocrisy to disobedience. Sin is never so hateful to God as when covered with the garb of religion. "Hath the Lord as great delight?" &c. (22).—The outward and ceremonial is of no value without the right moral condition. A disobedient man cannot offer an acceptable sacrifice; and if his offering is the result of his disobedience it becomes an abomination. See Hos. vi. 6; Matt. ix. 13, xii. 7. More than once had the Lord to quote these words against the hypocrites of his day. Do not misunderstand them. They do not deny the necessity of sacrifice; for the only way of approach to God is through the sacrifice once offered for sin. But even that sacrifice is of no avail to anyone who loves sin and lives in it. The sacrifice must lead to obedience. "Rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft," &c. (23).—Witchcraft or divination and idolatry are put together. By the one, help is sought from evil spirits; by the other worship is offered to them. God alone is the proper source of help, and the object of worship. Disobedience is equally guilty with these. "Because thou hast rejected," &c. (23).—This was Saul's punishment for his disobedience. Not until this sentence was pronounced did he acknowledge his sin (24), and even then there was no sincerity in his confession. He was concerned, not because of his guilt in the sight of God, but because of his humiliation in the sight of the people (27—30). Henceforth he received no help from Samuel, whose word he had disobeyed (35). Thus God removes from us unused opportunities (Luke xix. 26).

LESSONS.

(1) The danger of man-pleasing.—Saul 'feared the people" (24). He did not dare do right contrary to their wish. Every boy knows the difficulty of saying "No" to the temptation to do as others do. "Dare to stand alone."

(2) The impossibility of hiding sin.—It leaves some mark which is indelible. No excuses can cover it; no mere outward religiousness atone for it.

(3) Painful results of sin.—Saul thought to gain honour and wealth by it. Instead, he was bitterly humiliated, and lost his kingdom. The tempter never shows the full results of a wrong act. Remember Adam and Eve, who thought to be as gods; and Judas, who thought to be enriched.

(4) How the kingdom of God may be lost.—The Gospel of the kingdom is proclaimed to all. But as Saul lost his kingdom by disobedience, so may we lose the kingdom of God.

MISSIONARY INTEREST in AMERICA.

REV. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, D.D., is still in the United States, and (writes Mrs. Guinness) is being graciously prospered in his efforts to help poor Africa. After completing his tour in Ohio with Dr. Ashmore, he travelled west to Kansas, taking Nkoiyo, the Congo youth, with him, and held missionary meetings in the towns of Marion, Peabody, Newton, Arkansas City, Wellington, Wichita, Hutchinson, Florence, Emporia, Aveline, and Topeka. Many noble-hearted western pioneers were led in these meetings to volunteer for missionary work in Africa. A new Mission was founded, bearing the name of "The Soudan Pioneer Mission," and a branch established, with enrolled members, secretary and treasurer, in each town. This work promises to spread over the entire state of Kansas. Arrangements have been made for Mr. Guinness to visit Kansas City, and also to address the assembled secretaries of the Y.M.C.A., in the states of Nebraska and Minnesota. There is an earnest missionary spirit awaking in the West, and a prospect of the utilisation of its pioneer energies in the work of opening the dark Soudan to the light of the Gospel.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bevan entertained a large party, connected with the "mother's meetings" of the Old Ford Mission, at their residence, Ludgrove, Barnet, on Thursday week. During the afternoon, Mrs. Bevan gave some important counsel to the mothers present, on that very important subject, how to retain the affection of the youth of both sexes for their parents and their homes.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE OF CONFIRMED CONSUMPTION.—Mrs. OTTO, of COLCHESTER.

About a year and a half from the time I write (May, 1889), this patient, residing at Myrtle Cottage, Alexandra-road, Colchester, applied to me for advice upon her case. She had been recommended by Captain Henslowe, of Colchester, who has kindly advised and helped others to adopt my treatment in similar cases.

Consumption had been very fatal in the patient's family. She had always been delicate. Had taken cold several months, which brought on severe cough, palpitations, acute pains, wasting of flesh, swellings of the feet and legs, &c., &c.

The acute pains were soon relieved after commencing my treatment. In other respects the improvement in the first month was very slight, but she persevered. After two months she was able to write:—"I feel better. I have spat a little more blood, but am stronger. I have not been able to get out of doors until to-day." In another month—"Better; no return of blood-spitting." Then better, each month, and the end of last year reported a progressive improvement.

And, Captain Henslowe, writing me recently, says:—"Mrs. Otto's health has been wonderfully sustained."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY BIRTHDAY BOOK.

With Beautifully Illuminated Frontispiece.

Presentation Editions: Morocco, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.; rich coloured leather, padded, gilt edges, 4s. 6d.

In this country very few books, except the "Pilgrim's Progress," have been so largely circulated or so widely read as Bogatzky's "Golden Treasury." In addition to the issue of Bogatzky in the ordinary form, the Publishers have also produced an Edition, arranged as a Birthday Book, a form in which it is believed the volume will be welcomed by many. In this "Birthday" Edition four additional pages are introduced at the close of each month's portions. These extra pages are arranged with thirty or thirty-one blank square spaces—one for every day of the month. Each of these squares is adapted for receiving four entries; consequently, the total number of names which can be inscribed in the special pages of the "Birthday" Edition amounts to over fifteen hundred.

I had twenty-five recruits yesterday alone, and a whole squad more are coming this evening! and we are going in for getting EVERY boy in the whole village!—and now, 'Please, miss, mayn't the girls sign?' So I have got to open a girls' branch as well! So the work grows."

"There is no volume equally moderate in price, giving to English readers so full and clear an account of those sepulchral remains of the early Christians which are, indeed, to quote Mr. SCOTT'S sub-title, 'A Vindication of pure and primitive Christianity, and an exposure of the corruptions of Romanism.'"—Christian Leader.

The public have given this book a very hearty reception, as it has now reached its fourth edition. May it reach a thousand more editions! Mr. SCOTT has done his work well. CUCKOO CLOCK and WEATHER HOUSE (COMBINED).

A handsomely carved wood clock, 22in. in height, with ivory hands and figures, strikes the hours and half hours on a powerful wire goog Each time the clock strikes a charming little cuckoo pushes open a door at top of clock, and comes out, and cuckoos the hours and half hours, then retires, and the door closes after it. Above the clock is the Weather House, containing beautifully modelled figures of male and female peasants, 3in. high. The man comes out if about to be wet, and woman if fine We warrant these clocks to go for years, and for time-keeping qualities no better clock can be obtained at any price, while they are ornamental and fit to decorate a palace.

Presentation Edition: Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"A handbook of Evidences of Christianity by which the author found his way out of the deep darkness of doubt into the full light of day, and found that the Bible was the Book of God and Christ the Son of God. May it help many out of Doubting Castle!"

Methodist Times.

"Too often, treatises on the Christian Evidences are so learned and scholastic that they are of use to students only. Here, however, is a book of such a plain, practical, common-sense stamp that it cannot fail to be highly popular."—Footsteps of Truth.

"The whole book is admirable."

Local Preachers' Treasury.

"The author of this little book of Christian evidences says that he was once himself in doubt, and that these chapters are the 'blazed' trees that mark the path by which one man got out of the forest. We think he is justified in hoping that others may try the same route with a like result. . . . Dr. Pierson's style is simple, terse, manly, and full of soul; and he has at his command a singular fertility of illustration. His little book is, we think, likely to be of much value, especially to thoughtful young people."—Literary World.

AUGUST 16, 1889.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

WE hold over until next week the portrait and biographical sketch of Pastor Fliedner, of Madrid, which have given place in this number to the Cape General Mission group.

It is with deep sorrow that we have to announce the death, from fever, of Mr. Johnston, of Mr. F. S. Arnot's party. A telegram, dated August 7, from Benguella, bears the brief message: "Johnston died of fever on arrival to-day; others well." Mr. Johnston was well known and esteemed by many for his work's sake in the North of Ireland. At the farewell meeting at Walthamstow his remarks were based upon Rom. xii. 1. We are sure our readers will unite in sympathy for his beloved relatives, and pray that, if it be our Father's will, the rest of the party may be spared for long and useful service.

The licensing authorities have been generous to those who wish to drink. The parish measures three hundred yards by three hundred yards, there are 4853 people in it, and thirty-three establishments for the sale of intoxicating drinks—about one for every one hundred and forty-seven persons of all ages.

Such is the condition of one of the districts comprised in the operations of the Ladies' Branch of the Manchester and Salford Sanitary Association, as described in their last year's report, which is an interesting record of much good work quietly done among the women of the poor. When it is added that a large proportion of the houses in the district are described as unfit for human habitation, it may be conceived how great are the obstacles in the way of purity, sobriety, and thrift. Although it must be acknowledged that dirty and careless habits are to some extent the cause of wretchedness and squalor, yet it cannot be too often insisted upon that the superabundance of public-houses and the disgraceful state of house property are the two chief factors of the misery in which so many of the poor live. Nor are the remedies far to seek: firstly, popular control of the drink traffic; secondly, the stringent exercise by municipal and other public bodies of their powers, prohibitive, remedial, and punitive, over unscrupulous landlords.

Our readers may remember that some months ago Rev. Benjamin Waugh, in the course of his evidence before the Poor Law Relief Committee, stated his belief that a thousand children were practically murdered in this country every year, in order to obtain the insurance money upon them, and severe strictures have more than once been passed by assize judges upon the action of these societies which, in the words of Mr. Justice Day, enabled persons to "put themselves in a position to make a profit by the death of the children." It is, therefore, worth noting that the Select Committee on Friendly Societies, in the latter part of their Report lately presented to Parliament, recommend that the insurance of children under ten years of age in more than one society should be prohibited and that the maximum amount of insurance should be reduced to £4 for children under five years of age, £6 for those under ten, and £8 for those under sixteen; and also that all collecting societies should be registered. The system of child insurance opens a wide door to neglect and cruelty, and any legislation which will check its abuses will certainly be welcome.

Bad as are the conditions under which work is carried on by wretchedly paid toilers in some of the workshops and sweaters' dens of London, and other towns, they are far surpassed by the scandals of the Russian factory system. In a report by a Russian Government inspector, lately quoted by a weekly contemporary, it is stated that the factories are "rickety dilapidated buildings, fit only to be pulled down": they are cesspools of vice and disease: some are mentioned where children of only eight years old work without a break from six at night to six in the morning; in others children work from twelve at night till noon next day, and in others again for sixteen hours a day: and for all this, in the majority of cases, they are paid no wages at all, being considered as apprentices, and the most that they ever receive is equivalent to three shillings a week. The lot of the average Russian peasant is, however, even worse than that of the factory-worker: ground down by a host of cruel and rapacious officials of all kinds, he is financially ruined, and dying of hunger, his last cow is distrained for taxes, and he is flogged in order to extract more money.

Such abuses as these, however, the inevitable outcome of a tyrannical despotism, will not surprise any who have read the admirable, but often heartrending, articles on Siberia by Mr. Kennan in The Century. A constitutional government, such as will alone lighten the miseries of the Russian labouring classes, must be based upon the Divine and eternal principles of righteousness, and humanity laid down in the Word of God, which must have a free circulation in the country. Still, evidence is not wanting that the light is dawning, for the demand for the Scriptures is stated to be increasing in the Czar's dominions.

Mr. Austen Pember, who writes in the current National Review on "The Religion of our Boys," properly says that the whole subject is of the greatest importance. No one can doubt that just now the sole ideal in life of a large percentage of young men is pleasure. The essay contends that the modern fashionable schoolmaster interprets the wish of a father to go no further at a preparatory school than to make a boy happy, so that English boys are growing up without simplicity, and are attaching a most exaggerated importance to games and every kind of amusement. In higher schools, as the outgrowth of this, there lurks, says the writer, a deadly immorality, which, as in the old Roman Empire, is sapping the life-blood of those who will make the future of the nation. On grounds of health games are essential to a schoolboy, but only in fitting proportion to other duties. Is it too much to ask that congresses and learned associations should give a little of their attention to such a subject?

Mr. Pember argues that it is such truths of religion as were once taught at the mother's knee, before the days when pleasure was made the principal thing, that should be continued afterwards. Abstract doctrines, general knowledge about the Bible and Church matters, do not affect young minds like the undying lessons of the life of Christ. "Christ crucified" and the lives of good men have the highest attraction and power over a boy's nature, and a serious mistake is made when these are pushed out by what is critical, geographical, or historical. The whole matter of what constitutes the best training of our boys urgently calls for deeper and more serious thought than it at present receives.

Dr. W. H. S. Aubrey states in a contemporary that since 1856 England has spent on the army and navy nine hundred millions sterling. The increase in the population since 1850 has been one-third, but the military and naval expenses have more than doubled, and have risen from $14\frac{3}{4}$ to 31 millions. The present outlay is sixty pounds a minute night and day. The manufacture of one 100-ton gun costs £19,000. Every time it is fired the cost is over £200, or nearly as much as an agricultural labourer earns in seven years. The alleged necessity of this colossal outlay among the nations is a very awful one, and, while England glories in her naval and military reviews, the question might usefully be pondered, What does the God of peace and love think of them?

A contemporary, commenting upon the fact that quite recently a poor man was tried at Aveiro, in Portugal, for having refused to take off his cap to a crucifix carried at a funeral, and was sentenced to a year's imprisonment with hard labour, suggests that:—

It would be well to call the attention of Cardinal Manning to the matter, and to urge him to use his influence with the Pope to grant to others the toleration which Romanists are claiming for themselves.

Such a suggestion is somewhat surprising, coming as it does after centuries of Romish persecution have been recorded, and in face of the fact that the very essence of Romanism is intolerance. Changeable in many things, as may best suit her purpose, Rome has in this direction made good her claim to the proud motto of semper eadem.

The Wesleyan Conference closed its sittings in Sheffield last week. As we have followed from week to week the full reports in The Methodist Recorder, our conviction has deepened of the vastness and minute ramifications of those Methodist organisations that have been under close and careful review. The reader must also have been impressed by the combination of so much that was practical with a grandly pervading harmony, which marked the prolonged proceedings. We venture, however, to express a hope that the time will come when these earnest men, who know the people as few others can do, will give aid at their annual meeting in the solving of those great religious and social questions, outside Methodism, which make Christian people anxious. No important ecclesiastical order can safely, or usefully, be self-centred in these days.

Although the Board School system leaves much to be desired in regard to the education of girls, it is gratifying to note that last year twelve thousand more girls than in 1887 were certificated as "proficients" in cookery. It is in this direction, rather than in that of a smattering of useless information, that the education of the children of the working classes should tend, for the public-house can have no more successful opponent than a well-kept home.

Rev. J. Le Maire Shallis, the vicar of Burgess Hill, a few days ago took occasion to congratulate the Congregationalists of that place on the fact that they had succeeded in clearing off the debt upon their chapel. Mr. Shallis expressed his opinion that "debt in any Christian work was a disgrace," and if we do not accept this view without some little qualification, we certainly consider that no such burden ought to be borne by a Christian body a day longer than is necessary. In many cases all that is required is the exercise of energy and self-denial.

We are informed that the statement made in The Daily Telegraph as to the decline of Unitarianism, which we quoted last week, was incorrect, the Essex-street Church having been transferred to the Mall, Kensington. A Unitarian contemporary, after pointing out that the historic centre of the denomination has of late increased rather than diminishing in influence, says:—

> Essex-street Chapel in the last century was the only Unitarian centre in London, while now there are twenty-five places of Unitarian worship in London distinctly called so, and in all probability some hundreds of churches in London where the worship and religious teaching are simply Unitarian without the name.

The latter assertion seems based upon sanguine conjecture. Doubtless there are many Protestant congregations in London which are not evangelical, but at the same time their teaching is not, in the modern sense of the word, Unitarian.

It cannot, of course, be pretended that the London Unitarians of to-day are direct successors of those who worshipped in Essex-street Chapel a century ago. The old Unitarians accepted the Scriptures, although in some particulars they explained them away; but Holy Writ is not regarded as an infallible and sufficient guide to faith and practice by the many Deists who are now numbered in the Unitarian ranks. The writer of the article from which we quoted advises his co-religionists to "keep strictly to Christian lines and to Christian truth," and adds:—

> A word of warning, too, is needed; and it can be given in the words of Christ Himself: "If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered." The churches among us that die, deserve to die; the churches among us that live, are Christian, and will live.

How can the Lord's words thus be appropriated by those who virtually deny the indwelling bond of union with Christ—the person of the Holy Ghost? Certain it is that they can have no real meaning to Unitarians of that type which disregards miracle, and actually repudiates the teaching expressed in the statement of the Apostle that Christ was "delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification."

Rev. John Jones, of the London Missionary Society, late of Maré, writes to us on the need for regular and continuous effort for the maintenance of missionary work abroad. He advocates a weekly as well as annual contribution by those who desire the coming of Christ's kingdom. He truly says:—

> We know the necessity of a weekly contribution for home work. Should there not also be a thought for the heathen at the same time? Our forefathers were heathen, and we should be so now but for the Gospel of Christ. Our immense worldly prosperity is the result of Christianity having permeated our nation. What have we that we have not received? Then, says the Master, "Freely ye have received, freely give."

Appealing to ministers and officers of churches to encourage provision for mission work, Mr. Jones proposes that all members of Christian families should make special offerings, if only a copper, every Sunday morning, and place it in the regular collection in an envelope marked "for the heathen." Those who determine to adopt this excellent suggestion, will have the pleasure of making a very praiseworthy movement in aid of foreign missions more general than it is at present.

On Bank Holiday we met a procession in the East-end conducted by Rev. Mr. Jameson, coadjutor of Rev. Peter Thompson in the Wesleyan East-end Mission. There was no instrumental music, but "All hail the power of Jesu's name" was being sung. The effect upon the mind of the writer was the conviction that there was far more spiritual power in such a procession without than with drums and banners, brasen instruments and tambourines, and that, other things being equal, the instruments do not increase but detract from the effect of such a demonstration, as a witness for Christ, and a testimony to the people.

No one can help but feel the deepest pity for his sinful and criminal sister who lies under sentence of death in Walton Gaol; nor can we do other than sympathise with the desire that her life should be spared. Above all, every Christian will surely pray that the strivings of the Spirit of God may not be unheeded, but may bring her to the feet of Christ and to the throne of grace for pardon, that she may be purged from sin, and delivered from its awful penalties in the world to come.

But the "re-trying of the Maybrick Case," as it is called by the incompetent and irresponsible tribunal of newspaper correspondents and those whom they represent, is the re-trying of trial by judge and jury, of capital punishment, and of much besides. So far as the case itself is concerned, it seems to us that a false issue is being put forward, viz., whether in the body of Mr. Maybrick there was enough arsenic to cause death. This was not the question submitted to the jury, nor the charge on which the prisoner was arraigned. The essence of crime lies in the intention and in the carrying out of that intention. Suppose a man strikes another with intent to kill, and the blow of itself be not sufficient to cause death; but the victim suffers from heart disease; and the terror induced by the attack causes stoppage of the heart's action: is not the man who struck the blow guilty of murder? If poison be given with intent to kill, and the victim die, even though the quantity given be not enough to kill in ordinary cases, but yet, from abnormal conditions in the victim, does kill him, is not that murder?

There is a fear lest the Home Secretary may be influenced unfavourably in his decision as to commuting or carrying out the sentence, by the unreasoning and unjustifiable condemnation of the judge and the jury. We hope it may not be so. But we cannot help feeling that the way in which the agitation has been carried on has very seriously added to the complications of the case.

Mrs. Josephine Butler has written to The Pall Mall Gazette a letter, like herself, Christian, womanly, sympathising, and just, in which she urges with great force that in order to a woman being tried by a jury of her peers, the jury should be at least half composed of women. Yet we are not sure that this would be so much an advantage. In such cases as that instanced by Mrs. Butler, "where a poor young girl is accused of the murder of her newborn child," or in any case where the relations of the sexes are concerned, we do not find that the average woman is more tender to her erring sister than the average man. It is as true of her as of him that > every woe a tear may claim,

> Except an erring sister's shame.

And in the case of the immoral and cruel man, it is as true that "women present him their stainless daughters," as it is that "men of high honour salute him friend." Nevertheless we should heartily endorse Mrs. Butler's plea for women jurors.

The Archbishop of Canterbury and Mr. Henry Irving lately met at a seaside resort when the latter tried to convince his Grace that the employment of children in theatres was on a par with that of choristers in churches; as in both cases the children or their parents were paid for their services. But Mr. Irving did not point out that the primary object of employing children in theatres is not for their own or their parents' benefit but to benefit the employer. Here his case breaks down. Besides, choristers are rarely employed under ten years of age and are not kept up till all hours of the night, six nights a week, like theatre children are.

THE WORLD COMES TO THE CHILD when it is in the April of life, and sows tares. The world comes along again when the child is in the May of life, and sows thistles. Again in the fair June it comes, and sows nux vomica. The church meanwhile folds its hands and waits until the April has gone, and May has gone, and June and July have gone, and then at the close of August gets in earnest and says: "Now, now, we have got a basket of good wheat here, and we must sow it in the fresh young soil, and we shall have a glorious harvest." Will you? No, no! It is too late. You should have sowed in April and in May the good seed of the Kingdom.—Dr. Talmage.

The Same—To-day.

HEB. xiii. 8.

"SAMENESS." What a term of reproach it often made in this restless, changeful, novelty-loving world! What a vision it calls up of dreary monotony, and depressing tediousness, and hopeless lack of interest. And yet it is not difficult to turn the mind to the other side of the picture. What makes eye and heart turn to the mountains in a glorious landscape with a satisfied sense of repose quite different to any feeling called forth by sea, or sky, or river? Is it not their grand and hoary changelessness? What brings the look of rest into the face of the tired wanderer as he once more enters the home he has so long seen only in his dreams? Is it not the feeling expressed in his exclamation, "It is all just the same as ever"? And when the prodigal returns after years of sinful wandering, and finds his mother's heart and his mother's arms as ready to receive him as if he had never left her, is it not the very core of his happiness, the very crown of her love, that he can say, "Mother, you are just the same"?

And so, when the heart is weary, tempest-tossed, worn out with the buffeting waves of this troublesome world, driven hither and thither by changing circumstances, or the failure of human friendship, or the agony of doubt, or the still sharper agony of a rebellious, struggling will—then none but those who have proved it can tell the unutterable peace that falls on the spirit at the thought of "Jesus Christ, the Same—to-day." O blessed sameness! The very thought of that utter changelessness is as a rock in the midst of a stormy sea.

Whate'er may change, in Him no change is seen:
A glorious Sun, that wanes not, nor declines.
Above the clouds and storms He walks serene,
And sweetly on his people's darkness shines.

What a wonderful testimony to his absolute perfection is this instinctive joy in his changelessness. For, if we had ever discovered the slightest flaw in Him, we should shrink from the thought that that flaw was eternal, unchangeable. But He is "Jesus Christ, the Same"—the Anointed One, the Brightness of the Father's glory, the Wonderful Counsellor, the Prince of the kings of the earth. He is all this, "yesterday, and to-day, and for ever."

But if the thought of his infinite and eternal Majesty calms our minds in the din of battle, and strengthens us to face the awful mysteries of sin, and pain, and injustice with the thought, "Christ is the same as ever, and Christ reigns," there is still another aspect of his sameness which brings tenderest balm and healing when we ourselves are wounded, when the pain and injustice have touched us to the quick.

And that is expressed in his human name "this same Jesus." Jesus, who is Himself touched with the feeling of our infirmities, who has Himself tasted the bitterness of exile, and loneliness, and desertion, and bereavement, and calumny, and injustice—injustice in comparison with which the most flagrant injustice of man to man is equity itself—Jesus, who stilled the terror of his faithless disciples, who bore with their ignorance and stupidity, who healed the widowed mother's breaking heart, who sought out the despised outcast (John ix. 35), who touched the loathsome leper, who called his weary disciples apart to rest awhile, and yet instantly relinquished his own hope of rest to teach and feed the needy multitudes—this was Jesus, and He is "the same to-day."

"To-day." It is this word which makes the blessed sameness of our dear Master such strong consolation. To know that He will be the same through all the ages of eternity, as He has been in the past is joy indeed; but that knowledge would have little power to comfort us in the daily toils and trials if it were not that we know He is "the same to-day."

To-day, when we are worn with pain, and so exhausted by suffering as to be unable to think or even to pray, He is the same Jesus who bare our sicknesses, and is touched with the feeling of our infirmities. To-day, when we are sore beset by temptation, and can scarcely see any "way to escape," He is the same Jesus who was in all points tempted like as we are. To-day, when we are wounded by the unkindness and desertion of someone in whom we had trusted, He is the same Jesus who has said: "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." To-day, when some old besetting sin has overcome us, and we are utterly ashamed and disheartened, He is the same Jesus who came to save his people from their sins.

To-day, when the shadow of bereavement is hanging over us, and we fear (oh, with such sickening fear!) to enter into the cloud, He is the same Jesus who wept in sympathy with the bereaved sisters of Bethany. To-day, when the old home is broken up, and we go forth into the wide, empty world, not knowing whither we go, He is the same Jesus who had not where to lay his head. And when the last "To-day" shall dawn, and we enter the valley of the shadow, do we not know that even then He will be the same Jesus who has said, "I will come again and receive you unto Myself"?

"The same to-day." Let us keep this blessed thought ever in our minds as we read of his tender and gracious ways, either during his life on earth or with his people throughout the ages. He who does not disdain to be called the God of Jacob, will surely have compassion and help for any tempted erring soul, however mean and despicable its natural character. He who only rebuked his cowardly disciple with a loving look (Luke xxii. 61) will not turn away from any broken and contrite heart, however grievously or repeatedly it may have fallen. He who stood by his martyred servants, so that before their judges their faces were as those of angels, and amid the stones or the fire they peacefully "fell asleep," will never desert any child of his in extremity. He who has borne with his sleepy, cold-hearted, cowardly Church through eighteen long centuries, will bear with her to the end. And when the glorious consummation arrives, and the last of his jewels is presented faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, will it not be the very keynote of the new song, as the "to-day" of time passes into the "for ever" of eternity, that our Lord Jesus Christ is still "the same"? A. E. N.

PECKHAM-RYE MISSION.—Mr. J. T. Kingsbury has been privileged to preach the Gospel for fifteen years on the Rye, and for six years in a hall that was formerly a stable. The work has been attended by encouraging results, and, in order to accommodate the large numbers that congregate to hear the Gospel, adjoining premises have had to be added to the Hall. At a cost of £50, the place has now been made large enough to hold 300 people. On this effort there is a debt remaining of £20. Mr. Kingsbury's address is 84, Crawthew-grove, Lordship-lane, East Dulwich, S.E.

The Good Tidings of the Reign of God.

IV.—THE WORD OF THE KINGDOM.

"Hear ye therefore the parable of the Sower. When anyone heareth the word of the Kingdom——."

THE parable of the Sower is the first of those wonderful yet simple similitudes, wherein the Great Teacher used every-day facts and experiences to reveal, yet veil, the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven. And as this was the first of our Lord's parables, so it was the introduction to all that followed: "Know ye not this parable? and how shall ye know all the parables?" (Mark iv. 13). This parable is fundamental. It is an elementary exposition of the Gospel. It cannot be restricted to any dispensational interpretation.

In Matthew it prefaces six other parables relating to the Kingdom of Heaven, and the seed is described as "the word of the Kingdom." Mark gives the parable as illustrating "the mystery of the Kingdom of God," but he defines the seed simply as "the word." Indeed, Matthew having once called it "the word of the Kingdom," in the exposition of the seed by the wayside, is content afterwards with the briefer form, and, like Mark, calls it simply "the word."

It is manifest, therefore, that whether it be Matthew or Mark or the other Evangelists, in the Gospels and the Acts, or the Apostles in their Epistles, or John in his Apocalyptic Visions, wherever "the word" is used as synonymous with "the Gospel," it is always to be understood as "the word of the Kingdom." In many cases we find the expression amplified as "the word of God," e.g., "they spake the word of God with boldness": "the word of God increased in Jerusalem" (Acts iv. 31, vi. 2). Here also "the word" is "the word of the Kingdom," and "the word of God" in all such passages stands for "the word of the Kingdom of God."

It will illuminate all such passages to supply the more extended formula, and to understand "the word" or "the word of God" as meaning "the word of the kingdom of God"="the Gospel of the Kingdom"="the Good Tidings of the Reign of God." For example:—

Mark xvi. 20.—"And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word [of the Kingdom] with signs following."

John xii. 48.—"The word [of the Kingdom] which I have spoken the same shall judge him in the last day."

Acts x. 36.—"The word [of the Kingdom] which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ...how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil: for God was with Him."

Remember here that "the word of the Kingdom of God"—i.e., the Reign of God—is always in allusive contrast to the usurpation of the devil, the Prince of this world.

Acts xix. 20.—"So mightily grew the word [of the Kingdom] of God, and prevailed."

Phil. i. 14.—"Many of the brethren in the Lord, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word [of the Kingdom] without fear."

When Saul made havoc of the Church, "they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." What word did they preach? "The word of the Kingdom." For, "when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women" (Acts viii. 4, 12).

When Paul, no longer a persecutor and injurious, charges Timothy in the sight of God and of Christ Jesus, who shall judge the quick and the dead, and by his appearing and his Kingdom, to preach the word: if we ask, "What word?" the answer necessarily is again, "The word of the Kingdom." He ends the introduction of his first Epistle to Timothy with a doxology "to the King eternal, immortal, and invisible," and at its close enforces his charge to Timothy by a reference to God as "the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords"; and he concludes his second Epistle with the remembrance that the Lord stood by him, and strengthened him, that by him the preaching [of the Kingdom] might be fully known; and he is confident that He will preserve him unto his Heavenly Kingdom (1 Tim. i. 17, vi. 15; 2 Tim. iv. 1, 17, 18).

Evidently Paul knew no other word to be testified than "the word of the Kingdom"; no other Gospel for Timothy to preach than the Good Tidings of the Reign of God, which for two whole years, in his own hired house in Rome, he himself had preached with all confidence, no man forbidding him (Acts xxviii. 30, 31).

John the divine bare witness of the word [of the Kingdom] of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ. For this witness he was a prisoner in Patmos; for this witness they were slain whose souls cried from under the altar; for this also were they beheaded, who worshipped not the beast nor his image; neither had received his mark upon their foreheads or in their hands. And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years (Rev. i. 1, 2, 9, vi. 9, xx. 4).

Close study of the four Gospels, of the Acts, Epistles, and Revelation, will show how deeply the writers had drunk into the words of the Lord Jesus (whose "word was with power," because "where the word of a King is there is power"):—"Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a man that is a householder, which bringeth out of his treasure things new and old" (Matt. xiii. 52). For the keynote of the Gospel is, "The Heavens do rule." M.

A METHODIST AT MASS.—The Mayor of Scarborough, Councillor Hutton, accompanied by members and officials of the Corporation, attended High Mass a few days ago, at St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church in the town, on the occasion of the anniversary of the dedication of the edifice. As his worship was about to enter the church, Mr. Somerset Gardner suddenly stepped forward, and protested against the Mayor entering such a building, especially as he was a Wesleyan, and a local preacher. The York Herald reports the incident as "an unseemly exhibition of religious intolerance," but it had the sympathy of many who did not so unexpectedly show it.

THE LEPERS OF INDIA.—Several of the mission nurses of the Church Army are desirous of devoting their lives to the Lepers and to the heathen in India, by seeking to bring them to Christ. They are willing to sacrifice the comforts of home, to live in the humblest fashion abroad, and to face any absolutely necessary danger of contagion. The committee hopes soon to complete arrangements by which these devoted women may minister in a separate home to the, as yet, healthy children of lepers, and thereby with God's blessing preserve them from the fate of their parents, who will, in turn, be visited in hospital with the Gospel message. The cost of outfit, of passage out, of maintenance for two years, and of learning the language would be about £100 each. The hon. sec. of the Church Army is Rev. W. Carlile, 130, Edgware-road, London, W.

THE BRISTOL ORPHAN HOUSES.

The fiftieth annual report of the great Orphan Institution at Ashley Downs, Bristol, has just been published, and forms one of the most interesting of the whole series. We might say it is a worthy jubilee number, only the number of the report does not correspond with the age of the Institution, which has been in existence now fifty-five years. The balance-sheet is a remarkable one, even for this notable work. Friends of the Ashley Down Orphanage are never surprised to find a good balance on the right side, but we do not think such a balance in hand as this sheet shows has ever been recorded before. The amount in hand for the orphan account at the close of the financial year on May 26 last was £9,551 8s. 10¾d. Well may the venerable founder, Mr. George Müller, say, as he does in the present report: "God has not altered. To his honour and glory I founded the Institution; to Him alone I looked for help and support regarding everything; Him I declared to be the Patron of the Institution; and He has never failed me. On Him, and on Him alone, I have relied these fifty-five years, and I have never been confounded."

The selection made in the report from the mass of donations shows the usual interesting variety in the amounts, and in the donors. Two large legacies are recorded, one of £8000, the other £5000. In reference to these, Mr. Müller remarks: "Perhaps one or other of my readers may be inclined to say it is an easy matter to carry on such an Institution while the income is so large. My reply is: (1) How do we obtain these large donations? Do we ask for them? J. W. D., Esq., who left about £8000, was not known to me, even by name; nor E. B., Esq., who left the £5000. (2) We never apply to one single individual, and have acted thus for more than half a century; but ask God alone. We should not consider it unscriptural, far less sinful, to apply to Christian persons for help in carrying on the work of God; but we refrain from it, and I have acted thus for fifty-five years, that, by this mode of carrying on the work of God, I might be instrumental in strengthening the hands of my fellow believers, by showing to them practically the power of prayer and faith, and by showing also how much, in the nineteenth century even, can thus be accomplished. (3) But how do we act when no such large donations come in; when week after week the income is small; when it does not exceed £300, instead of £700, our weekly average expenditure? While I am writing this, for many weeks past our income has been only about one half of our expenditure, and yet we never contract debt or take goods on credit. Under such circumstances we do not send out special appeals to the public, we do not make our wants known even to Christian friends, we do nothing but pray under such circumstances. And what is the result? We may be brought low, very low; it may come even to the last sovereign; but we are always helped in the end."

The affectionate and grateful feeling entertained by former inmates of the Homes finds pleasing expression in kind letters and gifts of various value. Among these we notice one of special interest, under date October 1, to the amount of £158 10s., being a certain proportion of the sum of £800 received as a legacy by one of the orphans who has for more than twenty years resided in the United States. The influence of Mr. Müller's writings is strikingly shown by a letter which accompanied two small gifts. The writer said: "When in Bristol, in 1867, I visited the Orphan Houses and purchased vol. i. of your 'Narrative.' The reading being 'too dry' I put it away amongst other books, where it remained hidden and forgotten. In 1884 I was led to know Jesus as my Saviour. Your volume then became most interesting, and tended very much to strengthen my faith in a prayer-hearing God. I have now your four volumes, and from them I am able to lead others to Jesus, encouraging them to put God's promises to the proof. When, in 1885, I had lost everything, I was enabled to rest upon Matt. vi. 25—34, refusing to be anxious, therefore slept soundly."

Mr. Müller receives with equal gratitude to God, the small as well as the large donations. He says: "We not only value the smallest donations of the poor, but take them also out of the hands of God as the result of our trust in Him." In addition to the amounts sent in for the support of the orphans, which reached the sum of £29,870 17s. 7¾d., Mr. Müller received nearly £9000 for the schools, missionary, Bible, and tract work.

As is well known, the care of the work has for many years rested on Mr. Müller's esteemed coadjutor and son-in-law, Mr. James Wright, a man of truly kindred spirit, who possesses the confidence and affection of all those about him. It is pleasing to see that although the founder has for the past fourteen years been very little at home, yet the vigour of the work is unimpaired. Mr. Müller has nearly completed his eighty-fourth year (his birthday is September 27), but he is still able to travel and preach. He is now in India, busily engaged in addressing congregations day by day, and purposes further to extend his tours in Eastern lands. When Mr. Müller entered upon this stage of his service, he had just reached three-score and ten, a time when many would think themselves entitled to repose. Since then, however, his journeys (with Mrs. Müller) have amounted to one hundred and sixty thousand miles, equal to more than six times round the globe. In spite of difficulties, he intends to persevere in this present line of work, and therein we wish them God-speed. Did space permit we might give many extracts from this extremely valuable report, but our readers will do well to procure the pamphlet and read for themselves. Report reading, as Mr. Müller himself hints, is not generally an attractive occupation, but we can safely say of this report that it is both interesting and edifying.

OBITUARY.

MR. W. H. GREENING, BIRMINGHAM.

The death is announced of Mr. W. H. Greening, who, during a long period of years, has occupied a prominent position in the Metropolis of the Midlands, in connection with Christian work. The Birmingham Daily Post truly says of him: "He was a man of great activity, and the larger part of his work was voluntary. He threw himself into religious and philanthropic work with abundant and self-denying zeal." Mr. Greening was an Evangelical Churchman, and a member of several temperance societies. Earnest in the pursuit of good many will long remember his hearty and constant co-operation in Christian endeavour, whether busy at home or away on holidays. It was while at Aberystwith, where in years gone by he had preached the Gospel out of doors, that he had a paralytic seizure, which almost immediately proved fatal, as for some time he has suffered considerably from illness.

A "MISSION BARN" DESTROYED.—For some years past a barn at Southall, near Hanwell, belonging to Mr. Baxter, has been a centre of much Christian endeavour, and of late has been generously placed at the disposal of the local Railway Mission for a service weekly. Mrs. Skipton, a worker in connection with the Mission, writes: "You will be grieved to hear that the barn has been burnt down; it was on Monday last, just about two hours after the railway-men's meeting had been held in it. The loss to Mr. Baxter is terrible, as the adjoining place contained machinery &c., but his submission to God's will is very touching. His first care seems to have been to see that the Lord's work should not be hindered, and so on the following day he ordered a tent to be erected in which to carry on the meetings."

XXI.—"I WAS A HAPPY BOY THEN."

LADY said to me one day, "What do you ink? I heard a good man say 'Sunday-hools are a necessary evil.'"

"Indeed," I replied; "then the 'good man,' you call him, at least acknowledged that unday-schools are necessary. Let us be con-nt."

"But what did he mean?" asked the lady.

I answered, "Perhaps he meant that parents ught to teach their children at home on Sun-ays, or that children ought to be catechised in he church; but, failing this being done, then unday-schools are necessary."

"No, I am sure," said the lady; "he meant hat Sunday-schools did no good."

"Well," I replied, "there may be something n that; the good they do depends very much pon what is taught, and how it is taught. here are multitudes of people who owe every-hing to the Sunday-school. It is all the Bible-eaching or instruction they ever had, and hany owe their salvation to it. Every teacher f the Sunday-school ought to be a believer—I nean a saved soul; and every such teacher hould aim not merely to impart Gospel teach-ng to his or her scholars, but bring them to God that they may receive forgiveness of sins nd a new heart."

"I am afraid," said the lady, "I never did hat, though I was very particular in looking p my scholars."

"What did you teach the children?" I sked.

She replied, "I taught them Scripture, the atechism, and hymns."

"Then you filled their minds and memories vith Divine truths, hoping that somehow the precious words would find their way into their hearts, and take root there?"

"What else could I do?"

"I am afraid," I replied, "that not only hildren, but many grown-up congregations are reated much in the same way. Christ sends his servants to bring people to Him, but they go ut and deliver a message to those to whom they re sent, and leave it. 'Compel them to come n,' said the Master; but the servant says, 'I old them to come'! Properly speaking, the round ought to be prepared before the seed is own. Very much good teaching is like seed hrown upon unbroken ground; there it emains, or is taken away by the birds of the ir. But even if it remain, it lies dormant in ome crevice, where it cannot grow or do any ood. I have known persons who have said that hey have forgotten all they had learned in heir childhood. The Lord says, the devil took away the seed, lest they should believe and be aved. Others I have known, who have for-otten much that they were taught; but yet omething has remained, which has eventually done good.

"I will tell you of a case which, perhaps, is one of many thousands. There was a wicked, rough, and ignorant man, who lived, I was going to say, a heathen life; but heathen people are for the most part religious, whereas this wicked fellow had not a spark of religion, or knowledge of good things in his head.

"His wife, who was a Christian, came one day to ask me whether I would visit him, as he was very ill. I consented to do so. On the way to the house she told me what a bad man her husband was. I therefore asked her how she came to marry such a man. 'Oh!' she said, 'I was as bad as he when we married, but since then God has changed my heart. From that time my husband has been more wicked and cruel to me than before.'

"On arriving at the house I was shown into the man's room, and soon after, I began to inquire as to his state, and to speak to him concerning his soul. With this he flew into a desperate rage, and said: 'Sir, if I had been a rich man you would not have dared to come to my house and talk to me like this; but, because I am a poor man, you think you may take this liberty, and trample upon me.'

"'Oh, I beg your pardon!' I said. 'I did not mean to insult you by coming to see you.'

"'Come over to me,' said his wife, who was sitting by the fire, and heard her husband's speech. 'Come here and speak to me; I shall be very glad of a few words from you.'

"I rose up and went to the fireside, and there sat down. I spoke loudly enough for the husband to hear, although our conversation was not about him; nor did I refer to his rudeness to me. After a time we happened to commence singing (I do not usually do this, but so it was then):

O for a thousand tongues, to sing
My great Redeemer's praise,
The glories of my God and King,
The triumphs of his grace.

He breaks the power of cancelled sin,
And sets the prisoner free;
His blood can make the foulest clean;
His blood availed for me.

"'Sing that verse over again,' said the sick man, who was by this time sitting up in his bed and listening. We did so, till at last the poor fellow wept as if his heart would break. We went on singing without noticing him. It appeared that this hymn awakened memories which had long been dormant. He had learnt these words when he was a boy in the Sunday-school, he said, with a broken voice. 'When I was a good boy, I used to sing that very hymn; but the devil got hold of me—Oh, them was happy days—I was a happy boy then!'

"I ventured to approach his bed-side once more; and asked him how it was the devil got hold of him.

"He said, 'I feel into the company of other boys, and went along with them. I know'd I was doing wrong when I did it; but for all that I went on, and then, as I say, the devil got hold of me.'

"I said, 'The name of Jesus is a name that devils fall and fly before; Jesus has already conquered the devil.' As my sick friend was listening, I went on to speak more about the hymn we had been singing. I said, 'If the tune, and memory of the words have such an effect upon you, how much more would the power of Jesus touch and hold you! He is called Jesus, because He saves his people from their sins.'

"The poor man was willing now to let me speak to him about his salvation without hindrance. He even consented to my praying with him, and asked me to come again.

"When I returned the following day, he said, 'I see all about it; but you do not know what a terrible sinner I am.'

"'Ah,' I replied, 'but I know what a Saviour Jesus is. He is making you feel your sins, in order that he may forgive them; and this He will do, if you will ask Him.'

"He did ask, and prayed very earnestly.

"I told him of God's readiness to forgive, and assured him of his pardon. The poor man did not attain to joy and liberty that day, but the day following I found him sitting by the fireside, rejoicing in the forgiveness of sin.

"Immediately I entered the room he said, 'Have you forgiven me for my rudeness to you?'

"I replied, 'Oh, do not mention that, I am used to it. Let me rejoice with you.' We did rejoice together, and his wife who had made much prayer for him was beyond herself in praising God.

"I thought that the best thing I could do was to recall the past, and ask him about God's dealings with his soul when he was young.

"'Oh, them was happy days,' he said, 'I often thinks how I promised and intended to be good. My teacher in the Sunday-school used to be so kind to me; but she was grieved at my going off with the other boys. She came after me again and again, and spoke so kindly; but it was all of no use. I often thinks of her, and how much she worried her poor self over me. She's gone to heaven long since, dear soul! I wonder whether she knows about me now!'

"I said, 'Perhaps she heard the angels singing at your conversion.'

"'Do you think she did though?' he said, turning round sharply towards me. 'It would be a comfort to me to think that. However, I'll tell her all about it when we meet. I suppose it won't be long.'"

What a change a few short weeks had made in this man! To God be the glory!

A MACEDONIAN CRY FROM KOLAR.

The Kolar Mission has grown out of the Kolar Orphanage which Miss Louisa H. Anstey set on foot during the time of the great Indian famine. The Mission consists of Orphanages and Homes for boys and girls, an Anglo-Canarese school, a large Christian church in Kolar, and four farm villages, each of which has its small congregation of worshippers, and three have chapels. Aggressive work is carried on by a staff of preachers throughout the district, which is one of the great divisions of the kingdom of Mysore. Industrial work forms an important feature of the Mission, it being considered essential to provide employment for destitute converts from heathenism.

There is a dispensary in connection with the Mission, respecting the very interesting operations of which our readers have, from time to time, been made familiar. Miss Anstey, who has so far carried on the work, has never had adequate assistance, and is at present altogether without European helpers. In "A Macedonian Cry from Kolar," a booklet recently sent to many of her friends, she states the wants of the Mission in detail. These include: A European Director, a man of ability and discernment, able to rule, and full of faith and of the Holy Spirit; Europeans to manage the industrial work, one competent to teach carpentry and other handicrafts, another to superintend the weaving department; trained and certificated teachers for the schools, a matron for the girls' orphanage, and a properly qualified medical missionary. It is advisable that brethren, devoting themselves to the Mission, should most of them be married men, also persons endowed with a readiness to acquire foreign languages.

Miss Anstey's purpose is that the Mission shall continue to be carried on by workers looking only to the Lord for their support. She regrets that she did not make this appeal earlier, but hopes that in the current year, helpers will be sent her from Great Britain. We have received some copies of the "Macedonian Cry," and shall be glad to send one to any of our readers who may feel moved to do something towards meeting the pressing needs of the Mission.

REPORT OF KESWICK CONVENTION.—The price of The Life of Faith, for September, containing full report of the leading addresses, will be 4d., not 2d. as stated in our last issue. (Marshall Bros., 10, Paternoster-row.)

WELSH POOR IN LONDON.—A scheme is being promoted by Mrs. Stuart Rendel and Mrs. Watts Hughes for the benefit of the Welsh poor in London. Special mission services will be established for men and women who have become degraded; a reading-room is advocated for the unemployed; a Welsh servants' registry office is to be founded, and other meetings, including Bible-readings. There will also be a provident club, and a central committee for visiting Welsh sick folk in their homes or in hospitals and workhouses. Any communications may be sent to Mrs. Stuart Rendel, 1, Carlton-gardens, London, S.W.

A Remarkable Colony.

THE following interesting narrative is sent us by Mr. H. Loomis, agent of the American Bible Society in Yokohama :—

In the 17th century a Catholic priest named Ricci discovered a colony of Jews living in the Province of Honan, in the interior of China, and a full account of their history and usages has since been published by the Jesuit missionaries. In the year 1850, a deputation of native priests was sent to them by the Bishop of Hongkong and Dr. Medhurst. Two of the Jews were induced to come to Shanghai and some of their Hebrew manuscripts were obtained.

In the year 1866, Rev. Dr. Martin, of Peking, made a visit to this colony and found in the centre of an open square the only remnants of a synagogue in the shape of a solitary stone, on one side of which was the inscription stating that it had been erected about A.D. 1183, and on the other side was a record of its rebuilding in the time of the Ming dynasty. There was also this further inscription : "With respect to the religion of Israel, we find that our first ancestor was Adam. The founder of the religion was Abraham; then came Moses, who established the law and handed down the sacred writings. During the dynasty of Han (B.C. 200—A.D. 226) this religion entered China. In the year 1164 a synagogue was erected in Kai-feng-fu. Those who attempt to represent God by images or pictures do but vainly occupy themselves with empty forms. Those who honour and obey the sacred writings know the origin of all things ; and eternal reason and the sacred writings mutually sustain each other in testifying whence men derived their being. All those who profess this religion aim at the practice of goodness and avoid the commission of vice."

Thus this silent stone bears testimony to the value and truth of God's revelation to men in the midst of surrounding darkness. It is sad to contemplate, however, that not only has the synagogue gone to destruction but also the worship of God by these remnants of his ancient people has also ceased.

The presence of a foreigner in such a remote place attracted a large crowd, and when Dr. Martin asked if there were any among them who were of the family of Israel, one of them, whose face corroborated his statement, replied "I am one." Another and another stepped forward, until there were representatives of six out of the seven families into which the colony was divided. These confessed with shame and grief that their holy and beautiful house had been demolished by their own hands. It had been for a long time in a ruinous condition; they had no money to make repairs ; they had lost all knowledge of the sacred tongue ; the traditions of their fathers were no longer handed down, and the ritual worship had ceased to be observed.

In this condition they took down the building and sold the timbers and stones to obtain relief for their bodily wants.

Dr. Martin addressed the multitude as they gathered around him, and some of them called upon him subsequently, bringing a copy of the law. Among those who came to see and converse with him were two officials, but in general there were but few of their number who were either rich or honourable. This was owing in part to the prevalence of rebellion in the central province, which continued for thirteen years, and the Jews were the greatest sufferers. Their number was estimated at from three to four hundred. They were unable to trace their tribal pedigree, kept no register, and, after the destruction of their synagogue and discontinuance of the liturgical service, had no common bond of union.

One of them had become a Buddhist priest, and took for his name the term signifying "one who is rooted in the knowledge of the truth." The large tablet which once adorned the entrance to the synagogue had been appropriated by one of the Mohammedan mosques, and some efforts had been made to draw them over to an espousal of that religion.

They differ so little from their Moslem neighbours, that the heathen have never been able to distinguish them by any other circumstance than that of picking out the sinews from the flesh which they eat, in commemoration of Jacob's conflict with the angel. In recent times, for fear of being confounded with the Christians, and thus subjecting themselves to the severe persecutions, they took the name of "Sinew Pickers," from a name first given to them in derision by their heathen neighbours.

One of those who called upon Dr. Martin was the son of the last of their Rabbis, who had died some thirty or forty years before, and with him had perished the last vestige of acquaintance with the sacred tongue. Although they still possessed several copies of the Law and the Prophets, there was no one among them who was able to read a word of Hebrew. With the discontinuance of their worship they no longer took pains to keep their blood pure from intermixture with the Gentiles. Dr. Martin says, "all the sacred usages were neglected, and a few years more will probably put a period to their existence as a distinct people."

As they inquired about the destruction of the holy city and the dispersion of their tribes, and referred to their own decaying condition, Dr. Martin endeavoured to comfort them by pointing to Him who is the hope of Israel. He told them that Christian civilisation, with all its grand results, had sprung from a Jewish root, and the promise to Abraham had been fulfilled, that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed.

The result of that visit was, that one of the most thoughtful and able men of the colony named Gao went to Peking to learn more about Him for whose coming his people had so long waited and prayed. The man found light and peace, and went back to his home to live as a follower of the meek and lowly Saviour.

Not many years passed until this believer in Christ as the true Messiah was on his deathbed, and calling to his side his only son, he told him as his last message to go and learn of that Saviour who had been so precious to him.

The son was a remarkable scholar, and in the literary examinations of that province took such a high rank that he was made an official. Then he went to Nankin, and there found a Christian chapel, where he heard the Gospel most gladly, and after suitable instruction was baptized. Now it is his desire and purpose to go back to his people and become a messenger of life and salvation to them. Those who have met this young convert have been impressed with his fine abilities and zeal; and it is believed that he will be a most efficient labourer in his endeavours to bring back his people to the knowledge and worship of the God of their fathers, as well as the long-looked-for Messiah. Thus in many different lands, and in a variety of ways is God bringing his ancient people to see their errors, and accept of Him who is not only the hope of Israel but of all the earth.

THE WORK IN JAPAN.

God has been pouring out his Spirit in many places in Japan, and especially in Nagoya, which is one of the most important cities in the country and a great stronghold of Buddhism. On account of the increased interest in religious matters, Rev. Mr. Tamura, of Tokyo, was invited to visit Nagoya and assist in special services. The meetings were appointed for every night, and attended with the most encouraging results.

One young man, who was employed in a drug store, which was in the second building from the preaching place, did not like to be seen at a Christian service, so he came secretly to the back of the house where the preaching was going on, and there listened to the Gospel without being seen by either the speaker or hearers.

But so plain and powerful was the presentation of the truth, and so manifest was the presence of God, that this man was then and there convinced of his sins, and went boldly to the front of the building confessing to the preacher his guilt, and his desire of forgiveness. God gave him a sense of his sins being forgiven, and he went away rejoicing. Now he asks the prayers of others that the master of the house, and all his associates, may cease to oppose the light, and come to a knowledge of the truth, as it is in Jesus.

One young Buddhist priest, living in the city, had decided to go to his native village, but was detained on account of some business, and dropped in to hear a Christian sermon. He, too, was touched by the Spirit of God, and led to confess Christ as his Saviour. Then he came to Mr. Tamura, and asked what he should now do, as the giving up of the priesthood would involve the loss of his living. Mr. Tamura told him there was no provision for supporting people in that condition, and asked him if there was not some business which he would be able to engage in, so as to secure a support. He replied that he understood the art of decorating porcelain ware, and could get a living in that way, in case there was some place for him to be employed.

So Mr. Tamura made inquiries, and found one factory where more workmen were needed ; but the head man said that it was customary for the workmen to rest on the 1st and 15th of the month only. Mr. Tamura said that, as the young man was a Christian, he could not work on the Sabbath, and asked if employment could be given in such a case. The head of the factory said he would think over the matter and give a reply the next day. So, on the morrow, word was sent that the observance of the Sabbath would be allowed, and employment given. This was an important concession in a town where heathenism is so strongly intrenched, and felt to be a special favour of God.

The young man then sold his Buddhist robes, and set to work in his new position with such a joy and peace as he had never before known. Mr. Tamura said to him: "Since you have become a follower of Christ, you will have to give up not only the practice, but also the belief in the religion which you once taught." "Oh," said the young man, "that is very easy. I have nothing to abandon in the way of belief, for although I have been a priest for three years, I have had no faith at all in its teachings." May the Lord grant that many more may thus be led into the true way of life and happiness.

MISSION TO JEWS IN SYDNEY.

MR. LEWIS ABRAMOWITCH, Jewish missionary, has been working very faithfully among his brethren in Sydney, since June, 1888, in the earnest and prayerful endeavour to make known to them the love of the Lord Jesus Christ. Under the direction of Rev. R. L. King, vicar of Holy Trinity, assisted by Rev. M. Archdall, he has visited many of the Jews in their homes and has distributed among them tracts and other religious publications, bearing on the great question of the Messiahship of the Lord Jesus.

It was not to be expected that great results would immediately follow the work. Yet there is reason to believe that a spirit of inquiry has been roused in some hearts—inquiry which the gracious and life-giving Spirit of God can, when He pleases, quicken into energy and life. Acting under medical advice, Mr. Abramowitch has been obliged to give up his work for a season. There is, however, reason to hope that with the blessing of God, he will, before long, be enabled to resume his much-loved endeavours to evangelise that people, who are still "beloved for the fathers' sake."

For the Young.

CHILDREN OF SOUTHERN INDIA.

I feel sure that many English children will be interested in hearing of how the Lord is graciously working among the young on the hills in South India. We hold a meeting for native children every Saturday afternoon, for an hour and a half, in a nice large room we have had built in the Pelta. There are over one hundred names of both girls and boys on the books, and an average weekly attendance of about sixty. A great number of these children are heathen, and come to the meetings with the marks of their gods still on their foreheads. The ages vary from fourteen to wee dots of two and three years old. We try to make the meetings as bright as possible, with plenty of singing; and many of the children have learned to sing so nicely, all in Tamil (their native language), such hymns as "There is life for a look," "Will you go?" and many others that have been translated from the English. If you were to go into some of their dark, dirty houses, you would hear them singing the hymns they had learnt at the meetings.

Over forty of these little ones repeat a text by heart every week. Each Saturday every child gets a text, printed in Tamil, with chapter and verse, and all that can repeat the text perfectly get one cash—about half a farthing. Four such texts are exchanged for a Tamil booklet or tract. Some of the children keep their cash and cards in an old match box; others, again, store them in little bags made by their parents. It is a great cause for thankfulness to see so many children learning their texts so nicely, even down to the little ones of three years old. Many, of course, cannot read a word, so they get either their parents or some friend to teach them. Thus the Word of God is spread abroad in the village.

Not long ago, I noticed a little fellow, who had repeated his verse for the first time correctly, say to his companion with much delight: "Look, I have got one cash." I was very sorry for one little boy who had failed to remember his text; he could not get his cash, and so all through the meeting he kept wiping away the tears that would come trickling down his face. At the close of the meeting, we asked all those who would like to go to heaven to hold up their hands. But that little boy did not hold up his hand, so grieved was he at losing his cash. So we said to him: "Surely you want to go to heaven, and see Jesus"; to this, however, he only shook his head. The lesson certainly had a wholesome effect, for the week following, and ever since, he has always repeated his text perfectly.

Many of the children are very poor, and some of the parents as thriftless as they are ignorant The variety of the costumes in which the children appear, is really laughable—they are decked out with cast-off clothing of all sorts; some have on the oldest rags possible. Yet they all come with bright happy little faces, and they do enjoy the meetings, as they often tell us. I have a number of large coloured Scripture cartoons, and one is shown them every week. It is remarkable how well the children remember the pictures, and the lessons taught from them. I heard of a boy five years old who went and told his father all about the "Sower." We had had the picture of the "Sower sowing the word." A little girl who comes to school, though only four year's old, always carries her brother, who is almost as big as herself. It is a very touching sight to see her week by week staggering into the room under this very heavy burden. She is very cheerful over it all, and shows such a smiling face that it would do your hearts good to see her. The other day the children in their eagerness to get out to play overturned this little couple, and on leaving the meeting I saw her sitting by the wayside, with her brother in her lap, tenderly wiping away the tears and dust from his face, quite forgetting that she too had been knocked over in the dust.

When the meeting is over we make the children turn right about face, and march out in order, so as to prevent them overturning one another in their hurry to be the first out. Last week the subject was: "The Good Shepherd," and the picture represented the shepherd going before his sheep, and carrying one little lamb in his arms. On being asked how many of them would like to be Jesus' lambs, all the children held up their hands, and more than one said they would like to be carried in the arms of Jesus. Then we explained to them if they would really belong to Jesus, they must do three things: (1) "Hear his voice"; (2) "know his voice"; (3) "follow Him." Will you, dear young readers of The Christian, join with me in earnest prayer for these dear native children, that God will truly save them, and that while they are young they may truly be bright witnesses for Christ?—Yours in the Master's service, W. H. Stanes.

Toneyville, Yereand, South India.

A SEASIDE SUGGESTION.

Hurrah for the holidays, gladsome and gay!
Hurrah for the dawning of every new day,
Bright with the sunshine, merry with play!

Listen, though, children! all cannot go
Off to seaside like us, you know,
And dig, and paddle, and bathe, and row.

Hundreds of children, weak and in pain,
Lie in our hospitals, longing in vain
Health to enjoy and strength to regain.

What can we do, as daily we take Pleasures and blessings from God, to make
These lives more happy, for Jesus' sake?

Here is a secret. Down on the sand
Scamper together with pail in hand,
Brothers and sisters, a right merry band;

Gather together, of every kind,
All the nice shells you can possibly find,
Pink ones and white ones, mottled and lined.

Go then a-begging to all your friends,
Ask for old match boxes, odds and ends
Of silver paper the grocer sends,

And pictures, the little ones' eyes to delight;
Or, for variety, perhaps you might
Buy a few transfers, pretty and bright.

Then each one try the rest to excel
In covering the boxes neatly and well,
And, having carefully washed each shell,

Pack them all up, and send them to say,
"We've come from children who've been away,
They sent us to make you happy to-day."

Do you want to have joys that are ever new?
Then always try and find something to do
For those who are not quite so happy as you.

SEASIDE SERVICES AT ABERYSTWITH.—Mr. George Bennett, who has in former years proclaimed the Gospel at this Welsh watering-place, has begun a series of meetings which he hopes to continue into September. A goodly number of friends have rallied round him, and persons of mature years as well as children have been led to inquire how they might know their sins were forgiven.

KINDNESS TO ANIMALS.—The Animal World for August contains an article on behalf of the horses, mules, and donkeys, in use at seaside places. It says:—"Many urge the pace of a tired, over-worked animal, when time is really of no consequence, or permit the drivers to whip, poke with sticks, 'snag' at the bridle, and employ various other means equally cruel to keep the jaded creature up to the mark. When at the seaside, and accompanied by children, the donkeys and goats are often in requisition to contribute to their amusement, and save them fatigue. We cannot wonder at the boys to whom the care of such animals is entrusted being rough and thoughtless. Little interest is shown in them, and their life is a very hard one. Small wonder they are unkind to the donkeys, whose lot is but little worse than their own. Instead of encouraging cruelty, let us try, from earliest infancy, to inculcate kindness. A child soon takes pleasure in saving a bit of bread or lump of sugar for his pony or donkey, and it is well to let him exercise a little self-denial for them; he is well repaid, and proud of being able thus to give pleasure."

A PLEA FOR BRAZIL.

After labouring for nearly five years in Brazil, Rev. E. H. Soper's health gave way, and he was forced to seek rest and change at home. The change has done him much good, and he hopes soon to be fit for active service again. He writes to us: "On my return to Brazil, I expect to open work away in the interior of the empire, where there are no other workers at present, and where, in fact, the Gospel has never been preached. I expect to settle down in some small town, and to visit all the towns and villages within a radius of a hundred miles. To do this I shall need mules and many other things. I should also like a tent in which to hold meetings, and a native colporteur to go with me and scatter the Word of God. I would earnestly commend this branch of the work to the sympathy of English Christians.

"Brazil is fully open to the preaching of the Gospel. The first missionaries of the Baptist Missionary Society went to Brazil in 1882; since then five others have joined them in the work. We have Missions established at five important centres. The following statistics were sent in for the year 1888:—Missionaries, native and foreign, 15; preaching stations, 12; baptisms, 40; members, 241. The Empire of Brazil comprises one-fifteenth of the land surface of the globe, and more than three-sevenths of South America. It has an area of 3,000,000 square miles, and some 14,000,000 inhabitants. Millions there have never heard the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Vast provinces, larger than all England, are yet without a single minister of the Gospel. The people are idolatrous, superstitious, and very ignorant; sin and immorality abound.

"I have determined, by the help of God, to consecrate my life to this work. I shall be pleased, while in England, to address meetings, or lecture on Brazil and my work there during the past five years. I have some forty views of Brazil to use with magic lantern, also idols, pictures, images, &c., worshipped in that land. For the next few days my address will be 179, Cattell-road, Small Heath, Birmingham."

GOD'S WORK IN OUR FLEET.

Dear Friends,—I rejoice to be able to tell you of the work for God which is going on in the great fleet lately reviewed by the Emperor of Germany, which has just left Portsmouth for its summer cruise. This fleet is the largest and most powerful ever assembled, numbering 116 war-ships, cruisers, gunboats, and torpedo boats. My workers and myself made it a matter of earnest prayer that we might be enabled to do a great work for God in this fleet, and truly He answered prayer. Without let or hindrance, and even with every assistance, we were able to proceed from ship to ship, to form branches of the Royal Naval Temperance Society, to hold Gospel meetings, to enlist Christian and temperance men to carry on work, and we can rejoicingly say that every ship, gunboat, and torpedo boat carries our workers, and a grand and blessed revival began on board some ships before they left Spithead.

A Christian seaman on board H.M.S. Inflexible, said: "I took your Blue Backs and Ashore and Afloat on the lower deck; all the men seemed asleep, and I began putting them on the mess table, when all at once several roused up, and called out, 'Why, if our mother, Miss Weston, isn't thinking of us, and sending us the Ashore and Afloat, and the dear little Blue Backs! Here mates, lend a hand, have at him.' I'm not a very big man myself and I was fairly carried away in the rush; I didn't know really that they loved these books so much before." We are going to send another consignment to the headquarters of each fleet, and some of Mr. Hastings's anti-infidel books with them.

H.R.H. Prince George of Wales commands one of the torpedo boats. I wrote to him, sending him a little book, and the following letter was written at his command:—"His Royal Highness Prince George of Wales has asked me to reply to the letter that you were good enough to send him yesterday. His Royal Highness begs me to say that the letter having arrived just before he had to proceed to Spithead in his torpedo boat, he was unable either to pay a visit to the Sailors' Rest, or to write himself and tell you so. He bids me say that he is not forgetful of the good work you are doing for the well-being of our seamen and marines, and that he appreciates it very highly. Owing to the press of business connected with the inspection of the fleet, and subsequent manœuvres, he is not in a position to make any promise to pay a visit to the Rest, but he bids me say that you may regard him as a warm sympathiser with the self-denying efforts you are ever making to promote the moral and material interests of the service." I need not say that this royal letter cheered us, but the grand meeting of the Christians of the fleet was, as the blue-jackets said, "like a bit of heaven let down." I sent out an invitation to the fleet for a "Christian Union At-Home," at the Sailors' Rest; just on two hundred blue-jackets and marines attended, with several officers; and the stream of testimony, prayer, and praise never ceased till nearly midnight. It was a blessed time indeed. And then the crowd! 120 men lying on the floor of the reading-room, and hundreds turned away. I am about to build sleeping accommodation for two hundred men, to add to my present block at Portsmouth, and it is none too soon, as we were crowded out long before the advent of the fleet. Some friends, including the leader of the House of Commons, have given liberally. We look to our bountiful God to supply our need.

Yours in his work,

Agnes E. Weston.

AMERICANS IN CONFERENCE.

[From our Special Correspondent.]

Believers' Conferences are rapidly multiplying throughout the country. The oldest and one of the most profitable for direct Bible teaching is the Niagara Meeting for Bible study. The ability of the teachers, the variety of subjects, and the intellectual cast of the audience have kept it from one-sidedness or hobbyism. The Conference just closed marks a steady growth both in numbers and spiritual culture. We were again cheered by the presence of our beloved brother, J. Hudson Taylor, who in his first address told us how the fragrance of last year's Conference followed him around the world. Nowhere could he receive a more cordial Christian welcome. His faithful words last year produced surprising results both in the gifts of money and accession of volunteers for the China Inland Mission.

For the first time we have had the presence of Hon. Captain Moreton, whose radiant face and manly Christian bearing have already made him a great favourite. He addressed the assembly on the Lord's coming, a theme dear to his heart, and ever enjoyed by the Niagara Conference. Captain Moreton fulfils a pastoral ministry in the city of Hamilton, Canada, while in evangelistic labours he is yet more abundant. Miss Macpherson was also on the grounds. She addressed the woman's missionary meeting with her wonted vigour. Miss Campbell, of the C.I.M., another English visitor, spoke tender, impressive words concerning China's vast demands. Mrs. Wallace (née Miss Bilborough) with her consecrated husband, co-workers with Mr. Quarrier, helped to enrich this communion of saints. The leading teachers were Brookes, Erdman, Lowe, Marvin, Munhall, Needham, Norton, Parsons, Pierson, &c.

Pastors, evangelists, missionaries, students, and other labourers are now parting one from another, as they return to their fields, or to seek the quiet of a well-earned vacation on the mountain or by the sea. Besides the many summer schools, Chataquan and otherwise, and denominational camp meetings, east, west, north, and south, three more important Bible Conferences must be mentioned—at Ocean Grove, at Northfield, and at Crescent Beach. These Conferences are for refreshment and stimulation, but specially of late years are they becoming a necessity for the defence of the Gospel. Addresses on the Inspiration of the Bible have been more frequent than on any other topic. I know of nothing now in the country so mighty a defence against the hosts of sceptical critics who assault the foundations of our faith as the combined, unwavering testimony to the Infallibility of Holy Scripture given with emphatic utterances at these Conferences.

The second annual Bible Conference of Ocean Grove, New Jersey, has just closed its sessions. It was in point of numbers and spiritual results a most fruitful season. Ocean Grove is the great Methodist camp ground, where thousands annually congregate during the summer months. The Camp Association Committee gave the free use of Pavilion and Temple to Dr. L. W. Munhall, the originator and organiser of the Bible Conference. Under his painstaking administration every detail had been anticipated. The addresses were given chiefly by the teachers who have been identified with the Niagara Believers' Meeting. On Sunday morning four thousand people, nearly all of whom by education and denominational affiliation were post-millennialists, listened with earnest and devout attention to Dr. Munhall's masterly presentation of our Lord's personal and pre-millennial coming. With great tenderness and forcible Scriptural persuasion he pointed out the many advantages of this most potential hope, when once it possesses heart and brain. Doubtless, this address will mark a new era in the life and experience of many a saint who already loved the Lord, but who henceforth will also love his appearing and kingdom. Never before in the history of this popular camp had a lecture been given specifically on this subject.

Other themes were presented by the different speakers, viz., The Atonement, Inspiration, Believers' Possessions in Christ, the Seven Mysteries, What to Preach, the Holy Spirit, Hints for Bible Study, &c.

The final service of this Conference was a scene of unusual excitement. The large audience had been addressed by Messrs Erdman, Moorhead, Needham, and Munhall, after which testimonies were given by men and women who had received special benefit from the doctrines presented, and the truths expounded. A venerable Methodist minister, Rev. William P. Corbitt, the spiritual father of Dr. Talmage, testified that during the fifty years of his ministry he had attended camp-meetings, conventions, associations, and various other notable gatherings, but never before witnessed the sight which most impressed him throughout all the sessions of this Bible Conference, viz., the hundreds of men and women who had been assiduously taking notes of Scripture exposition for their own future study. The old man's voice quavered with emotion while he praised God, who had permitted him to live that he might witness this honour and recognition of God's Word. Had our surprised friend attended other Bible Conferences, now rapidly multiplying throughout the States, he would rejoice with ten-fold more joy.

During the singing of the farewell hymn,

> Blest be the tie that binds,
> Our hearts in Christian love,

Methodists, Presbyterians, and Baptists embraced each other on the platform, while the thousands in the audience waved their handkerchiefs in token of goodly fellowship. It was an eventful hour of laughter, and of tears; of secret joy, and of loud "amens"; an unusual, but solemn ending to the six days of Bible study and Bible teaching on the Jersey cost.

THE PHONOGRAPH is a sound writer. By a simple but marvellous mechanism the air waves are engraved upon a leaf of foil. Once caught and chained to that fragile page, sound is a prisoner for ever. Edison, the inventor of the phonograph, possesses a page of foil by which he can summon back to human ears the very tones of the great American preacher, Henry Ward Beecher. The atmosphere is the foil leaf upon which God's phonograph instantly records every sound; not a beast's roar, or a bird's song, or an insect's trumpet has been unrecorded; and every idle word that we have ever spoken is there to come back and back on us for ever. Do we not need the hand of Omnipotent Love to neutralise and save?—The Christian Treasury.

A CHURCH FOR THE INDIANS.—A missionary of the C.M.S., who is about returning to a work in which he has been engaged for the last twenty-five years, among the Red Indians in Rupert's Land, N.W. America, is most anxious, on his return, to erect two small churches in a portion of his very large district in which there has never been a church, and thus to give his Christian Indians the great boon of meeting for worship in little places of prayer specially set apart for the service of God. Hitherto they have had to meet for worship in small houses, in which the inmates carry on the usual routine of cooking, eating, &c., and he finds it hard to preach, and harder still to give the Lord's Supper in those little places, where he is frequently disturbed by the heathen wanting to speak, and other interruptions. This will afford an opportunity to some of the Lord's people of conferring a great blessing on these poor Indians, many of whom have never seen a church, and who have begged their missionary to bring their need before the "praying people."

Gospel in Tents.

The Evangelistic Mission was enabled to make an early start this year with its summer work in tents, on account of the exceptionally fine weather at the commencement of the season, and a good beginning was made in a tent being first pitched at Syresham, where meetings were commenced on June 2 and continued until the 9th, when the tent was removed to Brackley, the scene of former happy and successful labours. Much cause for thankfulness was found in connection with the meetings. From this place the evangelists moved on with their canvas tabernacle to Farthinghoe, Hanwell, and Shennington, in the last of which services are now being held daily. A good work is also being done in many parts of the places visited since June being Sutton and Littleport. The tent has been frequently packed with people, and numbers standing outside. Gipsy Smith and his wife, from Cambridge, spent a fortnight at Littleport, and much blessing was witnessed. On Sunday July 7 over two hundred remained to the after-meeting. At services were commenced on June 5, and continued until the end of July. The work there laboured under certain disadvantages, but in spite of these there were tokens of spiritual blessing. Another tent was pitched at Upton, E., and here also good congregations were gathered, especially on Sundays. The services were conducted by Mr. William Grove, and several persons professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. At a month's services were held during July, and in this place attended with marked success. The meetings were marked by much interest, manifest in a hearty co-operation of the Christians belonging to various denominations and a ready attention on the part of the people generally. A young lady who has a large class of young men (several of whom were brought to the Lord during the meetings in the iron room) rendered valuable service by playing the instrument, with the members of her class round her, who formed quite a male choir. Some of these young fellows arranged to sleep in the tent, two each night, in order to guard it. A converted police sergeant showed much sympathy and practical kindness by looking in during the night to see if all was going well. Several persons appear to have been moved by the word. One young man of twenty years, who was converted one evening, went home and told his mother. She came the following evening, and professed Christ.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE,

CANTERBURY

was also visited, and services held during July, the tent being pitched on a site granted by the town authorities. The attendances were fair, and considerable interest was manifested.

At Camden Town a tent was pitched near the Canal, for about six weeks, with some degree of encouragement, and a fortnight's special mission is now being conducted by William Grove.

SOUTH WALES.

A large tent was lent to Lady Somerset for services at Brynmawr, South Wales, where large numbers of miners and others attended, the marquee being well filled on week-nights and crowded on Sundays, large numbers standing around. It is believed that many souls have been brought to the Lord, both there and in the after-meetings held in the neighbouring chapel. The tent was then removed to Abertillery, and afterwards to Cardiff, where Mr. Edward Hurditch began a fortnight's mission on the 7th inst.

INCIDENTS OF THE WORK.

An old person taking part in a prayer meeting said, "Lord, we have often read the Bible and not understood it; but now we thank Thee we've begun to understand it a bit."

One evangelist writes: "Three or four cases of direct spiritual blessing came before our notice, for which we thank God. One was that of a young man who only attended the last meeting. Previous to the prayer-meeting, an invitation was given to all to stay behind who were concerned about their souls. This young man, though concerned (as he afterwards confessed), was leaving with a great many more, when his eye caught the words, 'Eternity, where will you spend it?' which were hung close by the door, and at which he was taken aback. Returning at once to his seat, he buried his face between his hands and knees; and when we spoke to him his first words were, 'How can I be saved?' to which inquiry we knew of only one answer, namely, 'Look to Jesus,' and so we gave it, and he found it all-sufficient.

Another evangelist writes on May 15:—"At Hanwell I met with an interesting case of conversion. Eighteen months ago, when visiting there I was told of an old man whom they said was dying; and when I said I would call to see him my informant said it would be very unlikely I should, as his wife was not a Christian, and was manifestly opposed to anything of the sort. However, I went, and, after some time of persuading, I obtained permission to go upstairs—his wife all the time remaining downstairs. The old man soon began to weep bitterly as I spoke to him of spiritual things, and expressed his desire to be saved. And as he seemed so distressed and confused I thought it well to leave with him a single text of Scripture (and look to the Lord to fix it upon his mind) rather than many, which he might probably forget. The Scripture was this—'Whosoever believeth in Christ shall not perish, but have everlasting life.' I also left him the little book entitled 'The Secret of Peace.' Never from that time until last Friday had I seen him, his wife, when I called, refusing me admission. Last Friday, however, he himself came to the door, and, asking me in, repeated the text which I had previously left with him, and said that by it and the little book (which he had since read through three times) he had found peace."

THE GOSPEL IN BELGIUM.—The fiftieth anniversary of the Synod of the Union of Evangelical Churches was recently celebrated. Delegates attended from Holland, France, Germany, Switzerland, and England, but though there was diversity of nationality and language, there was grand unity of spirit and purpose. From all parts of Belgium witness was borne of the steady progress of Christian work. In many cases the churches have had a glorious history, and it was delightful to learn that, in the place of persecution and martyrdom, there is to-day a spiritual life and power which is exerting a widespread influence.

AMONG THE FLEMINGS.—During the early summer months the mission cause is advocated with joyful earnestness at large open-air meetings throughout Holland. The Flemings in Zeeland and Flanders have this year been enabled to join in the movement, thanks to the kindly energy of several Belgian pastors. During these all-day missionary meetings, the topic is one—the evangelisation of the world. This year the practical work of missions has been ably discussed by speakers of experience, and conference upon the Lord's work has proved a grand bond of visible union among Christians of diverse shades of ecclesiastical thought.

YOUNG MEN OF BELGIUM.—The thirty-first general meeting of the Alliance of the Young Men's Christian Association of Belgium was recently held at Nessonvaux, half way between Liege and Verviers. Cheering progress was reported in point of spiritual life, as well as membership. Among young men in the army a work has been done greatly exceeding the expectations entertained when, a few years ago, a special committee was appointed to attend to this special departments. Efforts are being made at the present time to obtain the abrogation of those regulations which require Protestant soldiers to attend Roman Catholic public worship.

THE PARIS EXHIBITION.

Accompanied by a devoted lady, I have lately been visiting various restaurants outside the Exhibition. We had a good supply in our bags of New Testaments in French, Gospel portions, Hebrew Psalms, and the Epistle to the Hebrews in the Hebrew tongue; also tracts, Bibles, and New Testaments, in Arabic.

We found a ready access, and a willingness to receive these "leaves of the Tree of Life" that filled us with joy. We held conversation with each person to whom we gave tracts, and told them of Jesus as the only Saviour. One man, a keeper of an Arab restaurant, said he knew us, that we belonged to the American Mission, and offered on Sundays to permit a Christian Arab, whom we had found, to read the Bible in Arabic, and explain it to the Arabs who frequented the restaurant. We thanked him much, and appointed four o'clock on Sunday afternoons.

We gave about fifty New Testaments in French to the coachmen who were outside waiting for their masters, and held conversations respecting the contents of the four Gospels with these men, sometimes reading portions to them. Nearly all gratefully accepted the gift.

There are many Jews keeping small shops around the building; to these we talked of Jesus as the true Messiah, and pointed out the Psalms which were prophetical of Christ.

Many other nationalities are to be found in the neighbourhood, and a special missionary might be employed to distribute tracts to these. The Spanish people employed in the bull-fights were the most difficult, utterly refusing to accept any "Protestant" tracts or books from us.

Encouraged by our success outside, we determined to try and do something for the Lord inside the Exhibition. Taking the French colonies on the Esplanade des Invalides, we were able to distribute the whole of our Arab tracts to Egyptians and Turks; also a Bible in Arabic to three fine sons of the desert, who promised to lend it to each other to read.

We then went to the "Canaque Village," of "New Caledonia," and found Robert and Alice, two native Christians, formerly cannibals and pagans, but now believers in Jesus. They had been much persecuted by their companions, who had stolen their Bibles. We gave them New Testaments, exhorting them to be faithful to Christ. They speak English and a little French.

We next found four Chinese weaving a carpet, and gave each one a volume in Chinese (the whole Bible in four volumes), asking them to lend the volumes to the others, so that all might read the blessed Book; much surprised and pleased, they gave the promise.

In the "Algerian Village" we found some Protestants, who had emigrated from the Vaudois Alps to Algeria. They gave the names of pastors and the churches they attended on Sundays in Paris. We urged them not to buy or sell on the Lord's Day, and they regretted that the Exhibition was open on Sunday, but said they must be there.

The "Salle des Conférences," 31, Avenue Rapp, opposite Porte Rapp (the main entrance to the Exhibition), is well filled every evening; some 250 to 300 people gather from eight to nine and from nine to ten to join us in the "cantiques" selected by Rev. Dr. McAll, and to listen to the earnest, brief, and telling addresses given by the various "orateurs," as the French style them, of the McAll Mission.

W. J. L.

CHARLES SNELL, twenty years pastoral evangelist, of the Congregational Church, Mayfield, owing to circumstances outside his own wishes, or those of the people among whom he has so long laboured, seeks a similar sphere of work in connection with any Christian community in sympathy with the spirit and aims of The Christian.

Dr. Horatius Bonar's Last Hymn.

ERIN'S OLD SONG OF PEACE.

O'ER the green hills of Erin
The old winds wander on,
In calm or storm still singing
The song of ages gone:
Sweetly that song is swelling,
In strains all soft and low,
The hymn of holier ages,
The psalm of long ago—
Peace, peace, from God to men,
Goodwill, goodwill. Amen!

Through the green vales of Erin
Pours the glad lay of love—
The love that passeth knowledge,
Descending from above:
The love of Him who bought us,
And sought us in our sin;
The long-shut gate who opens,
And bids us enter in.
Peace, peace, from God to men,
Goodwill, goodwill. Amen!

Through the blue skies of Erin,
The mighty melody
Steals, with its glorious tidings
Of all things true and free;
Of chains for ever broken,
Of life and freedom won;
The sighs of exile ended,
Captivity undone.
Peace, peace, from God to men,
Goodwill, goodwill. Amen!

Bright hills of ancient Erin,
Grow brighter, balmier still!
And with your mellow music
The listening valleys fill—
The heaven-begotten music,
Whose cadences are peace,
Whose chimes of soothing sweetness
Shall never, never cease.
Peace, peace, from God to men,
Goodwill, goodwill. Amen!

Fair peaks of emerald Erin,
See Scotland's glens afar,
Gleaming across the ocean,
Beneath the same dear star!
One star o'er both is gleaming,
One hope to both is given,
One love o'er both is bending—
The pardoning love of heaven!
Peace, peace, from God to men,
Goodwill, goodwill. Amen!

They greet each other gladly,
These island-sisters fair;
And with each other freely
The heavenly tidings share.
True daughters of the ocean
Each clasps the other's hand,
To give and take the welcome
Of the one Fatherland.
Peace, peace, from God to men,
Goodwill, goodwill. Amen!

Though Tara's harp lies broken,
And Tara's halls are dumb,
Though Tara's minstrel-voices
Are silent as the tomb;
A sweeter harp is swelling
Through Erin's pensive skies,
And truer bards are chanting
The song that never dies:
Peace, peace, from God to men,
Goodwill, goodwill. Amen!

Round the old manger-cradle
We gather hand in hand;
Beneath one Cross we shelter;
Upon one Rock we stand:

One holy faith is knitting
The kindred West and East;
One Christ the blessed centre;
One Table for our Feast.
Peace, peace, from God to men,
Goodwill, goodwill. Amen;

One Pilot through the breakers,
One port to all is given;
One love our hope and refuge,
The boundless love of Heaven!
'Tis love to man the sinner,
Free love to earth undone;
The love that knows no quenching—
The love of God's dear Son.
Peace, peace, from God to men,
Goodwill, goodwill. Amen!

One everlasting Gospel
Shines out before our eyes;
One Temple and one Altar.
One perfect Sacrifice!
O sons of men sore-burdened
With sin's oppressive load,
Of Erin and of Scotland,
"Behold the Lamb of God!"
Peace, peace, from God to men,
Goodwill, goodwill. Amen!

Good-will and Peace.

Requests for Prayer.—For blessing on special services, conducted by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Newent, Gloucestershire, on Sunday Aug. 18; also for services at Portishead, near Bristol, on August 24, 25, and 26; and at Sherborne Mission-hall, Gloucester, to commence Sept. 1.——For blessing on special Gospel services which are being conducted by Mr. Herbert Veasey, in a tent at Forest Gate.——That God will be pleased to reveal his will to a young man who feels much concerned about going to Africa as a missionary.

Manchester.—In the Town Hall, August 8, Miss Robinson, "the soldiers' friend," gave a very interesting account of her work at Portsmouth. She said the publicans there regarded the Soldiers' Home as their natural enemy; it robbed them of customers. She wore a blue ribbon. Some of the instances she gave incidentally put in a strong light the evils of drink.

Admiral Coligny.—The unveiling, recently, of the statue to this celebrated martyr of St. Bartholomew's Day was an occasion well improved by the Protestants of Paris. Situated outside the Temple of the Oratoire du Louvre, in the words of Le Christianisme, the monument bears witness to the courage, the patriotism, and the faith of the great Huguenot of a past time; and in addition to being a work of art, it is a powerful exhortation to the Huguenots of to-day. M. Bersier, the prime mover in the enterprise, delivered an impressive address, which was afterwards published in the most influential organs of public opinion in France.

THE CAPE GENERAL MISSION,

Farewell to Mr. and Mrs. W. Spencer Walton and Party.

WE this week present our readers with a portrait group of the first party of labourers in connection with the Cape General Mission. The comprehensive character and hopeful prospects of this organisation have more than once been described in our columns. Therefore, we need only say now on these heads that the Mission is to all classes of the community, regardless of race or rank, and that it has been founded to meet a very pressing spiritual requirement in the Colony. The director is Mr. W. Spencer Walton, and the president, Rev. Andrew Murray, the well-known author of "Abide in Christ."

Mr. Spencer Walton is well known to many of our readers. He first saw himself a sinner in the sight of God in the summer of 1871, and shortly afterwards found peace in the finished work of Christ. An earnest desire for the salvation of souls then took possession of his heart, and for some time he worked with his brother, Mr. Elliot Walton, until the latter founded and directed the Railway Mission. Having engaged in slum work in its varied branches, our friend put his hand to more general labour. In 1880, through the preaching of Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, and attending some meetings of the Salvation Army, he realised as never before the life of faith in Christ. This affected his entire religious experience. A few months later, while on a visit to the Blackdown Hills, he had his first call to the foreign field, but business cares kept him from responding thereto. Being led soon afterwards to give his whole time to Gospel work, he joined the Church Parochial Mission Society, and laboured therewith for two years. His second mission for that body led to a remarkable awakening in the city of Dublin. Entering then upon work wherever doors might open, he found much to do in holding missions all over the United Kingdom. He also convened annual conferences in large centres, and these proved seasons of blessing to members of all sections of the Church of Christ. One of these, in 1887, was attended by Mrs. Osborn, of Capetown, of whose good work he had often heard. What he then heard came to him as a call to go to the Cape, and his pioneer visit to that colony last year is still fresh in the minds of our readers. One result of the visit was the establishment of the Cape General Mission, which, with the best wishes and prayers of his friends, he now goes out to superintend.

Mrs. Spencer Walton, formerly Miss Dixon, of Eccles, is the spiritual child of Rev. Charles Fox, and one who owes much to the Keswick Conventions. Her experience as a Christian worker has been gained at Manchester. It is hoped that in November next Mr. Walton's sister, Miss Edith Walton, will join the party. She was brought to Christ through the testimony of Dr. Cronin, of Clapham, and will find in South Africa a good sphere for the hospital training which she has had.

Mr. Michael Coates will probably work at the Goldfields. He was converted under the preaching of Rev. J. F. B. Tinling, in 1883. Not many months later he gave himself to the Lord for mission work, but there were difficulties. Confirmed in his purpose at a missionary Conference held in Sunderland, he earnestly besought the Lord

1. Mr. Daniel Jackson, Railway Missionary in connection with Cape General and Railway Mission. 2 Mr Dudley Kidd, of Blackheath.
3 Mr. Michael Coates, of Sunderland. 4. Mr. A. Walklett, of Harley College. 5. Mr. Wilfred Malcolmson, of Belfast.
6. Mrs. W. Spencer Walton. 7. Mr. W. Spencer Walton (Director).

on the matter, and now has the joy of seeing all obstacles removed.

Mr. Daniel Jackson, who will do railway mission work, was born at Brampton, near Chesterfield, and early left an orphan. After much moving from place to place, he joined the Coldstream Guards, and lived a very godless life. On the occasion of the opening of the Soldiers' Institute, Buckingham Palace-road, Chelsea, he heard of the love of God for lost sinners, and, going to the barracks, he confessed his sins, and obtained peace in believing. For the past seven years he has been seeking out wanderers from God, as Scripture-reader and by other ways, and he looks forward to a career of much usefulness in South Africa.

Mr. Dudley Kidd is a son of the celebrated London physician. He was brought to the Lord some eleven years ago, through the preaching of Mr. Spencer Walton. He was at the University when Mr. Moody visited Cambridge, and worked hard on that memorable occasion. Some three years ago he received very definite blessing through the ministrations of Rev. E. W. Moore, of Wimbledon. He has already visited the Cape, and knows its great needs. Mr. Kidd has studied medicine at Guy's Hospital, as well as the University.

Mr. A. E. Walklett was brought up under Christian influences. In course of time he tasted the pleasures of life, and discovered their unsatisfying character. Realising his true position, he "came to Jesus," and was delivered from his sins and made happy in Him. He has had the advantage of training in Dr. Guinness's well-known institution at Bow.

Mr. Wilfred Malcolmson was brought up among the Friends, but long withstood the entreaties of those who desired his highest good. The Lord claimed him two years ago while in Australia, and the joy of salvation led him to tell others of the Saviour. He held missions in various parts of the colony, and his endeavours were much blessed to himself and those with whom he came into contact. Returning to England, he responded in January last to the call to join the Cape General Mission, relying upon God for strength and needed grace.

Meetings to bid the missionaries farewell were held on Monday last at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and on Wednesday at Exeter Hall. The former meeting was presided over by Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, who expressed a fervent hope that the Mission would prove a great blessing to the Cape, and all the region round about. There was a large congregation, and the beloved pastor of the Tabernacle said a few plain words in the hope of finding some fishers of men in the pews before him. I trust, he said, that meetings such as this will be the means of leading many of our young people to dedicate themselves to the cause of God. Some may find their sphere abroad, and have to learn a language. Well, you can do that. You would do well, I think, on dedicating yourselves to the Lord, to begin at once to make yourselves ready against the time when you are called to go somewhere. Have great faith in what God can do with you, but not so much as to neglect trying to improve yourselves. Believe it is part of God's purpose that you should be as fully equipped as possible.

Mr. Walton followed with a brief account of the Mission in its origin and purpose. He dwelt upon the remarkable readiness there is in South Africa to hear the Gospel. Other members of the party delivered short addresses, all breathing a very earnest spirit, and telling of a warm desire to turn sinners from the error of their way, and shed abroad the love of the Redeemer wherever God may place them. After the speeches, prayer was offered by Mr. Spurgeon and several friends, on behalf of the Mission labourers, and the world that lieth in darkness. The evening was indeed a hallowed season, several mission workers from other lands being also present to speak of the faithfulness of God in glorifying his Son through the Gospel.

WORKERS GOING FORTH.

A deeply interesting meeting was held on Thursday evening last in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road, E., when Mr. Joseph Hannington, and Mr. E. P. Telford, who are about to leave for work in distant spheres, were bidden a cordial farewell, and commended to the grace of God. Both brethren are well known to the many workers and worshippers, who have Mr. F. N. Charrington for their pastor and leader. It was at a meeting in one of the rooms of the Hall that Mr. Hannington, who is brother of the bishop whose life was sacrificed for Christ in the centre of Africa, was first led to surrender himself for labour in the foreign mission field; while for Mr. Telford the place has very blessed associations, for there he has many a time delivered the message of the Gospel with power, to the conviction of sinners, and their salvation unto God. The proceedings were presided over by Mr. R. C. Morgan, who, in some introductory remarks, pointed out the essentially missionary character of the meeting.

Mr. Hannington, who is shortly leaving for work in Gibraltar, to join the Mission to British Soldiers there, told the truly delightful story of his endeavours on behalf of South Africa. Among soldiers at Capetown, and the populations of other coast and inland towns, he had been permitted to see wondrous operations of Divine grace. At the same time his heart was greatly stirred by the scenes of woe and destruction in the country which owe their origin to the vile intoxicating liquors which the white man has forced upon many of the most helpless natives. He mentioned with satisfaction the measures which have been adopted in some parts to prevent the further demoralisation of the people; men desirous of working at the great industries up country now enter compounds for periods of several months, during which they may have all their needs supplied whilst enjoying immunity from temptations to drink.

Perhaps the most interesting part of Mr. Hannington's very interesting address was that in which he told of his visits to Australia. The result was the establishment of the Australian Mission to South Africa, in connection with which a colportage agency has already prospered beyond all expectations. A specially cheering announcement was the fact that an Australian doctor, making between £2000 and £3000 a year, but who would prefer saving souls to hoarding treasure upon earth, had decided to make his home among the natives of Kimberley. That gentleman had an earnest desire, while a young man, to go to Africa, but the Lord did not open the way; now, however, he feels that he will have no peace until on the mission field, and he is making arrangements whereby with the aid of a numerous family, all of them believers, he will shortly go out at his own charges, and carry on a medical mission among the very needy people. Since his return from Africa, the Lord had found Mr. Hannington a sphere of work at Gibraltar, and it is hoped he will be blessed with sound health therein. While on a visit to Jerusalem a few weeks ago, he prayed that the Lord would find him a fellow labourer. Taking ship at Port Said, he had his prayer answered, for the way was opened for the second mate of the vessel to accompany him into the mission field.

Mr. Marshall, the second mate in question, told a story full of evidences of God's loving providence. He rejoiced that, while following the sea, he had been enabled to testify for Christ, having for eight years known what it is to be in the keeping of God. Mr. Hannington's proposal that he should accompany him in mission work was quite in the lines of desires which he had long entertained, while the way had seemed closed; and the proposal was made the subject of much prayer, the believers on board ship attending meetings daily. Some days after his arrival in London, still undecided, the way was made very plain, and he hoped, with his wife, to go to Gibraltar in the strength of God, and bear witness for Christ among the many classes of people who pass through the place.

Mr. Telford followed with a brief address. For thirteen years past he has given a helping hand periodically at the Great Assembly Hall, and many have learned from him the way of life. Now he is going to the United States and Canada to preach the Gospel in a way which has been in the past attended with such blessed results. He goes in pursuit of a sense of duty, and, should the Lord indicate other fields of labour, he will loyally follow the guiding hand. Last year he spent some months in America, and was instrumental of much good. His special work was to look up the English people, many of whom had been members of Christian churches before leaving their native shores. These he aroused, in a large number of cases, to a due appreciation of their neglected privileges, and induced them to resume church membership and Christian testimony. Having referred to these things, Mr. Telford expressed a hope that, during the next two or three years, the Lord will use him greatly in the salvation of sinners. His sole ambition is to prove himself a soul-saving preacher, and, going forth in the strength of God, he expected blessing to crown his endeavours.

Mr. Charrington acknowledged the heartiness and value of the services Mr. Telford has so long rendered in East London. He called for the earnest prayers of the congregation on his behalf, and also on behalf of Mr. Hannington and those going forth with him. "God be with you till we meet again," was appropriately sung by way of concluding this happy meeting.

THE BIBLE AND GOSPEL VAN, worked by Messrs. Wharton and Weaver, is now on the promenade at Morecambe, which is daily thronged with visitors. The grand old Gospel is attracting large crowds of most attentive listeners, and many who came to the place seeking bodily health, will, there is every reason to believe, go away with everlasting life, through the great Soul Healer. The Gospel is also being scattered broadcast, through the circulation of Bibles, Testaments, and a large variety of Gospel books.

"SWARMING OFF."—Dr. Barnardo attended the noon prayer-meeting on Monday last, at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E., with over a hundred girls, about to leave for Canada. He spoke about his work to a highly interested audience, and earnest prayer was offered for God's blessing on the party and the work at large. Above ninety young folks were sent last week from the Homes of Miss Macpherson, whose sister, Mrs. Merry, gave some words of cheer and counsel to Dr. Barnardo's numerous party.

HACKNEY Y.M.C.A.—The fourth annual camp has recently been held on Gunton Denes, near Lowestoft, tents being pitched from August 3 to 10. The party numbered forty-eight, who much benefited spiritually and physically. Mr. F. H. Porter, the secretary, writes:—"We can strongly recommend other associations to follow our example. Total cost of the week about 40s., including return fare from London. The local Association, and the rector of Lowestoft (Rev. T. A. Nash), extended much kindness to the visitors, who enjoyed the company of Mr. George Williams at several of their evangelistic and other meetings.

"DOOMED" EURASIAN CHILDREN.

Rev. Francis Staniland, writing from Yokohama of the proposed Home for Eurasian children, says:—I hope now we shall keep the matter well to the front, for I am very anxious to go on to success. It seems to me the Lord is directing us; for it engages all our sympathies and enthusiasm. We see these poor children in the streets of every seaport town, some of them singularly pretty, in their long, flowing sleeves and picturesque kirnonos. But alas! for their future. They are looked upon as the wreckage of society. Contemned by all, and pitied by the few, they are left to drift into the currents of sin, with no arm to save. They are washed up by every flowing tide, and their bodies morally mangled, and their souls spiritually blighted, are hurled against the rocks, and left to pollute the moral atmosphere. And yet these girls possess refinement of feature and grace of person—many of them do—which only enhances their ruin.

It may be said that the condition of these children has not sunk so low in Japan as in other lands. We do not want it to! Japan has been so recently opened to foreign commerce and civilisation that matters have not had time to become so sad. But if these girls are to be rescued at all, I assert, with all the earnestness of conviction, that "Now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation." This Home must be established on a firm basis. It must be established on the solid Rock of Ages, and many of these poor children shall be safely sheltered from the storm.

God will rescue many more besides Lizzie Hazell. He has a purpose in delaying her rescue. It is that Christian hearts may be touched, and sympathy aroused. For four months that little child has been repeating her little prayer every day. That prayer will be answered by and by, in the establishment of 'The Hazell Home for Eurasian Children," and that little one shall (D.V.) lay the foundation stone when she will be rescued, body and soul, for time and for eternity.

MR. MOODY AND HIS WORK.

THE BIBLE TRAINING SCHOOL IN CHICAGO.

In the permanent Bible Institute, established and to be conducted by Mr. D. L. Moody, in Chicago, the English Bible will be made the great text-book. All other studies introduced will be only for the better understanding of this book. The instruction is intended to be eminently Biblical. It is for this the Institute exists, as the name indicates. The doctrinal and practical teachings of the Bible will therefore be the main subjects of study, together with its authenticity and history. An earnest endeavour will be made to teach the "Whole System of Truth." The method of using the Bible in dealing with inquirers, and plans for preparing Bible-readings and Bible lessons will receive attention. Study and work will be combined, therefore a portion of each day will be devoted to actual Christian work in needy mission fields in the city, the object being to teach the students not only the theory of work, but also the work itself, and that by actually doing it.

Methods of city, home, and foreign mission work will be made subjects of study under the guidance of those who have been successful in their prosecution, and an effort will be made to familiarise the students with fields of work and the heroic lives and labours of those who have given themselves to the service of God in the dark places of the earth.

A common school education will be required as a ground-work for these studies, the brevity of the course making it impossible to spend time in instruction which is purely elementary. The full course of study will cover a period of two years. A partial course may be arranged covering a single year. The fall term will open about Sept. 20. Further particulars may be had of Mr. F. G. Ensign, secretary, 154, Madison-street, Chicago, Ill., U.S.A., by enclosing stamp for reply.

The ladies' department of the Bible Institute will be distinct from that of the gentlemen, and will be under the charge of Miss Gertrude Hulbert. The Bible Home at 230 and 232, La Salle-avenue, adjoining the Chicago Avenue Church, will accommodate about thirty ladies. All members of the Home will share in the house work, under the superintendence of a matron. The work of the Institute will demand good health, a well-trained mind, and a consecrated life. Any desiring additional information should address, enclosing stamp, Mrs. S. B. Capron, care of Mr. F. G. Ensign, at the address given above.

CHRISTIAN WORK in COSTA RICA.

Dear Sir,—In this out-of-the-way part of the world The Christian comes to one like an oasis in the desert. For the privilege of seeing your paper occasionally I am indebted to a kind friend at home who regularly sends it, but all do not reach their destination.

With my family I left England in 1883 for Jamaica, where I remained for five years. As the result of a missionary tour to some islands in the Caribbean Sea, and to some parts in Central America, the Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society decided to commence Christian work in the Republic of Costa Rica, and desired me to become their first missionary. My wife and myself have now been in this country fourteen months. There is much here to sadden one's heart and to depress the spirit, but our work is the Lord's, and He is our hope. We hold services in a room 42 by 24 feet, which we rent, paying 35 dollars per month. The place is unhealthily situated, often uncomfortably full; the storey above us is occupied by five families, and the sanitary arrangements are in a wretched condition. We are surrounded by rum shops, and the sights and sounds around, even while Divine service is being conducted, make us often very sad. We have to endure scoffing and sneering and other discouragements. There is general sceptical indifference: on Sunday men are paid their wages, business is done, trains are running, frequently vessels loaded or unloaded, rum-shops full; drunkenness, blasphemy, gambling, and other sinful practices are common. Nevertheless, God in whom we trust is with us. Some few have come out on the Lord's side, and others we trust will soon follow.

The Panama Canal works are completely abandoned. A large number of men have recently come here from there, and thus our responsibility is increasing. Our great want in this town is a suitable building in which to preach. A piece of land is promised, and a portion of the money required has been raised, but we still need from £250 to £300. This is, like the surrounding Republics and States, a Roman Catholic country, and greatly needs the Gospel. The natives speak Spanish, but the great majority in this town, and for many miles up country, speak English. At present I am the only Protestant missionary in the Republic. Our work is not confined to the town. Along by the seaboard, and into the interior, on the old railway, and the one in course of construction, I visit, preach, sell, and give Bibles, hymn-books, and tracts. My wife conducts services in the town during my absence. We get our turn of fever, which to have is never to forget.

We ask the prayers of the readers of The Christian for the prosperity of the Lord's work, and that we may have health and strength to prosecute that work, in this dark corner of the earth.—Yours sincerely, Joshua H. Sobey.

THE BROUSSA ORPHANAGE.

Among the many institutions founded for the support and training of orphan children, which are occasionally brought before the notice of the Christian people of England, the Home in Broussa, the capital of ancient Bithynia, deserves notice. This institution was opened, in 1875, by Mr. Baghdasarian, an Armenian gentleman, whose heart was touched by seeing the number of little children left utterly destitute by the terrible famine that spread over Asia Minor in 1874-5. He began the work with only a small number of children, but has quietly and steadily held on his way, amid much opposition, until, by the blessing of God, a noble work is being done, while there is ample room for much more in the same direction. The Orphanage is situated in one of the highest and healthiest parts of the beautiful city of Broussa, which is itself built on the side of the grand Mount Olympus.

At present there are sixty children sleeping in the house, of whom thirty-six are girls and twenty-four boys; besides these there are about thirty day-scholars, who come from various parts of the city; so that ninety children are daily being brought under the Christian teaching and influence of the Home. Of these the greater number are Armenians, but there are a few Greeks also among them.

The orphans, all of whom sleep in the house, are very happy, healthy, lively children, and quickly respond to the loving influence and training of those who have the care of them, soon showing its effects in many ways. The heart of the principal is thoroughly in his work, and his wife, a German-Swiss lady, formerly a teacher in the school, is his willing helper in carrying out his plans.

There is great need for enlarging the present building, thus obtaining the increased accommodation which is required to allow of the work being efficiently carried on. An entirely new kitchen, laundry, and store-room, also a covered gymnasium where the children may take exercise in wet weather, are much wanted; besides this, the dormitories are too small for the present number of beds, and it is only the Lord's goodness which prevents constant sickness under the present crowded condition of the sleeping apartments. These should be built now, and ready for use before winter. The premises stand on a good-sized piece of land, and a large wing at one end of the building would provide ample accommodation for one hundred children. For this £600 are needed. Rev. T. W. Brown, D.D., secretary of the Turkish Missions' Aid Society, is the treasurer, in England, of the Orphanage. His address is 32, The Avenue, Bedford-park, Chiswick.

KILBURN HALL.—On Bank Holiday there was a good assemblage of Christian friends from various parts of London and suburbs to the meetings which were held, as usual, in Kilburn Hall. The afternoon meeting was addressed by Messrs. Inglis, Mapstone, Edward Wright, Crawley, Stanley, Dr. R. Anderson, and Dr. Neatby, and many helpful and profitable words were spoken. These Bank Holiday meetings form quite a feature of Kilburn Hall work.

REV. THOMAS NEEDHAM has returned to his home in Media, Pa., from an evangelistic tour in the Southern States. He reports the heat as intense, and malarial sickness prevalent in the regions visited by him. The number of deaths in some of the towns was considerable, and added solemnity to his own usually solemn preaching. He is one of the men who limits his tactics to earnest, faithful preaching of the Cross. The results of his labours are therefore healthy, and free from the disastrous re-actions which follow more popular and superficial efforts.

The Y.M.C.A. in Japan.

Events have transpired in Japan during the past twelve months that may truly be regarded as marking an epoch in the introduction of Christianity into the island. These consist in the successful efforts of the Young Men's Christian Association in charging those hitherto impassable barriers—the Government schools of Japan. While heretofore Christian evangelists have been permitted to preach Christianity almost anywhere to the common people, they have been obliged to call a halt at the Government schools. The rising generation of young men found in the Japanese institutions of learning have been approached in vain by the ordinary methods of evangelism. Not only have the regulations forbidden Christian work within the enclosures of nearly all these schools, but the students themselves, more particularly in the higher educational institutions, being sons of the now extinct Samurai class, or knights, have somehow felt themselves to be superior to Christianity.

If we go back thirty years in Japanese history, we reach the period of the great and when the Shogun was stripped of his usurped power, his subordinates, the daimios, retired on pensions, and their followers, the samurai, or soldier class, turned upon the world to earn their living as best they could. At this time feudalism perished from the island; and the Emperor was called from a polite imprisonment, in which for 200 years the sovereign had been kept as a sort of sacred curiosity or spiritual head to the people, and the government was placed in his hands. During the two centuries those military despots, the Shoguns, ruled, there were no schools in Japan, except those kept by Buddhist monks and priests. The common people had no educational facilities, and, indeed, were forbidden the benefits of any instruction whatever. When, however, the Emperor came out of his enforced seclusion, all this was changed. He at once established a system of public schools supported by the Government. These were carried on with more or less success for twenty years. About ten years ago they began to assume a really practical shape, and soon became a pronounced success as a system of education. Although subject to blighting changes with the appointment of each new minister of education, they became magnificent institutions under the late lamented Count Mori, whose activity was stilled by the hand of an assassin a few months ago, on the day of the promulgation of the Imperial constitution, Christianity thus being robbed of in high official circles. Count Enomoto, his successor, has no religious belief.

ITS ONLY BAPTIZED BELIEVER

The schools as established by Count Mori are those of which we have spoken as having been charged by the Y.M.C.A. They consist of countless numbers of common schools scattered over the empire, attendance upon which, by children of the common people, is, after the German method, made compulsory. Next come the middle schools, which also exist in great numbers, and carry on the work from the point where the common schools leave off. Then the higher middle schools, of which there are five, all told. These are really colleges, the entrances of which are on an ascending scale from the exits of the middle schools. Lastly, we have the Imperial University of Japan, the final school of the course, which covers fifteen or eighteen years, a course that would do credit to any Western nation. In addition to these are normal training schools, one in each of the seventy provinces, with one higher finishing Normal College in Tokyo. Then there is a Naval School and a Naval College, with its complement, a Military School and a Military College. There are likewise commercial schools in each province, and a great Commercial College at Tokyo. Finally, there is an Agricultural College; also a Nobles' School.

All these schools, except the common ones, have been made the objective point of Christian evangelists from the time of their establishment, eight or ten years ago. But the doors have been kept closed, while from an elevation of almost unendurable self-complacency and assumed superiority, the students have condescendingly smiled at Christianity as something entirely beneath their notice.

The influence of this holding aloof from Christianity on the part of Government students has surged over into private and even Christian schools, so that in all of them there have been large numbers of fine young men who have resisted all the ordinary methods of approach, because they thought it dignified and manly to do so. If the Young Men's Christian Association ever confirmed the judgment of its founders and promoters, if ever it verified its claim to having a special field, and an all-important one, which no other Christian organisation could fill, it has lately done so here in Japan among the class of young men just described, by persuading them to get down from their pedestal of assumed superiority and disdain, and to

to the ambassadors sent to them in the name of Jesus Christ, by the students of England, Germany, Sweden, and America. Those doors, and those hearts, once opened, have received Christ as their permanent and honoured Guest to the most excellent health of their souls. How did it come about? Like all the other good things of earth and heaven, it had a small beginning. It was indeed brought about by the methods of Christ Himself.

There crossed the Pacific, less than two years ago, a young American member of the Y.M.C.A., by the name of J. T. Swift. He entered the island as a teacher in one of the large Christian schools of Tokyo, and incidentally to look over the field and study the prospects for introducing the Y.M.C.A. in Japan. For about a year Mr. Swift felt his way cautiously. In that time he sought out the isolated Christians of the Imperial University, the leading Higher Middle School, or College, and the Great Commercial College. Among these he first established Bible-classes; while teaching them he gradually unfolded the organisation and work of the Y.M.C.A. of his native land. Soon his Japanese friends became interested and questioned him. Christian students talked with some of their unbelieving friends, some of whom also became interested, and visited Mr. Swift. Their hearts took fire, and at last the question for which Mr. Swift had so long waited and prayed was asked:—

"WHY NOT A Y.M.C.A. IN JAPAN?"

Mr. Swift's answer would make the motto of any successful Christian organisation: "With faith and personal work, you may have a successful organisation in Japan."

Then came Associations in these three Government schools, modelled after Western plans—small, but strong in the might of God. These were followed by an organisation in the distant city of Osaka, where the first building was erected at a cost of £2000 by contributions largely from America.

The significant news was received with joy by Mr. L. D. Wishard, general college secretary of the American Association. Later on, still more cheering messages crossed the ocean. Hope, no longer a fledgling, feathered and flew across the Pacific, to whisper its desires to Western Associations. "Come over and help us" was the refrain. In consequence, the Central International Committee decided to send Mr. Wishard on a tour of the world, with Japan for his first point. The World's Convention of the Y.M.C.A. at Stockholm confirmed this act, so all the Associations are interested in his work.

Arrived in Tokyo, in January last, one of Mr. Wishard's first acts was to persuade Mr. Swift to resign his teaching appointment and devote his whole time to Association work as an adviser, with duties which are practically those of a general secretary. Mr. Wishard has proved to be just the man that was needed for the best interests of the Association. Bringing to the young men and students of Japan the greetings of the great army of students in the West, he found himself at once placed in touch of all the schools of the empire. Having already secured £5000 for building purposes from American Association members, he decided to erect two buildings in Tokyo, one for business men and another for students. The buildings in contemplation will cost £12,000, and be constructed after Western models, with libraries, reading-rooms, and gymnasia, in addition to class and lecture rooms. Sites have been purchased convenient to the Imperial University and schools, containing 3000 of the brightest students of the empire. Work on the building has already been begun.

In the short respite following these activities Mr. Wishard went on a tour of inspection and evangelistic work. During this tour he addressed unbelievers on the evidences of Christianity, stirred up Christian young men to a feeling of personal responsibility for their unconverted friends, and corrected some errors that had been disseminated by infidels to the effect that Christianity was losing its hold on the mass of educated people in the West. There is perhaps no living American who is better acquainted with the faith and inner life of American colleges than Mr. Wishard, who is able to quote the percentage of Christians among upwards of three hundred American colleges as a whole, and then to particularise in regard to some of the more prominent of them.

He showed that, compared to twenty, ten, and five years ago, there has been an enormous increase in Christian belief among students in these latter years, so that at present Christianity has tenfold greater hold on the educated young men of America than upon an equal number of the uneducated. Following this up, he preached the plain Gospel, and, although all his discourses were much weakened by sifting through interpreters, losing thereby much of their detail and numerous favourite points, many young men were nevertheless converted. The tour was, in fact, a triumphant one, and both he and Mr. Swift ascribe the cheering results largely to the prayers of fellow Christians across the ocean, and all the glory to Almighty God.

The first visits were paid to the leading educational institutions under Christian control. At Doshisha College, in Kyoto, they conducted a two weeks' meeting, and a great revival ensued, resulting in many conversions. As many as 103 students were baptized at one time, an administration of the ordinance on a scale never before known in the empire. The entire institution felt the power of the mighty Christian upheaval, and only with great difficulty were the students diverted from

THE ALL-ABSORBING TOPIC.

Without going into details with regard to the work in other Christian schools, I may say that the results were proportionately good, several hundred students accepting Christ as their personal Saviour.

Next came the more important tour of the Government schools, when, as before stated, the doors were opened for the first time to the knocking of Christianity, simply and solely through Mr. Wishard's relations to college students in the Western world. Let this fact be a potent talisman for all the future to those Associations of the West which are struggling and disheartened. It was you and your influence, young men, through your representative, Mr. Wishard, which unlocked the massive doors of the Japanese Government schools, and started a Christian tidal wave whose far-reaching influence can never be estimated until it breaks on the shores of the celestial kingdom.

At Kumomoto, in the Higher Middle School, where previously Christianity has had little or no influence, the students, having learnt of Mr. Wishard's arrival, called upon him in large numbers, and not only invited him to address them, but arranged the meetings, circulated tickets, and packed the building. This was followed by a similar action on the part of other Government schools hitherto

HOSTILE TO CHRISTIANITY.

The professors not only welcomed Mr. Wishard, but, a very unusual thing for them to do, actually introduced him from the platform, and afterwards favoured all his plans for the organisation of Associations among the students under their charge. Yesterday, avowed enemies; to-day, friends of Christianity!

At Osaka, in the Higher Middle School, the students were wonderfully responsive. Upwards of a hundred of them rose publicly, after one of Mr. Wishard's addresses, and expressed their determination at once to accept Christ as the Saviour. And that this was no idle caprice on their part is shown by the fact that after Mr. Wishard's departure, 119 students of that school wrote him expressing the same determination, and asking for different kinds of advice or information. Mr. Wishard makes a great point of personal work among friends, and constantly enforces the idea that aggressive personal effort must constantly be made. Associations are always established where they do not already exist, or former ones placed on more enduring foundations.

That the work of the Y.M.C.A. is striking vital parts in this spiritually benighted land is demonstrated by the

as it scampers from ambush. Large numbers of Buddhist societies have been springing into existence in these same schools and elsewhere throughout Japan, since the Association work began. It augurs well in the main, for nothing purifies society like getting it into a vigorous Christian boil, where all neutrals are compelled to take sides. Yet there is one source of apprehension in these Buddhist societies. The Emperor's will in Japan is absolute. He claims to belong to a family whose first member came from heaven. Hence his name has in all ages, from the time of Jinnuo's accession down to the present day, been called Ten-shi-Sama, literally translated Heaven's-Son-Mr.; or, in English arrangement, Mr. Son of Heaven. This tradition of his divine origin is largely believed, even in this enlightened day, in Japan.

The name of these Buddhist Societies is "Son-no-ho-bu-tsu, dido-dau," which translated, means, "Society for preaching the doctrine of Buddhism on behalf of the Emperor to the whole world." That is, they take the ground that, as the Emperor is the true son of God, or Heaven, therefore Christianity, which claims to believe in another Son of God (Jesus Christ), is in consequence a religion which teaches disrespect and denial of the Emperor's claims to being the true son of God, or Heaven, and, perforce, the Christian religion should be forbidden by the Emperor as a menace to himself. This Society has a very large following, and quite a number in high official position endorse it. Japanese Christians do not appear to fear for the success of this scheme, but there is really no telling what may result from it. It certainly is an adroit plan, and may in some way eventually give trouble. But my fears are not held by the vast majority of those directly interested. The Emperor and Empress were each recently presented with elegantly bound copies of the Bible in Japanese, by Christians of Japanese origin, and another Woman's Society memorialised the Emperor to abolish

BIGAMY AND CONCUBINAGE.

Mr. Wishard feels profoundly grateful to missionaries for their preparatory work and constant assistance, which have contributed so largely to the success of this great movement on the part of the Y.M.C.A. Without missionaries, of course, his work would not have been possible. He came at an opportune time to precipitate things, and did so.

Of one thing I am certain, in view of the several hundred conversions which have crowned Mr. Wishard's work in less than six months, and that is, that foreign missionaries do not make use of good interpreters sufficiently often in opening new fields. Taking the ideas of the speaker at second hand has not the same objection among Japanese that the same would have among Western nations. Among English-speaking people, for instance, the impressive delivery of a speaker, his accentuation, and emphasis, and modulation of voice, has much to do with the acceptability of his remarks. But the Japanese language, properly spoken, has neither accent nor emphasis, nor modulation, compared with English. Foreigners in speaking Japanese always speak it after the manner of English. It is irresistible. The mechanical power of habit is so strong at the age when missionaries come into the field that they never acquire the peculiar type-writer click of the Japanese language, and hence the language is hopelessly marred in the ears of a Japanese. His not knowing Japanese has been scarcely any disadvantage to Mr. Wishard. Miss Sybil Carter has been here a little longer than Mr. Wishard. She has been engaged in with an interpreter also, and her success has been very remarkable. There is a fire and freshness among these newly arrived evangelists too that the climate often removes from foreigners after a few years.

At the urgent request of many students who have heard of Mr. Moody and his work at Northfield, a national conference has been arranged to be held the first ten days of July in Doshisha College in Kyoto. Several hundred students are already assured, and the best Christian Japanese preachers of the empire have agreed to be present. It is a significant circumstance that this meeting will be held on the same date as the meeting in Northfield, and we pray that it may become equally famous as the years of Christian work roll by. The belief is general that a gigantic Christian movement is about to begin among the young men of Japan.

MARSHALL LAW.

Tokyo, Japan, June 28.

WE WOULD REMIND OUR READERS of the approaching "hop-picking" season. Mission work among the pickers is carried on from several centres, and amongst others engaged in it are Rev. J. Burnham (Brentford, Essex), Mr. S. Chinn (Alton, Hants), Mr. Gillingham (Plaxtol, Kent), each of whom solicits aid in the form of illustrated and other tracts, Scripture portions, clothing, and money. Tents are erected, free teas are provided, and in many ways the work entails considerable expense, even though relief be dispensed with the utmost care. We shall be happy to distribute donations entrusted to us.

PROFESSOR TH. CHRISTLIEB has, we rejoice to learn, recovered from his recent serious illness. Herr Eug. Stursberg, treasurer of the Johanneum Training College, writes to us: "Our Saviour God has heard the cry of his people. The physicians stated that the case was hopeless, but the Lord has wrought this miracle to the glory of his name, and for the strengthening of our faith." Dr. Christlieb's daughter, in a note to us, says: "When all human skill failed to stop the painful bleeding from which my father suffered, and there was no hope of his life being prolonged, it pleased the gracious Saviour to interfere. On the prayer of a few friends, who were supported by a larger circle outside, the bleeding was suddenly arrested, to the utter astonishment of the physicians. Since then, after seventeen days' and nights' bleeding, his strength is gradually coming back, without any medicine. Let us continue to pray that the secret source of this bleeding, an inward swelling, may be also graciously removed by the finger of our mighty Saviour, and my father be enabled to leave for Switzerland in a few weeks. Many thanks to all kind English friends who helped us in wrestling for my dear father's life."

THE PROMISE OF THE FATHER.

"Go forth, and stand upon the mount before the Lord."—1 KINGS xix. 11.

"BAPTIZE us with thy Spirit, Lord,"
Out of the depths we cried.
No tongues of fire came down; it seemed
Our prayers, in silence, died.

But, "though it tarry, wait for it."
Not lightly God imparts
His mighty blessings; grace and power
Need long-prepared hearts.

Say, canst thou drink of that dark cup,
Where tears of anguish flow,
And ere the baptism of fire
Be first baptized in woe?

Before the voice of God doth speak,
"As man speaks to his friend,"
A great strong wind perchance may break
The rocks, and mountains rend.

Still wilt thou stand before the Lord,
And for his promise wait?
The earth may quake, and shattered hopes
Leave thy life desolate.

Within thy heart his fire must burn,
Consuming all the dross;
Till, midst the ashes of a world,
Stands nothing but the Cross.

Then, in the calm, "a still small voice"
Shall speak, yea, speak to thee;
Wrapped in the mantle of God's truth
And power thy lips shall be.

Fear not, nor faint; He is thy shield,
Thy exceeding great reward,
Thy rich inheritance—Himself,
The everlasting Lord.

PROTESTANTISM AT DARTFORD.

SOME earnest evangelical Christians of Dartford, Kent, have made a splendid effort to counteract the growing influence of Rome. It is not long since the Martyrs' Memorial was restored, so as to bear its silent testimony against error and on behalf of fidelity to Gospel truth. On Saturday last, the foundation stones were laid of a Memorial Hall, to be used as the headquarters of the Dartford Young Men's Bible-class, and in other ways to maintain and disseminate the Scriptural principles of the Reformation.

Established in 1886, the Bible-class, which has a membership of 156, is under the superintendence of Mr. J. Lawrence Mitchell, whose unremitting and faithful devotion to the evangelical cause has given some uneasiness to the many local friends of Rome. The Hall will have agencies which may, with God's blessing, work wonders for the good of the town and neighbourhood, and about half of the total cost (£1500) has already been given or promised. The stones were laid by Sir S. Arthur Blackwood and General Sir Robert Phayre, both of whom spoke of the great importance of the movement represented by the stone-laying ceremony. Mr. Mitchell explained that the Bible-class was commenced at the church; but, the plague of Popery spreading all round, he found it impossible to keep it on under such influences, and resigned. The young men said if he resigned they would break up, so they had kept on together; and the ways and means for erecting an institute for Dartford as a Protestant memorial and the carrying on of their Bible-class opened up. The teaching which would be conveyed in the Bible-class was sound Protestant doctrine. There will be no denominationalism, and the Bible alone will be their text-book.

CHRISTIAN ASSEMBLIES AT AGEN.

In the important town of Agen there is a most interesting work amongst the Roman Catholics, originated by M. Halbout. He formerly resided in Jersey, where, about the age of fourteen, he was converted, and felt a strong desire to become an evangelist; he belonged to the Eglise Réformée, and not finding any opening for evangelistic work, he engaged in business, often praying that he might be employed in making known the Gospel.

The answer came after many years' waiting in a most unexpected manner. About ten years ago he received an anonymous letter enclosing a sum of money to pay all expenses, and urging him to come and settle in Agen, and commence an evangelical work there, with promise of further support. Considering this to be the call from God, for which he had so long been waiting, he went to Agen, and for the last ten years has gone to the fairs in and around Agen, distributing tracts and Gospels, selling Bibles and New Testaments, and preaching Christ as the only Saviour.

In several villages Roman Catholics have been converted, and meet together each Lord's Day to break bread, and edify one another by studying the Word of God, without, however, being attached to any Protestant Church. M. L. J. Bertrand and M. Eugène Reveillaud have visited these groups of Christians in the various villages, and Mdme. la Baronne de Langsdorff has aided M. Halbout in the work. A Bible sold by him has been the means, in God's hands, of this evangelical movement. These people refuse to be called Protestants or Catholics, and will not accept any other title than Christians. There is in the department of Lot and Garonne a splendid mission field, and M. Halbout offers board and lodging gratis to any Christian evangelist or layman who is qualified for the work, and who would be willing to come and help him. His address is 16, Rue de l'École Vieille, Agen. W. J. Lockie.

BROADCAST SOWING.

The work last year of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures was blessed in character, and cheering in visible results. Long ago the prophet gave forth the utterance of Jehovah in this form: "Is not my Word like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" Flinty hearts are to-day broken by the Word read, just as they were in bygone ages by the Divine message delivered through men who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. So Mrs. A. E. Robertson, the hon. sec., issues the report of last year's operations, under the title of A Hammer. We would advise our readers to secure copies from Mrs. Robertson, whose address is Chesils, Christ Church-road, Hampstead, N.W.

From all parts testimony is borne to the good accruing from the broadcast distribution of God's Word. A correspondent in Calcutta writes:—"Two of the Bibles recently given away were presented to Roman Catholic soldiers, who say that they have abjured Romanism, and embraced the pure faith of the Bible." Signor Cav. Capellini, writing from Italy, says: "Without the free distribution of Bibles and Testaments, how could I instruct the army? This is the means by which the Military Church has obtained such large results." A labourer in Poland says: "Through the scattering of the seed of the Word of God, many among the Lord's ancient people have changed their opinions of Jesus Christ, and now look upon Him (secretly) as the promised Messiah of Israel and the Saviour of the world." Rev. E. H. Soper reports that in the prison at Quiz de Force, Minas, Brazil, he found a man who had been converted through reading a Bible which had been given to him. "The gaoler certainly believed in his conversion, for he left his cell door open, and gave him full liberty to exhort his fellow prisoners, and read to them the Word of God."

Equally cheering reports come from many other interesting fields of labour. For twelve years this good work has been carried on without any expense for office establishment, every pound contributed having gone for copies of Holy Writ. In some concluding words, Mrs. Robertson calls for earnest prayer upon the work. "The need is very great. Wide doors are opening on every hand. The time is short."

THE GOSPEL IN BULGARIA.

Dear Sir,—A short notice of Gospel work in Bulgaria may interest some of your readers, and stir them up to prayer for this corner of Europe. I have lately made a short tour in that country, visiting the principal places where efforts have been made, and where the blessing of the Lord has rested. Religious liberty so far prevails that in several places native evangelical churches freely meet to worship in public buildings erected for the purpose, while there are a number of well-trained men, Bulgarians, fitted to conduct the church and evangelistic services; while it seemed to me that a still larger number are qualified for such work, and need chiefly more zeal to bring forth abundant labours. These are mostly fruits of the work of esteemed American brethren, and of their secondary Christian schools, and one cannot but take courage and give thanks for what one sees of the fruits of their labours, from which I believe good results in various other directions, moral, educational, &c., have been attained. The Lord be praised.

It may not be expedient to give details, but there is one particular case, where also pecuniary help would be well bestowed, which I will name. Mr. Tonjoroff is native pastor at Philippopolis; besides a heart and life moved by the love of Christ, he has gifts and eloquence, and is consequently esteemed by a large circle of all classes, though I heard one said that the fate of Huss should be his. His courageous, sound, and good-tempered public remarks on State matters affecting the truth made me think that Luther and Knox may have similarly treated such subjects.

Well, the church is full on Lord's days, and a larger building is needed; some money is in hand, but about £1000 further is required, which would also provide accommodation for the primary evangelical schools. I commend this to generous givers, for Mr. Tonjoroff, especially as manager of the Evangelical Society, and late Protestant representing member of the Eastern Roumelian Parliament, is well known, and his character gives him influence with good men. Mr. Mathieson of Mildmay receives subscriptions, and will answer inquiry as a token of sincerity. I am thankful to enclose £10 for this.

Here in Servia, alas, there is no religious liberty for natives. Another batch were arrested last Lord's day for worshipping in a private house, those arrested in autumn were imprisoned three and a half months for a similar act. Lord, how long?—Yours faithfully,

Francis H. Mackenzie.

Belgrade, Servia, July 27.

[We know Pastor Tonjoroff, and, after his visit to England some years ago, received and remitted considerable sums to him. We shall be glad if the letter of our friend Mr. Mackenzie leads to a renewal of these contributions.—Ed.]

THE CHANGELESS LOVE OF JESUS.

"I have loved thee with an everlasting love."—Jer. xxxi. 3.

"I am the Lord. I change not."—Mal. iii. 6.

What wondrous heights and depths of love
Are hid in Thee, my God—
A love most glorious, deep, and true,
And as the ocean broad!
Calm as the changeless sea of glass:
What peace it gives to me,
To turn from my own changing will
And rest my soul on Thee!

How canst Thou bear so much and long
With me, my gracious Lord!
Such treacherous, cold and evil ways
Must pierce Thee like a sword.
Yet Thou dost never turn away,
As I return to Thee*
And ask Thee to forgive me all—
Thine own again to be.†

Yes! Thou didst know how treacherously
This evil heart would deal;‡
Though Thou didst save my soul from death,
And all my wounds didst heal.
'Twas balm of love Thou pouredst in,
And oil of saving grace:
My soul was glad; my life renewed;
The blind soul saw thy face!

I could not choose but give Thee all—
Myself, my heart, my will;
I sought to serve Thee all my days,
And all thy mind fulfil.
How little I have done it, Lord!
How selfish and untrue,
How careless, faithless, I have been,
With all thy love in view!

Oh, wondrous love, that can forbear,
And all these sins forgive;
That draws me to its close embrace,§
And bids me trust and live.
Wilt Thou not now to me impart
Thine own true righteousness,
Dwelling Thyself within my heart
In all thy faithfulness?

So, bound by thine own cords of love,‖
I'll on thine altar lie,
A living sacrifice to be
And in thy service die.¶
What joy to live for Thee, my Lord,
And all thy will to do;
In Thee to live, and think, and move,
And all thy mind to know.

To grow each day more like Thee, Lord,
By gazing on thy face:
Until my will, and heart, and mind,
Absorb thy perfect grace!
All glory to my changeless Lord!
All glory to his love!
All glory from his Church below,

Rome. Grace Filder.

AMONG "HOWLING DERVISHES."—In our article last week on this subject it was implied that Mr. Mitchell had left the North Africa Mission. This is not the case.

IF YOU WANT TO GET STRONG and well go to work out of doors. A sharp hoe will hack to pieces all your dyspepsia. A pruning knife will cut off the excrescences of your disposition. The dash of the shower that wets you to the skin will cool your spirit for ecclesiastical strife. Daily swinging of the axe will tone up your nerves. Trampling down the hay as it is tossed into the mow with tread into forgetfulness your little perplexities. In the wake of the plough you may pick up strength with which to battle public iniquity. Neighbours looking over the fence may think we are only weeding cantaloupes, or splitting rails, or husking corn, when we are rebuilding our strength, enkindling our spirits, quickening our brain, purifying our theology, and blessing our souls.—Dr. Talmage.

Letters to the Editor.

A CALL TO INDIVIDUAL EFFORT AGAINST ROMANISM.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly allow me to address your readers on a subject which we all feel to be one of the utmost importance. It will be evident to anyone who watches events what great and united efforts are being made by the Jesuits at this time to influence the mind of the English people. They are doing all they can to break down the Protestant feeling of the country, and to take away, especially from the young, all of that wholesome horror of the Church of Rome which had been burned into the hearts of the people of England by the doings of that Church when it had the power to vent its malice without control.

That Church remains the same as it ever was. It is indeed, as has been said, a lamb in adversity, a fox in equality, and a wolf in prosperity. Its fox-like tactics are now in full operation, only to enable it once more to act the wolf and devour the souls and bodies of men who will not submit to its impious and blasphemous tenets.

Good work is being done at Wimbledon by Mr. Wolstenholme, a missionary of the Protestant Reformation Society, who has been much used by God in opposing the efforts of the Jesuits in that town. One of his plans is to lend books to those who will read them, and it is to two of these books, and the results attained, that I would call the attention of your readers. The two books are Chiniquy's "Fifty Years in the Church of Rome," * and "The Catacombs at Rome," by Benjamin Scott.† Pastor Chiniquy's work, which is a most interesting one, has been lent to upwards of eighty men (we lend the book to men only). Six working men have purchased copies for themselves, and for use among their friends, so highly did they value it.

Let me give three cases of interest out of many:—

(1) Mr. —— and his daughter were regularly attending the large Roman Catholic church; but, after he had read the "Fifty Years," he said: "Well, this is an eye-opener. I will go no more"; and though Romanists have called upon him, and given him special invitations, he has not been to any Romish service since.

(2) Mr. —— was also attending the Romish church, and had become so friendly with the priests that they thought they were sure of him. "Fifty Years" was lent to him, and the "Catacombs." Afterwards he said: "I thank you most heartily for the help you have given me in my search for truth. The books you lent me have been invaluable. I had no idea what Popery was. Its exponents are so lamb-like when they come to me and others they wish to entice that it is difficult to see through their smiles and detect their perversion of truth."

(3) While Mr. Wolstenholme was away from Wimbledon, Mr. —— brought back the copy of "The Catacombs at Rome," which had been lent to him. The Romanists had tried in every way to get him to mass, and had even called upon him on their way, so as to take him with them. He left the following message: "Tell Mr. Wolstenholme I have read this book through three times, and I cannot sufficiently thank him for the help it has given me"; and then added, "I do not know how any thoughtful mind can resist such evidence."

"The Catacombs at Rome" is lent to all who will read it. Upwards of thirty families have had it, and their testimony has all been to the same effect. Fewer people have read this book, owing to its having only lately been purchased, but it is in even greater demand than Chiniquy's work.

Your readers will see what has been done by one man, whose heart is in the work. Surely God would have us go and do likewise. All classes should be forewarned against the Jesuitism which is so universal.

The sad proofs that we are constantly getting of the activity of the Jesuits is, of course, but a small part of the work being secretly carried on. God grant that before the minds of even a portion of our people have become possessed by the unclean spirit of Romanism, its entrance into not a few may be prevented by the lending to all one's friends, and to men and women of all classes, such books as I have named.

These two books are thoroughly interesting, and not likely to be returned unread, and if everyone would do this for himself or herself, and not leave it to others, it would be much more practical and pleasing to God than to lament over the progress of error and do nothing to stop it. The workers would be so many, the work so widespread, that it would influence numbers of men and women throughout the length and breadth of our land, and, with God's blessing, largely help to create that stedfast opposition to the blighting, withering influence of Romanism and Ritualism which all those who love the Bible and their country long to see.—Believe me, dear Sir, yours very truly,

Iping. (Rev.) C. H. L. Mercer.

SPANISH EVANGELISTS.

Dear Sir,—On my return from Spain, I visited General Field, one of the secretaries of the Evangelical Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, and mentioned to him the state of the mother of Don Manuel Matamoros, who is now over 75 years of age, very infirm, and very badly off. He immediately wrote to some friends, and has forwarded to me £20 for this excellent woman. I mentioned also the case of Don Miguel Trigo, who was fellow-prisoner with Don M. Matamoros for three years, and is now unwell in Madrid, and suffering from asthma. For him he has sent £7 14s. There is still one more of the noble men who suffered with Matamoros, for whom we ought to do something, Don José Alhama. He has got a small salary as evangelist at Granada, but it would be gratifying for English Christians to remember him at the same time. He is an aged and most worthy evangelist.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR. HEALING BY FAITH.

Dear Sir,—I have been much interested in the whole discussion of "The Question of the Hour," and not the least in that part of the subject relating to healing by faith. I feel strongly with Mr. Baldwin that the unbelief of the Church is largely responsible for the weak and partial character of "faith healings." At the same time, these healings may not be (in great measure) either so weak or partial as is thus suggested. Are they not oft-times hidden from the eyes of the Church, because the individual members of the Church are, as a rule, so sceptical as to their reality? This induces any healed member of the Church to keep the fact to himself rather than submit to the somewhat intolerant doubtings and questionings of even leading members of the Church, who endeavour to prove that miraculous cases of healing are things of a long distant past only.

I speak from a personal experience. On January 23 last, after six months of suffering from sciatica, which made me quite a cripple, seldom able to leave a chair without a stick, and caused me to give up business, to go to different mineral baths for relief, but which all ended in failure, I was led by Miss C. C. Murray, of Drayton Park, Holloway, to see the Lord Jesus Christ as healer of bodily sickness as already He had been of soul sickness; and, thereupon, just as I perceived the truth, so the healing came. It was like a new existence, to be suddenly relieved of the gnawing pain of months (which had caused one leg to shrink a full inch), and to go about as of old without any prop, to be able to run up and downstairs, to be up and off to town early in the morning, walking nearly a mile through the then deep snow of our country roads, and doing a hard day's work without the slightest inconvenience. And, beyond all this, I had an increased sense of God's power and presence, and of rest in Him, compared to which the sudden bodily healing was by far the lesser blessing.

And then some of God's people, full of unbelief towards anything beyond their comprehension, try to prove one is mistaken, that the healing is the result of other (imaginable or unimaginable) causes—anything, indeed, but to accept the fact, and give God the glory. Is it a wonder, under these circumstances, that the Church's unbelief should lead God to withhold these precious evidences of his power and love, or that souls who otherwise might get the blessing are hindered and discouraged even by those from whom they might fairly look for encouragement? To the Word and to the testimony. If the Word of God be thoroughly searched and weighed without prejudice, it must be apparent that God shows Himself willing and able to heal his people of their sicknesses and infirmities independently of all means. Remembering my past scepticism, I am not surprised at the Church's unbelief, but now sincerely pray that God will soon in this respect remove it.

I leave you to publish this letter if you like. I may just add two facts. I have, since the date above given, enjoyed a state of health more complete and vigorous than I have known for years. Secondly, I am not a person easily susceptible to mere influences or impressions, but am known as one of an unusually cool, matter-of-fact nature.—Yours very faithfully, William Sharp.

"CLERICAL COLLEGES AND THEIR TRAINING."

Dear Sir,—I have just seen a letter in your issue of August 2 on "Clerical Colleges and their Training." I fear there is too much truth in these awful revelations, and that most of our theological colleges are leading men Romewards.

But I presume that Mr. Collins in the term "generally of all colleges" does not include Ridley Hall, Cambridge, and Wycliffe Hall, Oxford. There, at any rate, the teaching given to the students is Protestant and Scriptural to the backbone.—Yours truly, B.A., Cantab.

AN OPENING FOR CONSECRATED WORKERS.

Dear Sir,—My soul is gladdened when I learn from many quarters how the good hand of God is leading Christian men and women who have means sufficient for their support to consecrate their lives to the great work of winning souls. But when so many of these consecrations are for service in foreign parts, I am solicitous concerning those who would give themselves to Christ's service, but who cannot for various reasons leave their own land. I can find needy and promising fields of labour for twelve godly women, and for two godly young men in the district of the Metropolis in which I am labouring. The programme which is in my heart and head for this district is too elaborate to be set forth in this letter, but I will gladly make an appointment to meet voluntary ambassadors for Christ upon their writing to me that they are prepared to take up regular work for their Master.—I am yours,

John Fletcher Porter,
Superintendent North Bow Mission.

MISSIONS: A PRACTICAL QUESTION.

Sir,—I have read with deep interest what has appeared in The Christian on missionary subjects. I have anxiously watched for some remark upon a practical point which seems to me of great importance.

If real spiritual success in missionary work depends so much upon whole-hearted consecration in our missionaries, how are parents, who would consider it their greatest joy and honour to number their sons among such missionaries, to train their boys in a way likely, with God's blessing, to lead to this result?

It seems that some missionaries think highly of the importance of education. Like Dr. Hœrnle they "make it their object" in the schools under their care "not to make clever but truly good boys, who shall have the fear of God and the love of Christ in their hearts; so that the school shall be known, not so much by the high standing of its teaching, though this must be aimed at too, as by a high and pure tone of conduct."

But do we seek, and can we find for our own boys a school, where it is known and felt by the boys that the kingdom of heaven and "the honour that cometh from above" are sought beyond all else by the masters and the governors? Surely God's blessing might be expected on a school where the best hour every day was devoted to the study of the Holy Scriptures. Would it not be well if the Book of Proverbs and other parts of the Bible were committed to memory? Where science and heathen literature occupy the first place in a school can we consistently expect the influence to be otherwise than deadening to spiritual progress.

The Book World.

Anti-Infidel Publications.

The Anti-Infidel, the monthly paper edited by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, fills an important place in periodical religious literature. The fourth volume (2s. John Snow & Co.) contains many articles which friends of the truth will read with pleasure, and infidels might peruse to their eternal enlightenment. Mr. Bradlaugh deserves hearty encouragement in his praiseworthy endeavour to make every issue of his paper a heavy charge upon the strongholds of error and darkness. The series of articles on "Infidels brought back" is specially interesting, and should be carefully read by preachers and teachers.

We have also received several additions to the well-known and very useful "Anti-Infidel Library" edited by Mr. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, Mass. A Warning Word concerning the Spread of Infidelity in Christendom and Heathendom contains facts of fearful import. Is the Bible a True Book? is cogent and powerful, and should be widely circulated. Reaching the Masses deserves the careful perusal of Christian workers everywhere. Five parts of the Library are devoted to a discussion of various phases of Spiritual Manifestations: Their Nature and Significance. The depths of Satan are here laid bare with convincing clearness, and the many evils which are the fruitage of the system displayed. We trust this Scriptural explanation and condemnation of spiritualism will be brought under the notice of many whom the devil has in recent times led into this soul-destroying captivity. The Library is published by Marshall Brothers, 10, Paternoster-row, at 3d. each part.

Popular Objections to Foreign Missions Considered and Answered. By Rev. E. Storrow. 6d. J. Snow & Co. A capital handbook for any who have to plead for Missions. Mr. Storrow is no novice, and deals thoughtfully but decisively with stock objections to missionary efforts and subtler scruples of stay-at-home Christians.

Sursum Corda; or, Song and Service. By G. F. E. Scott. 3s. 6d. Kegan Paul, Trench & Co. Thoughts always pious, and sometimes truly poetical, on Church seasons and other subjects. Sonnets for Saints' Days contain helpful thoughts, and, though the writer's expressions are sometimes vague and dreamy, his principles are, on the whole, true to the Word of God.

Leisure Moments. By E. A. Needham. Blackwood & Co. A volume of verse, by a young lady who aspires to be a poetess. We are unwilling to discourage true poetical genius, but we fail to see in these productions any promise of success. She writes on various subjects, not avoiding murder and suicide. In her simpler pieces, there occur good thoughts, but we must add that her ideas of courtship and marriage are not over-refined.

Indian Missions and their Latest Critics. By Rev. G. Mackenzie Cobban. Elliot Stock. To the assertions of the writer of the articles in The Methodist Times Mr. Cobban replies with great spirit and force. He defends the wisdom and value of "condemned" methods, sets against the pampered missionary of fiction the missionary of fact, and declares that, while God has blessed divers European agencies, it is mainly by native converts that India will be won for Christ.

Gatherings from Discourses by the Late T. T. Lynch. James Clarke & Co. These fragmentary jottings by a lady-hearer, give a very good idea of the wealth of spiritual suggestion and the scintillations of intellectual beauty that marked the pulpit utterances of the famous pastor of Mornington Chapel.

The Story of Jesus for Little Children. By Mrs. G. E. Morton. 3s. 6d. Partridge & Co. A difficult task well executed. In simple, but not childish, language, the "old story" is told once more. The holiness of our Lord and the great object of his life are kept in prominence; while his intercourse with all classes is described in a lifelike way. It is better, we think, to give the Saviour's very words than to paraphrase them; but this is a minor point, and we heartily recommend the book, which is improved by a few neat woodcuts.

Devoted; or, Working for God. Reminiscences of Mrs. T. Boyd, by her husband. With portrait. Nisbet & Co. An interesting sketch of one who, as child, maid, and matron, was "wholly the Lord's."

The British Weekly Pulpit. Vol. 1. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. A large assortment of sermons, addresses, and extracts from the writings of noted preachers and authors—admirers of Spurgeon, Saphir, Maclaren, Dale, Dr. Parker, and Professor Drummond can here find picked utterances of these and other speakers of note. The Sermonettes for Children on the International Lessons strike us as especially good, and Mr. Moody's answers to questions at Northfield are very much to the point. Such a volume puts before young preachers great varieties of thought and diction, but if they "prove all things" by the teaching of our Lord, they will find short measure in many elegant bushels.

How they kept the Faith: a Tale of the Huguenots of Languedoc. By Grace Raymond. T. Nelson & Sons. A remarkably well-written story of the persecuted Huguenots. The characters are carefully depicted; the wonderful way in which the faith of Christ was kept, through the keenest trials, torturings, and imprisonments, is graphically described. The experiences here described may be summed up in the very words of Scripture: "Being destitute, afflicted, tormented; they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth." This is a book likely to do much good in these days when Romanism is so insidiously endeavouring to gain ground, as from beginning to end simple Gospel truth is pleasantly interwoven with the narrative.

Our Lord's Healing Office in his Church. By Rev. G. Morris, A.K.C. Elliot Stock. Without disputing the truth of cures adduced by the author, we cannot agree with many of his deductions. Nor do we think he states his own case very logically. In one place he combats the Scriptural statement that sickness is by the will of God, while on p. 107 he says that "the Lord permitted him to become sick." This is surely what ordinary Christians mean when they speak of sickness coming by the "will of God." No thoughtful Christian denies that our Lord is still the healer in his Church, but they dare not confine Him to one particular method of action. A careful study of the words "medicine" and "physician" in Scripture leads the unbiassed mind to a very different conclusion from the author's.

Bible Talks. By George Clarke. 2s. Marshall Brothers. No one who has drunk of the living waters of God's precious Word, but longs for more and still more of its fresh streams. But the well is deep, and right gladly do we welcome teachings, whether spoken or written, which help us to draw therefrom. Such teachings, we believe, will be found in this little book, set forth in a style which all classes of readers must appreciate. Of talking we have enough and to spare nowadays, but we can never have too much Bible talk from pulpit or press. Our friend's book is both healthful and helpful. Though not wordy, it is yet full of the Word, and will, no doubt, have a large circulation at home and abroad, far beyond the wide limits of those who have been privileged to listen to the addresses of its author.

Demonology and Witchcraft. By Robert Brown. John F. Shaw & Co. That there is very much in so-called Spiritualism which is pure deceit and fraud no one will deny; but it is clear to all thoughtful inquirers upon the subject that there are many mysterious facts which no ordinary laws can explain. Many such cases are given in this book. Possibly some will be regarded by many readers as doubtful. But, excluding these, there still remain facts sufficiently numerous and remarkable to warrant either the conclusion of the Spiritualist, who explains them as instances of communion with the departed dead, or that of the author of this book, who regards them as one form of Demonology. The existence of demons, and the possibility of their connection with men, can hardly be denied by anyone who reads his Bible. The number of cases of demoniac possession in our Lord's day, and the solemn denunciations of Demonology in all its various forms in the Old Testament, prove that this evil had then a very real existence. And we are certainly of the author's opinion that 1 Tim. iv. 1—6 predicts the revival of some form of intercourse with demons, as one feature characterising the close of this dispensation. The teachings of Spiritualism seem to confirm this view. They could not be better described than as "doctrines of demons, speaking lies in hypocrisy." There is most urgent need for warning against the dangers of this growing and fascinating form of evil. This well-written and interesting book will contribute to this end. The author succeeds in showing the similarity between the teachings of Spiritualism and those of "modern thought." There is much to interest and edify in the author's view of the coming Antichrist; and his reference to Satanic imitations of spiritual gifts is full of warning. His tenacious hold and his fearless declaration of the "old Gospel" is refreshing. The book is sure to be read. The incidents with which it abounds are often thrilling and exciting to the last degree; and the teachings and warnings accompanying them cannot fail to do good.

The Coming Prince. By Robert Anderson, LL.D. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. We are glad to find that this work, thoughtful throughout, and luminous with suggestion on many great themes, has reached a third edition. Disclaiming the rôle of the prophet, the author has simply aimed at "sorting," to use Lord Bacon's phrase, one great prophecy, "with the events fulfilling the same, for the better illumination of the Church touching those parts of prophecies which are yet unfulfilled." Finding in "the prince who is coming" of Dan. ix. 26 the last great monarch of Christendom, the author conducts some very careful studies of the prophetic Scriptures, and then, in gladsome style, dwells upon the light and glory which shall succeed darkness and terror such as the world has never yet known. Making the Scriptures his source of ideas, and avoiding speculation as well as distrusting imagination, Dr. Anderson has produced a work which cannot but prove useful to all students of prophecy. A hundred questions as to Biblical chronology and Christian doctrine are incidentally and ably dealt with.

Notes on the Shorter Catechism. By W. P. Mackay, M.A., M.D. 2s. Hodder & Stoughton. This work, by the author of "Grace and Truth," has been edited since his death by his friend James Johnston, of Montrose. Those who know the scope of the Shorter Catechism, and the character of Dr. Mackay's writings, will expect a thorough statement of Scripture truth and Christian duty in this volume. All this, and more besides, is presented, and in such a manner as to give the work a value altogether distinct from its application to the well-known Catechism. There is hardly an outstanding truth of our most holy faith that is not stated with lucidity and force, and in several instances very helpful diagrams are introduced in order to help the reader to grasp Divine mysteries. The manner in which the ten commandments are explained, and their bearing upon daily life indicated, is excellent, while the Lord's Prayer is opened up with remarkable clearness and beauty. Written in the language of the people, the book is calculated to prove widely useful, and we shall rejoice to learn that it has found its way into the hands of teachers and others who may not in ordinary circumstances pursue their studies on the lines of the Shorter Catechism.

Cinquante Années de Visites à Saint-Lazare. Par M. D'A. 3 fr. 5c. Paris: Librairie Fischbacher. The woes and shame of Saint-Lazare have been often related; here, however, we have a specially interesting chapter of its history. Upwards of fifty years ago Elizabeth Fry visited Paris, whereupon a Protestant committee was appointed to visit Saint-Lazare, with its 950 female prisoners. Mlle. Dumas was one of that committee, and she has, without interruption, ever since devoted her energies to exertions for the good of female criminals. For some years she has been president of the Protestant Women's Prison Society, whose efforts have resulted in temporal advantages to the prisoners in general, and spiritual enlightenment to many in particular. This volume, recording the rise and progress of prison work in France, and giving some account of operations elsewhere, is, with pleasing appropriateness, dedicated to Mlle. Dumas, whose life and character cannot but command the highest admiration. At the age of eighty-two this noble woman learned Spanish in order to be able to hold intercourse with a friendless prison inmate, and while as old as ninety-five, she still visited the poor women to whose welfare she had consecrated her life and fortune. From first to last this is a book of sterling interest, and the story it tells is a worthy monument to Mlle. Dumas and her benevolent helpers. Saint-Lazare is to-day used for women of the most sadly fallen class, but the prison visitors are increasingly earnest in their endeavours, and wherever the objects of their solicitude may be incarcerated, thither they seek them out. Christian workers who can read French, will be profited by a perusal of this beautiful little volume.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 18.—Judges III.

(1) We have here an enumeration of the nations of Canaan left to try Israel (1—7). They ought to have been destroyed; but, as the chosen people failed to fulfil the Divine purpose and command, they had to suffer the fret of perpetual conflict. This however, had its advantages in training them to the hardness and toughness which is its result. God often uses the results of our own folly and unbelief as the means of effecting in us his own bright and loving designs. But what a lamentable record is here that they forgat God. Intermarriage with the sinful peoples around had the effect of infecting them with their vices and sins, and it became only too convenient to ignore and forget the all-holy God. Be not yoked with unbelievers.

(2) The first captivity and deliverance.—The king of Mesopotamia probably invaded the trans-Jordanic tribes that lay nearest to him (8—11). They returned to God in their distress. Those who had cried to Baalim and Ashtaroth in their mirth were glad enough to call on God in the day of their trouble. Othniel was specially anointed for his work (10), and it would be well if we would distinguish between the grace of the Spirit within us for character, and upon us for work, and if we would claim each. The anointing may be ours whenever we step into the waters of Jordan (death). See Luke iii. 22, iv. 18.

(3) Ehud's achievements stand next. Eglon was permitted by God to wax strong and to prevail against Israel. But again, when the people repented, deliverance came through a man who might not have been supposed most suited for the purpose. But God can use left-handed men. He chooses the weakest to execute his purposes. How often does a message from God come to us through a sword, a sorrow, a heavy blow (20)!

(4) Shamgar (31).—When it is said (30) that the land had rest for eighty years, it probably refers to that part of Canaan which lay east of the Jordan, and had been oppressed by Moab; but the other side, which lay south-west, was infested by Philistines, against whom Shamgar made head. Deborah afterwards told how far-spread their depredations had been (v. 6). An ox-goad would be simply a piece of pointed iron, 6 or 8 ft. long; but, though a formidable weapon, it would have failed to do this deed, unless God had been mighty with its owner. What may not the weakest weapons do with God behind them!

MONDAY, AUGUST 19.—Judges IV.

Israel again rebelled against God; and this time Jabin, King of Hazor, was the oppressor permitted to bring them to repentance. His city had been razed once; but, through the supineness of Israel, had been built again, and his kingdom partially re-established (Josh. xi. 1—10). He must have been a very formidable foe, and his tyranny was very bitter (3).

(1) Deborah, the Joan d'Arc of her time, was the prime mover in their deliverance. She was a prophetess, living in communion with God, possessed of remarkable insight into his will, and able to communicate it in glowing words. She was full of patriotic ardour, which she infused into others.

(2) Barak, the soldier, had much more confidence in her heroic courage than in the Lord or in his soldiers, and therefore failed to win the complete reward which faith and bravery had otherwise obtained (9). How much easier is it to rely on our fellows than on God.

(3) The defeat of Sisera's host (10—16).—The tribes of Zebulun and Naphtali chiefly bore the brunt of this conflict, which set them free from the tyranny which had lain especially heavily upon the luxuriant plain of Esdraelon. How sweet it is to know when the Lord is going before us; though this does not make our best efforts superfluous (14). The Lord will ever discomfit the foes of those who follow Him.

(4) Jael (17—24) was the heroine of the day. At first she doubtless intended to show true Eastern hospitality, and then was seized by the impulse of ridding the land of her adoption of the instrument of Jabin's authority. A tent peg sufficed for the grim deed of vengeance. Those were wild days, matched by the Border wars of Scotch and British history; and through all a Divine purpose ran, which, though not condoning these deeds of violence, wrought through all for the people, beloved for their fathers' sakes.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 20.—Judges V.

One of the noblest songs in history, composed by Deborah herself (7).

(1) Its opening notes are praise (1—5).—Whatever merit was attaching to Barak and his army, the glory of victory was with God. Oh, how negligent we are in the high praises of God; and how much easier would prayer and trust be if mingled more constantly with thanksgiving. The kings of surrounding lands were plotting to destroy the chosen people, and they are bidden to hear what God had wrought, lest they meddle with them to their hurt.

(2) The distress of Israel (6—8).—No trade on the highways; no safe travelling; no tillage of the country, because the villagers had fled to the towns; no administration of justice, because war had invaded the gates, where the courts were kept; no arms of defence. And all because they had chosen new gods.

(3) The muster (9—18).—The governors first made themselves freewill gifts, and the tidings of their devotion would long be rehearsed beside the village wells, no longer held by the foe. And then the songstress summons Barak and herself to yet higher ascriptions of praise (12). He must be on fire who would make others glow. Reuben came not, because of conflicting opinions; Dan and Asher stayed by their ships and creeks; Meroz, though so near the field of battle, remained neutral, and was cursed. The complaint of God is not only against such as do wrong, but who do not do right. Neutrality is accursed.

(4) The battle (19—22), in which nature seemed to combine against the foe.

(5) Sisera's death (23—27) described in highly poetic phrase.

(6) The anxiety of the harem to hear the news of the fight (28—30). What a contrast between their disappointment and the realised hopes of the Church when Jesus returns from the last great fight! The closing words beautifully harmonise with Matt. xiii. 43.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 21.—Judges VI.

(1) Midianite oppression (1—6).—Israel's sin brought suffering, and this time from an almost despicable quarter, because Midian had been severely punished, and almost annihilated on their passage through their territory (Numb. xxxi. 7). The invaders seem to have possessed themselves of all the valleys, where there would be pasturage for their flocks, &c., driving the Israelites up into the hills. Their sorrows again drove them to their knees, and they cried to the Lord. Alas! that God has so often to drive men to Himself.

(2) An unknown prophet (7—10) was sent to rebuke the people. Before God delivers, in answer to our appeals, He shows us the cause of our sorrow, and impresses on us the lessons we should learn.

(3) The commission to Gideon (11—24) was given by an angel, who was evidently the Angel-Jehovah (14). Doubtless the thoughts to which Gideon gave expression were familiar to his mind from long reasonings. How well is it to pour out our hearts to God! He was alone, threshing the little quantity of wheat, for which no oxen were needed, and hiding it in an unlikely spot. He was very humble and unassuming: such are the men whom God employs. Ah! what strength there is in one of the Lord's looks (14); and how tenderly He provides materials on which faith can build (21).

(4) The destruction of idols (25—32) must precede all successful and victorious work. We must dare to do this, at whatever cost of personal feeling in those dearest to us (Matt. x. 37, 38).

(5) God's condescension to allay his fears (33—40).—We must not be always looking for signs. God often guides us by our sanctified reason. Yet there are indications sometimes afforded to those (Heb. xii. 17) who are led to claim them. Thank God for two immutable things.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 22.—Judges VII.

Another example of early rising, of which the Bible is so full (1). 32,000 were too many for God, lest Israel should vaunt itself. Many of us are too strong for God to make use of us (2).

(1) The test (3—8).—Two methods were employed for thinning the army. First, the usual proclamation was made (Deut. xx. 8). Then the way in which the soldiers drank was carefully observed. Those that threw themselves at full length were evidently apt to prefer their own comfort and refreshment to their soldierly self-denial, which prefers duty to pleasure; these were, therefore, dismissed. And the little body which remained was specially equipped; taking no more victuals than they could easily carry, because the campaign would be short in spite of the numbers of the foe. A good equipment for the Christian, a light to shine, a trumpet to proclaim the victory of Jehovah; though at the best we are but earthen vessels (2 Cor. iv. 6, 7). "God counts hearts, not heads." (Rev. J. M'Neill).

(2) Encouragement (9—15).—What a graphic picture! The leader listening under the covert of the night, and worshipping on the spot, and returning with new courage to make his careful preparations. If a cake of barley-bread overthrew a tent what may not we do, if our God use us? Oh, to be nothing, nothing! Not wheat, but barley!

(3) Victory (16—25).—The terror produced by the crashing vessels, the flashing lights, the blowing of trumpets filled Midian with panic, and they fled. We shall do more execution against Satan's kingdom by blowing the Gospel trumpet, and by shining, even though we be broken in the attempt than by our most splendid arguments. The two princes of Midian also fell. Oreb signifies a raven; Zeeb a wolf. This was the day of Midian (Isa. ix. 4).

FRIDAY, AUGUST 23.—Judges VIII.

The benefit of a soft answer is well illustrated in the opening verses (1—3). Those who are most reluctant to undertake difficult services are quickest to find fault with such as carry them through to success. So the Ephraimites found fault. But Gideon ruled his spirit, and behaved with true magnanimity and meekness (Prov. xiii. 10, xv. 1).

The pursuit of noble ends amid discouragement (4—12).—How little does the world understand the faintness which overtakes the Christian warrior, never losing sight of his high purpose, yet often sorely in need of sympathy and help, which is not always given. We, however, are not at liberty to imitate Gideon in his threats of vengeance, which he terribly realised (13—17).

The infliction of condign punishment (18—21).—Gideon constituted himself the avenger of the blood of his brethren. Do all Christians bear themselves as the children of a King? (19). A notable sentence is that which repeats an old proverb that a man's strength is the outcome of his inner self. Force proportioned to character.

The refusal of a generous request (22—35).—Rule, because thou hast delivered. Should we not say that to Christ? (Luke i. 74). But how soon the impulse was shadowed by ingratitude (35). And the ephod, which Gideon may have made in good faith, was turned to very evil uses. An ephod was a rich sacerdotal garment. Thus evil is often wrought for want of thought, as well as from want of heart. What we do innocently may become a terrible snare to others, and it becomes us to consider each act, not only as it is in itself, but as it may affect others (2 Cor. vi. 3).

SATURDAY, AUGUST 24.—Judges IX.

Abimelech's conspiracy (1—6).—How strong is the lust of power which will make men do the most abominable crimes to gain their ends; wading through seas of blood. The men of Shechem aided and abetted Abimelech, and then made him king.

Jotham's parable (7—21).—Government over men costs a great deal, and many a man has had to buy it by renouncing ease and comfort and many other delights. The vilest are sometimes exalted (Ps. xii. 8). What a contrast between trusting in the shade of a bramble and in the shade of the great rock (Isa. xxxii. 2).

The intrusion of discord (22—29).—For only three short years did the usurper enjoy his ill-gotten place. Trouble soon broke out between him and his new subjects. Having combined to do wrong, they now divided against each other to their mutual destruction. Gaal was son of Ebed, which means a slave, and was perhaps descended from Hamor (Gen. xxxiv).

The destruction of Shechem (30—49).—How much evil one traitor, or rebel, may work in any fortress. The power of Satan against us is immensely increased by a traitorous heart within. The people trusted in the protection of their god and were miserably disappointed. How different to our lot (Ps. xxvii. 5; Prov. xviii. 10).

The fate of Abimelech (50—57).—Abimelech thought much less of his character with God before whose presence he was soon to appear than he did of his credit with man (54). This fact which he was so anxious to conceal is the one thing remembered of him (2 Sam. xi. 21). Though wickedness may prosper for a time, yet is its end sure and terrible (Ps. xxxvii).

Sunday Afternoon, August 25.

The Anointing of David.—1 Sam. xvi. 1—13.

Golden Text: Ver. 7.

Saul had been set aside for his disobedience as unfit to govern the people of God. But the failure of "the man after the people's heart" (x. 23) makes way for introducing the "man after God's heart." At this time David was, perhaps, about seventeen years of age.

Ver. 1—5,—"Samuel mourned for Saul" (xv. 35)—no doubt for Saul's sake. It was impossible to witness without grief the failure of a career which opened with so much promise. He could acquiesce in his rejection as perfectly right, while mourning over him, as Jesus over Jerusalem (Luke xix. 41). Samuel mourned, also, for the kingdom's sake. When but a child, he had seen Eli rejected; and, as an old man, he sees Saul more completely fail. What could the nation do with a God-forsaken king? But the question "How long?" suggests that Samuel's grief was in danger of becoming excessive. It appeared too much like distrust of God. "I have rejected him."—Prolonged grief cannot help either Saul or the kingdom. He has been righteously set aside—not only as a punishment for his disobedience, but for the benefit of the people. Why not trust God to take care of the kingdom? His interest in it is not less than Samuel's, and He can find a way of deliverance which Samuel cannot see. How soon our tears would be dried, if we did but remember that what God does is right, and that his resources are inexhaustible.

"Fill thine horn," &c.—Action for the ultimate good of Israel was better than immoderate grief over its present distress. To remedy the evil is more important than to grieve over it.

"Jesse the Bethlehemite."—Grandson of Boaz and Ruth (Ruth iv. 21, 22); an old man even at this time (xvii. 12). Samuel's thoughts never reverted to the family of Jesse. God has methods of deliverance that we cannot even guess. "I have provided Me a king." This fact was enough to assuage Samuel's grief. He may rest from anxiety concerning the kingdom, when God says, "I have rejected"; "I have provided." In righteousness one was set aside; in grace another was introduced, who was more worthy to reign. "How can I go?" (2).—As though God could not protect him in any enterprise on which He might send him. Yet how this fear reveals Samuel's estimate of the character of Saul. Though rejected by God, yet Saul would not hear of the appointment of a successor. His subsequent treatment of David proves Samuel's estimate of him to have been correct. "Sacrifice to the Lord."—This would remove Samuel's fear; and would be a sufficient reason for his visit. Chapter xx. 6 suggests that there was a yearly sacrifice at Bethlehem. Probably Samuel was sent to this, as a suitable time for anointing Saul's successor. There was no need for announcing any other object of his visit. To do so would have exasperated Saul, and therefore have placed Samuel's life in danger; and would have helped no one.

"Samuel came to Bethlehem" (4).—The city was about ten miles from Ramah, and six miles south of Jerusalem. The death of Rachel and the interesting history of Ruth already made the place memorable. But its chief glory was to consist in being the birthplace of "David's Greater Son." See Gen. xxxv. 19; Ruth i. 22; Micah v. 2.

"Trembled at his coming."—Why should they? "The breach between Samuel and Saul may have made the elders afraid of incurring the royal displeasure by welcoming him."—Cambridge Bible. Or, did the fear arise that, as Samuel had just reproved Saul for his sin, so he had come to deal similarly with them? "Sanctify yourselves" (5).—See Gen. xxxv. 2; Exod. xix. 10, 14. These ceremonial purifications are symbolical of inward purification. A prepared heart is an indispensable condition of true worship.

Ver. 6—13.—Before sitting down to the feast 11), the sons of Jesse are made to pass before Samuel. Only the three eldest are mentioned by name. Eliab, Abinadab, and Shammah (6, 8, 9). These are the three sent out to war against the Philistines (xvii. 13). The "seven sons" (10) include these three; for Jesse had "eight sons" in all (xvii. 12). When Samuel saw Eliab (called Elihu in 1 Chron. xxvii. 18), he judged him to be the Lord's choice. Probably he was in stature what Saul had been. "Look not on his countenance" (7).—The first king had been chosen partly on account of his kingly appearance. Other qualities were to determine God's choice of the second king. Not the height of his stature, but the qualities of the mind and heart were the essentials of success. No man can alter his stature (Matt. vi. 27); but God can give to any man who trusts Him, "a clean heart and a right spirit." Covet these gifts, which are of the highest value. "Man looketh on the outward appearance," &c. (7).—There is often the widest possible difference between the outward appearance and the heart. Men are much more concerned to appear right than to be right. Our judgment is often wrong because we can only see the outward appearance. God sees the heart—knows the motives, desires, affections. This truth should influence us in many ways. How cautious it should make us in judging others! How little value we should place upon the approval of men! How desirous we should be of having "a heart right with God!" "Keep thy heart with all diligence," &c. (Prov. iv. 23). "The Lord hath not chosen this" was true of all the seven who passed before Samuel (10). Jesse does not seem to have thought it necessary to introduce David. "He keepeth the sheep" (11).—God found his king where man never thought of looking for him. "It has often been God's way to find his agents in unexpected places. Here a great king is found in the sheepfold. In Joseph's time a prime minister was found in the prison. Our Lord found his chief apostle in the school of Gamaliel. The great reformer of the sixteenth century was found in a poor miner's cottage —Blaikie. Yet the employment of a shepherd was an excellent preparation for the kingly office. As king, his work was "to feed God's people" (Ps. lxxviii. 70, 71). See also Ezek. xxxiv. 22—24; and God's demand from the king in Jer. xiii. 20, "Where is thy flock?" &c. This view of the kingly office makes it a fit type of the kingdom of Him who is "the good Shepherd and giveth his life for the sheep." David did not cease to be a shepherd when he became a king. Moreover, his experience in defending his flock from wild beasts (xvii. 34—37) developed his courage in presence of danger, and strengthened his confidence in God. And in this employment he found opportunity for becoming familiar with the Book of God, and with his works in nature. His Psalms reflect much of his shepherd life. Faithfulness in his humble calling was therefore a good preparation for his future position. "He was ruddy" (12).—Nothing is said as to his stature. God made choice of him at a time when he had not developed any of those physical qualities which were so admired in Saul. "Samuel anointed him" (13).—There is nothing to indicate that the rest knew for what purpose this was done. Possibly even David did not know then. All would understand that it meant setting him apart for some special work for God; and upon David this thought would have a powerful effect. The thought of his high destiny would make him careful as to his own character and conduct. Note how the anointing is followed by enduement with the Spirit of God. The one symbolised the other, and was practically valueless without it. The Spirit left Saul (14); but He abode upon David "from that day forward" (13). This is the best equipment for office.

LESSONS.

(1) The qualities for which God chooses men (7).—Neither social position, nor age, nor appearance, but a true heart, a trustful, obedient spirit.

(2) Faithfulness in one position is rewarded with promotion to a higher.—David glorified God as a shepherd before God exalted him to be a king (Luke xvi. 10, xix. 17).

(3) Whom God calls to honourable and responsible positions He endues with his Holy Spirit.—He equips the servants whom He appoints.

ANTI-INFIDEL LITERATURE FOR THE ANTIPODES.—Mr. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, Mass., has received of late a large number of applications from Australia for supplies of his well-known tracts and pamphlets on Christian evidences and Gospel truth. Referring to this, Mr. John H. Mitchell, 306, City-road, London, E.C., writes: "I shall be glad to hear from friends desirous of lending a helping hand in sending a large case of Temperance, Christian, and Anti-Infidel literature, to be packed in about a month's time, for gratuitous circulation throughout Australia and New Zealand. Donations of approved sound literature, or subscriptions, for Mr. Hastings' or my own pamphlets, at cost price, will be thankfully received

AGRA TRAINING INSTITUTION.

Dr. Valentine, a former student of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, who is the superintendent of the Medical Missionary Training Institution at Agra, has been home since the spring on account of ill-health. We are glad to find, however, that he is so far restored as to contemplate returning to India in November next.

Writing of his work, Dr. Valentine says:—

"A young native Christian is supported and educated for the sum of £16 a year. The course extends over four years, so that for the sum of £64 in all, a fully qualified native medical missionary with the diploma of the Agra Government Medical College is sent out to labour in connection with the Missionary Society in which he has been reared. We have students from the following Societies labouring in Upper India:—The C.M.S., the S.P.G., the Church of Scotland, the U.P. Church of Scotland, the Baptist, the Episcopal Methodist, the Berlin Mission, and the American Presbyterian.

"Ever since the Institute was opened, we have conducted a Bible-reading every Wednesday evening. It has latterly been attended by from seventy to eighty British soldiers of the Station, among whom an important work of grace has taken place.

"Last year you noticed our work in The Christian, and the result was that all the students whom I had taken on in faith were provided with scholarships. Several of these scholarships, however, were only for one year, and this year by the death of one or more of the donors, and other causes, our scholarship fund is not equal to the number of students requiring aid.

"A number of other well-qualified Christian young men, who, before I left India, were under promise to join us, have failed to do so, as there were no scholarships for them; and the missionary sending them being unable to support them himself, my 'locum tenens' did not see his way to admit them into our Institution. This is all the more to be regretted, as the young men belong to one of the aboriginal tribes which the Lord has in a very special manner committed to the care and energy of the Christian Church." Dr. Valentine's address at present is Brechin, Forfarshire, N.B.

A NOTE OF THANKS.—Kindly intimate, through your paper, how delighted we are, out here, to get your paper and other periodicals for our own reading and distribution, in response to the appeal I sent you last year. Since then our Conference has changed me from Bristow, in Osborne Co., to the address below, where I shall be pleased to receive any literature to pass round among our people.—Yours truly,

Joseph Baker, M.E. Church.

THE WORK AT COSTERS' HALL, E.—The recent visit of nearly 1000 adults and children to Clacton-on-Sea was a great success. At the present time a number of deserving poor women are benefiting by a residence in the cottage for convalescents at Shacklewell-green. The great event of the month, however, which appears to have given pleasure all round, was the donkey show, the judges, the exhibitors, and the public being all alike satisfied. The owner of each animal which passed the judges received 7s. 6d. for loss of time, while something extra was given to the owners of the best-decorated animals, £10 altogether being voted from the Shaftesbury Memorial Fund for the purpose. The general influence of the show in promoting kind treatment of the animals throughout London has been very marked. A Seaside Home fund has been instituted at Costers' Hall by Mr. W. J. Orsman, and many are availing themselves of its help to spend a fortnight in the country. Mr. Orsman, the hon. superintendent of the work, and pastor of the Mission Church, has relinquished his position at the General Post Office, and will now devote the whole of his leisure time to the work.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

On Sunday last the Bishop of Ripon preached at Osborne, his congregation including the Queen, the Emperor of Germany, Princess Christian, and Princess Beatrice.

The Bishop of London has left London for two months' entire rest. He has lately suffered from an affection of the eyes, which still causes considerable anxiety to his friends.

Canon Roberts, who was recently collated by the Bishop of Llandaff to a residentiary stall in Llandaff Cathedral, has resigned the incumbency of Dowlais, in order to be at liberty to devote himself to mission work in the diocese.

Rev. R. W. Enraght, the well-known ritualist, who was deprived of his benefice of Holy Trinity, Bordesley, after several months of imprisonment in Warwick Gaol, has been elected at the head of the poll for the rural deanery of Stepney, as clerical representative in the London Diocesan Conference.

The work which has been hitherto done by the parish of St. Jude's, South Kensington, in St. Mark's, Whitechapel, is to be transferred in the autumn, with the approval of the Bishop of Bedford and the vicar, to the mother parish, St. Mary's. Dr. Forrest, the vicar of St. Jude's, Kensington, hopes to raise at least £300 a year for the stipend of an assistant curate and other purposes in Whitechapel, and to send a large band of workers there on two or three days of each week. Besides the above help, the parish of St. Jude's has for many years given assistance of a similar kind to the parishes of St. Clement's and St. James's, Fulham.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A projected union of Presbyterians and Congregationalists in Japan has fallen through. The various sections of the Presbyterian family united in 1887.

The statistics of the American Southern Presbyterian Church, just prepared, show that it has 13 synods, 68 presbyteries, 1145 ministers, 2321 churches, and 161,742 communicants.

"Children's Day" will be observed by the English congregations on October 20, when addresses to the young, specially prepared by Dr. Monro Gibson, will be read rom the pulpits.

BAPTIST.

There are 873 Baptist Churches in New York State, of which 747 are in country and village districts. Of the whole number 536 are fully self-supporting. An average of 200 are pastorless year by year.

Services have been resumed in the Baptist Chapel at Johnstown, Pa., which was seriously damaged by the recent disastrous flood. It is hoped that very soon the regular services will be re-established. The work of putting the meeting-house in order is being pushed orward.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon has returned to his congregation at the South-street Baptist Chapel, Greenwich, after his tour round the world. At a "welcome home" a few days ago he praised the Lord who had ever stood by him; protecting him from many dangers, and bringing him home again with earnest joy.

In connection with the Northcote-road Baptist Church, Clapham Junction, a meeting of young men was held a few days ago, for the purpose of forming a Young Men's Association. Rev. C. E. Stoke presided, and Mr. Harry Swift, who for some time past has held together over forty young men in a Bible-class, explained that the proposed association would be similar in character to a Y.M.C.A. All present having been enrolled as members or associates, officers were elected.

METHODIST.

The American Southern Methodist Episcopal Church, has now 1,140,097 members, including 4958 Indians and 645 Negroes. The net increase for the year was 32,641. There are 4687 travelling and 6303 local preachers.

An extraordinary evangelistic effort is being made at Tredegar by Rev. S. Atkinson and Mr. R. Cory, of Cardiff. Headed by two bands, upwards of 5000 persons have joined in procession, and held a service on the hill-side, despite unfavourable weather.

The seventy-first annual conference of the Bible Christian Connexion has been held at Holsworthy, Devon. Rev. M. Brokenshire, of Bristol, was elected president for the ensuing year. Rev. C. Thornton, rector of Holsworthy, opened his church and grounds to the Conference, and invited the members to an organ recital.

Wesleyan Methodism has for many years held a commanding position in Willenhall, where there are four chapels and two resident ministers. The congregation at Union-street Chapel numbers on a Sunday evening some 900 to 1000 persons. The need for more accommodation has been felt for some time; and an enlargement scheme is now being carried out.

The Wesleyan Conference refused, by a large majority, to grant the request of the Institute of Journalists, that professional reporters should be admitted to the Representative Session. The Methodist Times holds the refusal to be a great mistake, and says: "It would serve us right if all the leading journals now followed the example of The Times, and refused to publish any report of the Conference until we extended to their representatives the courtesy and consideration shown by every other ecclesiastical assembly."

SALVATION ARMY.

Good times are reported from Newcastle, successful meetings being conducted by Captain Cox, assisted by her two Lieutenants. During the past week twelve souls sought salvation.

The Assistant Field Secretary, accompanied by the junior soldiers' headquarter's staff band, paid a visit to Clapton on Sunday, holding several in and out of door meetings. Wonderful times of power and blessing were experienced.

Enthusiastic meetings have been held in connection with the anniversary of the opening of the Corps at Crieff. Captain Davies, together with Captain Whyte and Lieutenant Warren, conducted the proceedings, resulting in fifteen souls seeking Christ.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

After encountering and overcoming many difficulties and obstacles, the John Bright University at Wichita nears completion. Kansas Friends and others will be much helped by it.

That the Friends keep to the front on the Peace Question is proved by the fact that they were the only Church represented as such as the recent Congress in Paris. There were delegates present from England and America.

For over 200 years there has been a general meeting every year at Armscott, an old meeting-house, on the borders of Worcestershire and Warwickshire. On Sunday, Aug. 4, an exceedingly interesting and profitable time was experienced at well-attended meetings. Quite a number of Friends from the neighbourhood attended. The visitors included Geo. Wood, of Luton, Wm. W. Brown, of Evesham, and Wm. Hobson, of Cardiff, by appointment of Western Quarterly Meeting.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. A. H. Byles, B.A., of Leamington, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate of the church worshipping at the Tabernacle, Hanley.

Rev. J. Ossian Davies, after a month's holiday, resumed his pastoral duties on Sunday at Richmond-hill Church, Bournemouth. The popularity of Mr. Davies has warranted an appeal for a new church and schools, at a cost of £10,000.

Womanby Chapel, Cardiff, first erected in 1691, immediately after the passing of the Toleration Act, has been closed. The Charity Commissioners have given their approval to a scheme for the sale of the chapel, and the erection, with the proceeds, of a new one at Canton, in the immediate neighbourhood.

The University of Yale has conferred the degree of D.D. on Rev. A. M. Fairbairn, principal of Mansfield College, Oxford. The University will be represented at the opening, in October, of Mansfield College, by Rev. Charles Ray Palmer, son of the well-known hymn writer.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Rev. George W. Wilson, an evangelist of the Illinois Methodist Conference, U.S.A., conducted, by special request, in Lurgan, last week, a series of Gospel services, which were attended by very blessed results.

A special Gospel mission, conducted by Mrs. J. H. Caldwell, of America, is now in progress at Bray, co. Wicklow. Two meetings have been held daily, and several souls have already been won for Christ.

Messrs. Carleton and Crawford, two evangelists of the Irish Evangelisation Society, have just closed a seven weeks' series of services in a tent at Bovevagh. There was a large attendance night after night. A great interest in Divine things was awakened in the neighbourhood, and many who before were careless are believed to have accepted Christ as their Saviour.

One of the tents from the recent Fenaghy meetings has been removed to Eglush, co. Antrim. From the first the people have come great distances, and the power of the Lord has been manifest. The meetings will be continued for some time; they are in charge of Mr. James Thompson, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, who is assisted by members of the Ballymena Y.M.C.A.

During the past four weeks a series of evangelistic services has been held in one of the Methodist tents at Banbridge by Rev. James Stewart, assisted by Rev. R. Crawford Johnson, Mr. E. J. Johnson, Mr. Dixon, and others. There was a very large attendance, especially on the Sabbath evenings, and many, including some who may be described as the outcasts of society, have professed to have been led to decision for Christ.

A fortnight's meetings have just been conducted in Caddy School, near Randalstown, co. Antrim, by Mr. McLean, Baptist minister, from Dumbarton. The interest deepened each night, and the attendance increased so much that some of the meetings had to be conducted in the open air. The expositions given were original and masterly. Believers have been much encouraged; scores of unsaved persons have professed conversion; and on all hands there seems to be the opinion that no such successful meetings have ever been held in this neighbourhood before.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The session of the Congregationa Church Theological Hall in George-square, Edinburgh, was closed with a social meeting, at which a number of friends of the Church were present. After tea, the chairman, Mr. John Robertson, Dundee, gave an address regarding the aims of the hall, and Rev. John Pillans, Huntley, delivered the annual address, taking as his subject, "The Importance of Preparation for the Ministry." Five students who had completed their course were afterwards presented with certificates by the chairman.

A new Established Church is to be erected as soon as possible in the upper district of Inverness, near Broadston.

Dr. McNair, of Edinburgh, formerly pastor of Orangefield Church, Greenock, has been struck with paralysis. He was founder of The Scottish Baptist Magazine.

Relative to a report on the examination of students, presented in Ayr Free Presbytery, a discussion recently arose, in the course of which Rev. J. W. Findlay said he believed the Wesleyan Methodists were wise in regarding a man's personal religion as the first thing. He thought the Free Church took these things too much for granted. Rev. W. M. Macgregor expressed the opinion that questions about personal religion were apt to become formal.

Rev. John Robertson, of Stonehaven, in accepting the call to the M'Crie-Roxburgh Church, informed the Presbytery of Fordoun that there had been focussed on his path lights Divine, human, and infernal, and he now humbly and clearly, sorrowfully and gladly, saw the will of God. Mr. Mitchell, one of the commission from the Stonehaven congregation, stated that their common feeling was that if Mr. Robertson left them they would never see his equal. Mr. Robertson's induction at Edinburgh is to take place on September 19.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Mr. John Macdonald, the first general secretary of the Free Church of Scotland, and who, along with Dr. Chalmers and Mr. Archibald Bonar, took an active part in working out the details of the Sustentation Fund scheme.—Rev. George Tindal, of Driffield, the oldest minister of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, who was associated with Hugh Bourne, Flesher, and Clowes, the founders of the denomination.—Mr. John Hocken, of Fowey, Cornwall, who during many years took an active part in Sunday-school and Band of Hope work.—Rev. Jason Jenkyns, formerly of Penarth, an earnest Welsh Congregational minister.—Mr. William Atkinson, deacon of Ramsden-street Congregational Church, Halifax, for forty years, and specially devoted to the cause of making known the Gospel among the Jews.—Rev. Wm. Burnside, Methodist minister, Monaghan, in the fifty-ninth year of his ministry.—Mr. Robert Crawford, J.P., Sligo, for many years a devoted Methodist.—Mr. Joseph Stewart, of Gortin, Coalisland, a devoted Presbyterian and an exemplary Christian.—Deborah C. Thomas, of Baltimore, well known and loved by Friends in England as well as America.

Christian workers will find these stories, in all of which the way of life is clearly set forth, very useful for distribution. Mr. Holness has also issued a third edition of "A Bright Example of a Christian Soldier who nobly showed his Colours," being, in brief, the story of the life of John Perry, late Quartermaster-Sergeant 1st 14th Regiment (1d.).

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

At the opening of a new Home of Rest at Chiswick, Dr. Norman Kerr said religious influences greatly helped the cure of inebriety.

A united temperance demonstration (the Church of England excepted) took place recently at Northwich, and was a great success.

Mr. T. O. Wethered, late M.P. for Marlow, complains that on the official staff of the Church of England Temperance Society abstainers are in a large majority.

Mr. H. W. Pearson, Liverpool, has won the £10 prize on "What has drink done for trades unions?" He strongly condemns holding union meetings in public-houses.

Miss Robinson says the work in connection with the Soldiers' Home, Portsmouth, by inducing habits of sobriety and industry, has helped to reduce the local poor-rate.

The "Special" of The British Weekly assigns drink as the chief curse of the Manchester poor, and says many of the mill girls suffer much on account of the intemperance of their mothers.

An enthusiastic temperance meeting was held in connection with the Representative Session of the Wesleyan Conference, Sheffield. Dr. Jenkins presided, and the speakers were Rev. Charles Garrett, Mr. H. J. Atkinson, M.P., Mr. W. D. Stephens (Newcastle), and Rev. G. L. Daniels.

The Globe points out that the offer of an East-end publican to pay half the cost of the interment of the latest Whitechapel victim was self-interested. The procession was to start from his house, and he would be amply recouped. Another contemporary remarks that this is a characteristic of liquor charities.

Much regret is felt at the intimation that Sir W. Jenner has ordered the Queen whisky and Apollinaris. It appears Her Majesty has been taking champagne and claret, but is advised to give them up for the present. It is a pity we cannot quote Her Majesty's example for teetotalism as we can for so many other noble virtues.

FOREIGN.

Temperance is progressing rapidly in Norway.

In Western Africa one hundred gallons of rum can be bought for 7s. 3½d.

In the Madras Presidency the drink revenue amounts to between £800,000 and £900,000.

The 500 dollar licence system of Chicago has not decreased the consumption of drink.

Des Moines, Sioux City, Cedar Rapids, and Topeka, U.S.A., have prospered greatly since they adopted prohibition.

The author of "An American Temperance Scamper" seldom saw the drink traffic in such full swing as in New York and Brooklyn.

In the province of Bombay it is now illegal to remove from place to place, without permit, more than one gallon of fermented toddy (the produce of toddy trees).

The consumption of wine, spirits, and beer per head is in the United States 12 gallons, and in Canada 4 gallons. Great Britain, unfortunately, reaches 30 gallons.

Dr. Olivier, Havre, attributes the excessive prevalence of typhoid fever in Normandy to cider drinking. He says the cider is, as a rule, made of stagnant water, and that the microbes are not destroyed during fermentation

The Danmark Alpholdsforennig (Temperance League of Denmark) held its annual meeting recently at Veile, when substantial progress was reported. It is estimated that there are now fifty thousand teetotalers in Denmark.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING AT EASTBOURNE.—The Eastbourne Town Council on Monday discussed the question of open-air preaching and children's services on the sea front, about which many visitors and residents had complained. Most of the Council strongly condemned the practice, urging that it was needless, as Eastbourne had places of worship sufficient to meet all needs. Visitors objected to be "preached at," as they attended watering-places for quiet, rest, and recreation. Almost by a full vote the town council decided not to allow preaching on the slopes of the Wish Tower facing the sea. This is a regrettable action, which may, we trust, yet be reversed by the authorities.

THE LONDON TRAM-MEN.—The difficulties between the London tram-men and the directors of the companies do not seem any nearer solution. The union formed to promote the interests of the employés has met with the greatest opposition from the directors, and, it would seem from the testimony of Rev. F. Barclay, chairman of the union, that such a system of terrorism exists that "the men dare not pay their contributions to the society, because if they do so, and are found out, they will receive immediate dismissal." This is far from creditable to the companies concerned. The men undoubtedly have a grievance, and should at any rate be allowed a fair hearing.

In many halls they preach the glorious Gospel, and are diligent in visiting from house to house.

SPECIAL NEED is the cause of this appeal.

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm (not only cut off from the comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid), may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

HELP WANTED FOR THE TOILERS OF THE DEEP.

TEN Mission Vessels now cruise with the Trawling Fleets, each being at once a CHURCH, DISPENSARY, LIBRARY, and CLUB. Funds are required to provide a Mission Vessel for EVERY FLEET, and for the maintenance of the HOSPITAL MISSION SHIPS Queen Victoria and Albert. The urgent necessity of these floating Hospitals is shown by the fact that during last year over 7,000 cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated on board the Dispensary of the Mission Vessels. WHO WILL HELP? Large or small Offerings will be thankfully acknowledged.

THE SHEPHERD PSALM: MEDITATIONS on the 23rd PSALM.

JUST OUT.

"The Lord is my Shepherd: I shall not want."

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

(OF REGENT'S PARK CHAPEL).

In a Pocket Volume, Cloth boards, 1s.;
Superior Edition—Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 1s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

"The Psalm of Psalms."	Comfort through the Rod and the Staff.
The Shepherd-Lord.	"The Banquet."
Pastures of Tender Grass and Waters of Rest.	"Thou anointest my head with oil."
"He Restoreth my Soul."	The Overflowing Cup.
The Shepherd's Leading.	The Celestial Escort.
The Valley of Shadow.	"The House of the Lord for ever."

"Mr. Meyer always displays the force of a vital personality in his exposition of Scripture. It is this which attracts crowds to listen to his spoken addresses; and these never lose their force by being put into print. In the unfolding of the Shepherd Psalm he tells the story of its influence upon his own heart and life, and indicates subtle beauties which may have escaped the reader's notice. . . .

"This exposition is the work of a poet; it gives the precious fruit of searching, spiritual insight, and cannot fail to bring comfort to many a troubled heart, for it assures us that there is 'no want' to the man who lives under the shepherd-care of God. It is needless to add that the little volume is studded with gems of thought."—Christian Leader, July 11, 1889.

NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

PULVERMACHER'S WORLD-FAMED GALVANIC BELTS, for the cure of NERVOUS DISEASES, have received Testimonials from three Physicians to Her Majesty the Queen and the leading Physicians of Nine London Hospitals, including Forty Members of the Royal College of Physicians of London.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, Loss of MUSCULAR POWER, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, PARALYSIS, EPILEPSY, &c., are speedily removed by means of Pulvermacher's World-famed Galvanic Belts, which convey the electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of premature waste and decay.

Dr. C. HANDFIELD JONES, F.R.C.P., F.R.S., Physician to St. Mary's Hospital, says: "I am satisfied that Mr. PULVERMACHER is an honest and earnest labourer in the field of science, and I think he deserves to meet with every encouragement from the profession and scientific men."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of a LADY at BURNHAM (SOMERSET)—"BOTH LUNGS DISEASED."

I have recently heard from Miss PRESS, an old patient of mine, who keeps her medicine by her for immediate use in case of any fresh cold. Writing me in April of this year, she says:—

"I feel that I must write specially to thank you for your medicine. I fully believe that without it I should have died. I was so ill when I first took it. I had been under doctors, who did me no good. As a last resort my friends persuaded me to try your medicine. After four months' perseverance I was able to go out again. I had been examined by four doctors, who all said both lungs were diseased, and after my recovery under you they told me the lungs were healed.

"Thus God blessed your medicine in restoring me, so that I could see to my home duties and attend to my invalid mother. I take it occasionally whenever I feel any symptom. It always does me good. Make any use of this in any way you please.—(Miss) S. A. PRESS, Burnham, Somerset.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

That BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR possesses very valuable qualities as a food for all classes, at all periods of life except earliest infancy, has been attested by eminent dietetic authorities, as well as by universal public experience during over thirty years.

Interested attempts to set aside these facts in favour of other foods only appeal to ignorance and prejudice, and it remains true that no other kind of food can serve the special purposes of Corn Flour.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Andrew Murray, of Cape Town, and President of the Cape General Mission.

Canon Taylor's statement that vast numbers of natives are annually converted to Islam is contradicted by Rev. R. Bateman, of Amritsar, who reports to the Church Missionary Society that he has made inquiries from experienced natives, and has been confirmed in his own impression that such conversions are extremely rare.

We would call special attention to the letter from Rev. F. Baldey, in another column, urging that a fund be inaugurated to enable missionaries who are at home and preachers, who are unable to pay their own expenses, to share in the privileges of the Keswick Convention. Difficulties of arranging for the recognition of a considerable number of visitors at Convention time being very great, it is absolutely necessary that those who undertake the proposed scheme should know some time beforehand to what extent the funds at their disposal will allow them to go. We believe that the reflex benefit upon many a town and village congregation would be very great, and we earnestly hope the matter will receive the prompt support of those who have themselves received blessing at Keswick.

The new edition of Canon Liddon's "Bampton Lectures" has a preface in which the so-called New Reformation is dealt with, and in it the Doctor says:—

> When there is no longer any relic of a claim to bridge over the awful chasm which sin has opened between earth and heaven, or to satisfy any one of the deeper needs of the human soul, it is better, in the interests of the honest use of language, to drop the phraseology of Christian faith. Other names had better be assigned to a "Reformation" which reforms Christianity out of existence, and to an "exquisite Christian heritage," which consists only of such "feeling" as exists in rich abundance beyond the frontiers of Christendom.

Canon Liddon believes, however, that the "destructive criticism," although against its will, does good service to the Christian faith. He says:—

> It clears away the brushwood which in many well-meaning but confused souls obscures the interval between an infidel premiss and its real conclusion; and it exhibits the naked truth that between the adoration of our Lord Jesus Christ as God, and the rejection of Him altogether, there is no reasonable standing ground. When this alternative is once presented to a religious and well-ordered mind there are profound moral instincts—not to speak of a higher assistance which comes from heaven—that may be trusted to solve the problem. "Lord, lift Thou up the light of thy countenance upon us."

The national monument at Plymouth, Massachussets, which has been thirty years in construction, was last week dedicated to the commemoration of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. The monument consists of a large statue of Faith, with the historic scenes depicted of the departure of the Pilgrims from England, and their arrival at Plymouth Rock. A more lasting testimony however, will be found in the very constitution of American society, testifying as it does to the manner in which God overrules for his glory the oppression of his saints.

The recent issue of a volume of "Readings from the Works of F. D. Maurice," by Rev. Llewellyn Davies, will do much to remove the impression which has so long obtained that Professor Maurice was heterodox in his views of the divinity of Christ, for in more than one eloquent passage which Mr. Davies quotes, it is clearly made evident that the great preacher was in this respect at least orthodox in the highest degree. "Without believing in the divinity of Christ," says a reviewer, "Maurice found it impossible to believe in God. The universe afforded him no object worthy of loving worship apart from Christ. Jesus Christ was, for him, the keystone of the bridge between God and man, and if Christ were removed, universal theology crashed back, for him, into chaos."

It is stated that a Japanese Commissioner who was specially sent to England to report upon the condition of these islands under Christianity, has placed great stress upon the unhappy prevalence of drunkenness, and has recommended the Japanese not to adopt the Christian religion. There is ground for shame and regret in this, but Christianity is more powerful than official recommendation, and the promise and assurance of Christ: "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me," holds good of the Japanese as of all other nations.

The Times three column notice of Mr. Wilfred Ward's recent book, "William George Ward and the Oxford Movement," is interesting, not merely on account of the critical acumen which it displays, but also by reason of the valuable testimony against Rome which the article conveys. In allusion to Ward's eulogy of a French "Rule of Life," with its confession, and its sacramental services, the reviewer says:—

> In England it is quite needless to ask what it would make a man, supposing the teacher and the taught to be forthcoming, for no English boy or man will think it possible, or more than a dishonest hypocrisy. Something of the kind may be possible in France and in Ireland; but if it be a question of results, they cannot be said to speak well for the system in either of those countries.
> The ordinary Irish priest emerges from a hovel without furniture, without books, without anything to suggest that the world at large differs from his own bogside. It may be, perhaps, not very difficult to steam, press, harden, and dry him into a clerical counter.

The reviewer adds:—

> It may be safely said that if W. G. Ward had studied history, or theology, or Christian antiquities, nay—we mean no offence—the Bible itself, he would not have written this book—not at least as it stands.

"Let him take up his cross and follow Me" is the one rule of life to be followed, and there is not room for any French substitutes.

Unwilling to take the responsibility of risking the loss of the Protection of Children Bill, the opponents of the unsatisfactory qualification introduced by the House of Lords into the proposal, to prohibit the employment of children under ten in theatres, have accepted the compromise. That such a desirable clause should have been so pared down is to be regretted, but it is better than losing a very important social measure.

There is ground for fear lest the dispensing power given to magistrates should gradually become the rule, and lest it should grow to be a matter of course to grant the desired permission. The clause in its original form would have removed an anomaly; for why should not the principle of the Factory Acts apply to this case? Again, is it not the duty of parents to support their little children, and not vice versâ? especially by a species of employment which, in the words of Mr Winterbotham, M.P., "is full of risks and dangers to their purity and morality."

In these days of keen intellectual activity, of exaggerated deference to mere human knowledge, and of "breadth of thought" in the treatment of the most sacred themes, there is danger lest an unwary or an unwarned reader be sometimes led away from Scriptural truth. Thus, in a recent booklet entitled "The Sternness of Christ's Teaching" (being the Norrisian prize essay for 1888), the author, Mr. J. Bethune Baker, claims to prove that forgiveness is enjoined as a Christian duty only in those cases in which the transgressor has severely repented of his fault, just as the sinner has remission of his sins through Christ only upon repentance.

Furthermore, Mr. Baker asserts that "everything goes to show that in Christ's mind human forgiveness is exactly analogous to Divine forgiveness." But this contention will not stand the test of plain Scripture; we fail to discern that any such limitation is attached to our Lord's words in Matt. xviii. 21, 22, and submit that v. 35 of the chapter quoted, points to the conclusion that the "brother" is to be forgiven in the heart, whether the formal declaration of forgiveness be made at once, or deferred until repentance. In his book, "When Ye Pray," Rev. C. H. Walter beautifully says that so far as every Christian is concerned, Christ has borne his sins against other men as well as against God: that when we refuse to forgive, we refuse to accept his atonement and his sufferings as compensation for the offence given to ourselves.

We direct special attention to the reprint given in this issue of Mr. H. L. Hastings's well-known and able tract on "The Inspiration of the Bible." Already the circulation of this very useful lecture has been remarkably large, not only in England and America, but throughout the world. One object we have in reproducing it is to assist Mr. Hastings in the carrying out of a project for its free distribution on a larger scale than ever. Specially selected workers are ready to see that a million copies are systematically distributed in Great Britain as soon as the necessary funds are in hand. Mr. John King Hastings is now in England prepared to execute his father's wish that this should be done, and we believe that much good may, with God's blessing, result from such a broadcast vindication of Holy Writ from the contempt of those who know little or nothing of the book they assail. During the past two years seven hundred thousand copies of this racy and scholarly treatise of thirty-two pages have been circulated in Great Britain alone, and by his liberal grants of such literature to Christian labourers, Mr. Hastings has rendered valuable service to the cause of Gospel truth. Copies for free distribution are supplied at the special rate of £2 2s. per thousand, and Mr. Hastings makes a further offer (good only up to Oct. 15) to give a second thousand for each thousand so ordered to Christian workers who expressly ask for them.

In a letter to The Times, Mr. A. Baumann, M.P., has raised a just and timely protest against the action—or inaction—of the House of Lords' Committee on the sweating system, in having decided not to consider their report this session. He points out that this decision practically means the postponement for twelve or eighteen months of the possibility of any legislation on the subject, inasmuch as "any attempt at passing an Act or initiating a debate will be met by the ministerial argument that the Committee has not reported."

Lord Dunraven had, however, invited the Committee to consider his report on Aug. 5. There was every prospect of a prolonged session: the House of Lords is still sitting, and it is not too much to say that in the intervening time the report might have been finished and presented. "But, no," says Mr. Baumann; "the season is over, the yacht waits, the moor invites." That any practical attempt to grapple with one of our most pressing social problems should be thus indefinitely deferred is very greatly to be deplored, and reflects anything but credit upon the public spirit of the members of the Committee.

In the literature of the present day there are many pitfalls. Some writers—men of undoubted ability and apt to clothe their propositions in attractive garb—devote much of their talent to framing vague, high-titled systems to take the place of revelation. The subtle scepticism of a Herbert Spencer is more deadly than the obtrusive blasphemy of an Ingersoll. Nothing, forsooth, is to be believed which cannot be strictly proved, or which the finite human senses cannot grasp. It is well, therefore, when the falsity of such pretentions is exposed by men who have equal claim to be considered careful and accurate thinkers. The following is an extract from a recent sermon by the Bishop of Manchester, in which he dealt with the illusions of Agnosticism:—

> The theories of the life of the world and of the Church of God are opposite one to the other. Where the philosopher looks into his will and expects to find there the creative power and all that was best and noblest in his life, the humble believer looks not within, but above. The one thinks he will be guided by the light of his own understanding, but the other by the illuminating grace of the Almighty.

Surely the Agnostic correctly describes himself when he says that he "knows not." He cannot know so long as he tries to find out God intellectually, or to dispense with Him altogether. As has been said, "The mistake of the Agnostic is not the reverence which confesses ignorance of God, but the rashness which denies that He can reveal Himself or has revealed Himself to men."

It is pleasant to find a good space reserved in the half-yearly report of the directors of the London Gas Light and Coke Company for a reference to the employés. A medical return is made in relation to the health of the men; also as to the number of hours per day they work; to the rewards for regular attendance, and to pensions for old age, or in case of any disabling; and to the arrangements made for "the spiritual and educational necessities" of such workmen and their families as are remote from a settled neighbourhood. This is a feature of a public company's report that we should like to see oftener.

Mr. Caine, M.P., sends us a letter, with an enclosure which speaks of a most remarkable movement in Benares. A meeting was summoned in that great centre of idolatry in consequence of what had been said in the British House of Commons on the liquor traffic in India. A distinguished Brahmin, who had been trained in a mission college, and is the head of a large Hindoo brotherhood, took the chair. Through his powerful influence the caste of Ahirs, and other smaller castes, have, as the result of the strong feeling of the meeting, decided to prohibit all liquor drinking in their caste regulations. By the inexorableness of such regulations, from 40,000 to 50,000 of the people of Benares have become total abstainers. The drink-sellers are now appealing for a reduction in the price of their licences, on the ground that the sale of liquor is stopped. Such a unique movement among idolaters ought to furnish a lesson to our statesmen.

Much has been written in the papers on the refusal of the Eastbourne Town Council to allow open-air preaching on the sea front. We are glad to learn that the prohibition does not extend to the Children's Special Service Mission, for whose work a special site has been granted. It would, of course, be a very mistaken policy for the Council to interfere with these interesting meetings, for many families definitely select watering-places where such services are held, at which to spend their summer holiday; and with equal pleasure the children look forward to the morning and evening services, and to the afternoon games organised for their delectation.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a six days' mission by Mr. William Forbes, at Emmanuel Union Church, Harringay, commencing on Sunday, Aug. 25.——For God's blessing on Gospel meetings now being conducted in the "Good Shepherd's Schoolroom," Bethnal-green Junction, E.——For blessing in Piccarton, on work in a tent of the Ayrshire Christian Union, under Mr. Steadman.

THE Y.M.C.A. TRAINING SCHOOL, Springfield, Massachusetts, has issued its fourth annual report. The story is one of steady progress. During the year ending June 2, there were 72 students, representing twelve nationalities. The demand for secretaries and assistants has been such as to show that the work of the School is highly appreciated; indeed, though unable to supply the home field, the School has already been asked to furnish men for work abroad. In response to applications, 39 students made engagements to fill posts in connection with Y.M.C.A.'s. Additional buildings are proposed at an outlay of £25,000, in order to meet the increasing needs of the institution.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

THREE QUESTIONS.

Sir,—Could you kindly tell me:—

(1) How such passages as Ps. lxxii. 5—8; Ps. lxxviii. 69; Eccles. i. 4, &c.; are reconciled with such as Isa. li. 6; Heb. i. 10—12; 2 Pet. iii. 7—10, &c.? The former seem to teach that the earth will endure, and that Christ's kingdom will be upon it; the latter, that it will be destroyed.

(2) If the Saviour's kingdom is only for a thousand years on earth, can you give me a passage which proves it distinctly.

(3) I am often told by my fellow-workmen that the Chinese have records of their history reaching back beyond the time of the flood, and containing no mention of it. Is this true? In your "Notes on Daily Readings" on Genesis it said that every tribe on earth had some mention of the flood in its history.—Sincerely yours, An Inquirer.

ANSWERS.

(1) The latter passages imply change, as the verse quoted from Hebrews says: "They shall be changed." Isaiah li. 6 speaks of mundane things as fleeting—"and they that dwell therein shall die in like manner." 2 Peter is also quite in harmony with the passages which teach that the earth will be graciously preserved, for after the dissolution spoken of in chap. iii., we read of the world as having been constituted anew, not annihilated, (v. 13)—"new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (see also Rev. xxi.).

(2) According to Rev. xx. 4, 6, the saints will reign with Christ on the earth for a thousand years. Christ is now a King in a far country; during the millennium, his divine glory and power will be manifested in the eyes of the world as never before. In Dan. ii. 44 it is said of this Kingdom that it "shall stand for ever." In other words, it "shall never be destroyed," nor "be left to other people," but shall be the last, and endure until "God shall be all in all."

(3) Recent investigation as to the Chinese annals have shown that they go back no further than 1154 B.C. The Chinese themselves do not claim an earlier origin than about 2000 B.C. for their astronomy. As to the deluge, it is no longer dependent upon the veracity of the book of Genesis for its reception as a fact by intelligent people. "It has become," writes Sir J. W. Dawson, "a fact of ancient Assyrian history, a tradition preserved by many and various races, a pluvial or diluvial age, or time of subsidence, intervening between the oldest race of men known to geology and modern times." In reference to questions of this kind, solid information is easily accessible in "Present-day Tracts, Nos. 9, 13, 42 (4d. each. Religious Tract Society).

MR. W. R. BRADLAUGH commenced a three weeks' mission on Sunday last, among the men employed in the works of the Great Western Railway Company at New Swindon. Many had to remain standing during the whole of the service, unable to get a seat, quite a crowd gathering around the large tent in which the meetings are held. In addition to the regular services, Mr. Bradlaugh is delivering Christian Evidence lectures in the dinner-hour. Large quantities of anti-infidel literature are being given away. This is Mr. Bradlaugh's second visit to the same place within three months.

REV. JUSTIN D. FULTON, D.D., of Brooklyn, New York, preached at Exeter Hall on Sunday evening, to a crowded audience. Taking as his text 1 Tim. ii. 4, he announced his subject as "Good news for Romanists." After alluding to the work which he had been enabled to accomplish in the United States, and expressing the hope that the way might be opened for a campaign on this side the Atlantic, he proceeded to describe some of the errors of Romish teaching, and the thraldom of its victims. Referring to the principle of "intention," he showed that by the doctrine of the Church herself the members never could be certain of receiving even the blessings supposed to be conferred, inasmuch as the worshippers were never sure whether the priest had the "intention" to confer them. Dr. Fulton concluded an address lasting three-quarters of an hour, bristling throughout with incidents and facts, by showing the fulness and freeness of salvation in Jesus Christ.

Pastor Fritz Fliedner,

German Mission, Madrid.

THIS week we present to our readers a portrait of one who has for many years done important Christian work in the Spanish Peninsula.

Fritz Fliedner, the third son of Dr. Theodore Fliedner, the well-known founder of the Deaconess Institution at Kaiserswerth, on the Rhine, was born on June 10, 1845. His father was not only active in works of Christian charity, but, what is less known, a very zealous defender of evangelical truth against the power and deceit of Rome. Of his seven sons, six have become ministers of the Gospel, and are engaged in active work; the seventh is a physician. At the age of eighteen, his son Frederick, or Fritz, as he used to be called, entered upon University life, studying at Halle from 1864 till 1866, where he enjoyed the instruction and personal friendship of Dr. Tholuck. In 1866 he went as field deacon to the war of Prussia against Austria, devoting himself especially to the nursing of the soldiers in the great cholera lazarets at Brünn, the capital of Moravia. After the war he prosecuted his studies at Tübingen, under the venerable professor, Dr. Beck, till the end of 1867. He profited by the leisure of the Easter vacation for a journey to Italy, and witnessed the activity of the Waldensian churches in the struggle against Rome, which in its freshness reminded him of Reformation times; and the powerful influence of the Word of God upon people who hitherto had never heard it, won his heart for the work of evangelisation.

While engaged in the work of tuition his interest in the work of the Gospel in Roman Catholic countries moved him, in the spring of 1869, to take a journey through Spain, where he became acquainted with the first beginnings of evangelical life in that priest-ridden country, then newly opened to the Gospel. He succeeded in awaking the interest of friends in Germany on behalf of this field of labour, and, after being ordained at Düsseldorf, on August 17, 1870, he was sent out to form a connecting link between evangelical Germany and the Spanish brethren. So he entered on what has proved to be his life-work.

Other evangelical churches in America, Great Britain, Holland, and Switzerland, had sent missionaries and help to the confessors of the Gospel in Spain, and were actively at work. In Madrid Mr. Fliedner found four congregations already formed; the poorest was that of the first converted Spaniard, the late Don Francisco de Paula Ruet. Being without a place of worship, he helped them to take a hall which had formerly served as a dancing saloon, in the Calle Calatrava, 27. The only entrance was through a long, dark passage, and those wishing to attend could not do so without being disturbed by women who occupied the upper part of the house. The place, however, was taken and cleaned, texts were painted on the walls, and it was called the "Jesus Church." The next step was to hire rooms in three different houses for a boys', girls', and infants' schools. A superintendent was sent out from Germany to his help, three Spanish teachers were employed, and then began a trial of patience. It was the first Protestant school which required payment from the scholars. It was a matter of conscience with Mr. Fliedner to try to accustom the Spanish brethren to do something for themselves. For three months he waited with only twelve children; but after that time the schools began to grow, and now there are 250 scholars in one school, which, according to Spanish custom, has its own name, Hope College; and 150 in another, in one of the suburbs, which is called the College of Light, and was mainly sustained by the Presbyterian Church of Ireland. There are Sunday-schools connected with the day schools, and youths who have attended the primary schools for years are under instruction in the secondary school, preparatory to entering the University.

(From Photograph by Mr. F. Gutekunst, Philadelphia.)

Having, by the kindness of friends, been able to buy "Jesus Church" buildings, Mr. Fliedner turned his attention to the want and neglect to which some of the children attending the schools were exposed. There are houses in Madrid in which 250 families live, more than three families often occupying one room, into which light and air are only admitted by the door. Mr. Fliedner undertook the care of his first orphan, Maria Carrasco, without thinking of beginning an orphanage. He felt forced to do it by the misery in which the motherless girl was found. Some months afterwards one of the school children fell sick; she was a bright child of ten who had been a little missionary in her sphere, teaching the children of the neighbours the verses and hymns she had learned at school. The doctor said that the cause of her illness was the misery and poverty in which she lived. The dear little girl died, and Mr. Fliedner felt that he could not leave her brothers and sisters to the same fate while he had a few spare rooms in the church and school buildings. One by one others were added, till the house became too small. When he had received twenty he thought he must close the list, but another poor waif applied for admittance, and he thought, "If Christ asks you why you have not taken this child, can you answer Him: "Lord, Thou hast given me enough for twenty, but I was afraid Thou wouldst not have enough for twenty-one?" So he never again tried to limit the number, and now there are over thirty boys and ten girls. The boys are under the care of a teacher and his wife; the girls are cared for by the widow of an evangelist. Thus two orphanages came into existence. Two storeys were built above the chapel for the orphanages and schools. The cost was £1500. God gave all that was needed at the right time, as well as the £2500 which the place cost originally. More than once the contractor came in the morning for money, and there was none to be had; but the very next post brought what was needed, and, with a joyful heart, Pastor Fliedner could send it to him before night.

In the schoolrooms night classes are held, where grown-up people learn to read and write. Many an old woman has come just to learn to read her Bible. The lessons always close with the reading of a chapter and prayer. Room has also been found for a little hospital in the mission-house. It is much needed; for our poor sick brethren in Madrid are exposed to much persecution in the public hospitals. Three good-sized rooms, with an independent entrance, were gradually furnished. A beginning was made with one bed; now there are eight, and patients come in from all the different congregations of Madrid. The old house had to undergo many alterations ere it was converted into the present lofty, airy chapel, spacious class-rooms, and dormitories, the pleasant well-lit hospital and the light pretty courtyard filled with plants.

God has given to Mr. Fliedner yet another house in the ruins of an old convent at the Escurial, whence Philip II. superintended the building of his great palace, and issued his bloodiest decrees against the heretics of the Low Countries. This has been converted into a place of recreation for Protestant children in the hot summer months, and the name of Paz—"Peace"—has been given to it. The emblem of the village of the Escurial is the sun rising behind clouds, with the motto: "Post fata resurgo," i.e., after [many] misfortunes I rise again. This may fitly be taken as the motto of the whole work of evangelisation in Spain. There, where more than 10,000 martyrs were burned alive, where during three hundred years the power and the tyranny of the Inquisition destroyed all Christian life, the Gospel now shows its power. The schools connected with the German Mission were scarcely begun when the want of a book-shop made itself felt. With the help of the Religious Tract Society a small shop in the centre of the town was hired, Calle Jaco-metrezo 59. Pastor Fliedner's only assistant in the trade was a young Spaniard. For two years they did their best at bookselling, and then God sent them a German bookseller, who volunteered his services. There are now four Spanish assistants employed, and another book-shop has been opened in Barcelona, Calle Conde de Asalto, 15. From these two centres colporteurs and friends in all parts of Spain are supplied with books, periodicals, and tracts; these winged messengers are even sent to Mexico and South America. Pastor Fliedner publishes two Protestant periodicals, El Amigo de la Infancia, or Children's Friend, and the Revista Cristiana, by which he tries to reach the educated classes in Spain. Through the kind assistance of the American Sunday School Association, the former of these is self-supporting.

God has given Pastor Fliedner two German and one Spanish pastors, as well as four German and eight Spanish teachers. In all, there are fifty labourers, who with their families make over one hundred, so that, counting the orphans, more than one hundred and fifty have to be fed daily. Well may our friend say, with Jacob: "With my staff I passed over this Jordan, and now I am become two bands." He feels, with the Patriarch, that he is not worthy of all the mercies and all the truth with which God has blessed his work in his hands.

On the death of his friend, Don Francisco Ruet, he was able to gather a fund for his widow and children, which reached the sum of £1200. It increases gradually, and he hopes to make it available for the maintenance of the widows and orphans of other faithful labourers, three of whom already look to him for support.

Believing that people ought to help themselves, Pastor Fliedner tries to accustom the Spanish brethren to contribute towards the work of God. Last year they gave £600, almost one-eighth part of all that is required by his Mission. Children collect amongst their friends for the hospital; the orphans try to earn something by their handiwork; and the children of the Sunday-schools contribute their mite towards various works of Christian charity. Last year a missionary society was formed.

A more expensive and weighty task has lately been undertaken — the Advanced School, both for boys and girls. Already there have gone forth from the schools teachers to labour in the evangelical schools of Spain, after passing the official examination in the Normal School of Madrid. The secondary school, which bears the hopeful title of "The Future," provides the higher education required by pastors and teachers. It grew up out of the elementary schools. Six pupils have passed their university examinations, and two have taken the degree of M.A., the first evangelical students who ever took academical degrees in Spain. One of the latter is studying for the ministry at Halle; the other is about to follow. New class-rooms in a better part of the town and more teachers are to-day required, and Mr. Fliedner thinks of hiring rooms, until God sends the £2000 required, in order to build. It is a great undertaking to build a Protestant High School in Madrid, but the mustard seed will and must grow, for it is sown by God Himself.

The want of educated Christian Spaniards, who may become teachers and evangelists, makes itself every day more felt; and it is simply a Christian duty to help our Protestant brethren in Spain to get teachers and preachers from their own midst. Pastor Fliedner loves the Spaniards, has a favourable view of their character, and firmly believes in the ultimate success of evangelical work among them. The work of God in his hands, which is entirely sustained by voluntary contributions, proves, along with many other Christian works in our times, that God never abandons those who put their trust in Him. It shows at the same time, that the power of God is now working in a wonderful manner amidst the Papal nations, and that superstition will be overthrown by God's glorious Gospel.

The Good Tidings of the Reign of God.

V.—BEGINNING AND END.*

"How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer (O Shining One), son of the morning...For thou saidst in thy heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God: I will sit also upon the mount of the assembly in the recesses of the north...I will be like the Most High. Yet thou art brought down to hell, to the recesses of the pit."—Isa. xiv. 12—15.

"Then cometh the end, when He shall deliver up the Kingdom to God, even the Father; when He shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power...And when all things shall be subdued unto Him, then shall the Son also Himself be subject unto Him that put all things under Him, that GOD may be all in all." (Subdue, subject, put under, are all same word in the Greek.)—1 Cor. xv. 24, 28.

No subject can be profitably studied in detail until its outlines are apprehended. The first maps in an atlas are those of the two hemispheres; then follow the great continents; and afterwards the various countries. So the Gospel of the Kingdom of God cannot be intelligently understood until its idea as a whole is comprehended. Its terminus a quo and its terminus ad quem are, therefore, distinctly stated in the Scripture, of truth, and only when these—the starting-point and the goal—are apprehended, can the intervening parts be understood.

In its absolute sense the Kingdom of God is without break of continuity from everlasting to everlasting. He is "the Great King." "His Kingdom ruleth over all." But a revolt took place in heaven. One of the principalities cast off his allegiance, and many more (who became "his angels," Rev. xii. 7) appear to have been seduced into the same rebellion. The fall of the angels led, through Satan's temptation of our first parents, to the fall of man; the dominion which God committed to Adam was lost; and his children became children of the wicked one, and fell into the power of darkness.

God sends his beloved Son to be the Head of a new creation. He is rejected by David's seed as the Heir to David's throne, and thus is man's iniquity filled up. Jesus bears the judgment of this world, and thus the prince of this world is judged and cast out. Having died unto sin once, the Redeemer dies no more. The foundations of the everlasting Kingdom are laid in the hearts of his believing people, who through regeneration and in resurrection life are united to Him as members of his body. And having reigned until all things are subdued unto Him, He delivers up the kingdom taken from the conquered rebel, usurper, adversary, unto God, even the Father, that God (Father, Son, and Spirit) may be all in all.

The Gospel of the Kingdom of God looks back to the rebellion of Satan, and looks forward to the delivery of the Kingdom by the Son to the Father. The former of these is the terminus a quo, and the latter is the terminus ad quem. And both of these—the rebellion of Satan and the fall of man through him, on the one hand, and the overthrow of Satan, the redemption of man and the restoration of the Kingdom by man, in Christ, to God even the Father, on the other, —must always be kept well before the mind, or the Gospel of the Kingdom in its manifold relationships cannot be adequately understood.

The very term "Gospel" or "Good Tidings" looks before and after, and implies peril or disaster, on the one hand, and deliverance or restoration, on the other.

We have entitled this chapter "Beginning and End." But, as we have said in our second paragraph, God already and always reigns over the universe; hell as well as heaven is within the infinite circle of his dominion. So far as we know, it is only as regards Satan and his angels, and this world of which Satan is the prince, that the Reign of God has received a check. Scripture reveals nothing of rebellion or of sin outside this area. God has permitted evil in the hearts of angels and men to work itself out to its bitter and terrible end; but seems to have confined the dreadful drama to this world as its theatre.

Yet the outbreak of rebellion in heaven and earth is not a mere episode in the Reign of God. It was foreseen, and was from eternity an integral part of God's revelation of Himself. In his eternal purpose, his Son was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. The counsel of peace was between them both before peace was broken by Satanic and human sin. And the treason of Lucifer, that Shining One, that deftly-made signet ring on the hand of God, full of wisdom and perfect in beauty (Ezek. xxviii. 12; cf. Jer. xxii. 24), became the occasion for the preaching of the unsearchable riches of Christ, and for the dispensation of the mystery, which from the beginning of the ages had been hid in God who created all things by Jesus Christ: to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in the heavenly places might be made known through the Church (redeemed by his blood, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all) the manifold wisdom of God; according to the eternal purpose which He purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord (Eph. iii. 8—11).

While, therefore, our prayer for the coming Reign of God looks back to the rebellion of Satan and of man, and looks forward to the restoration of the recovered dominion to God, it is not confined within these limits. It looks back into the depths of the past eternity, and sees the Lamb slain—the sufferings of Christ; and it looks forward and sees the Lamb in the midst of the throne—the glories that should follow. It sees the Son, not humiliated by delivering up the Kingdom to God even the Father, but resuming his place as the Second Person in the Trinity, with the added glory of his many crowns. It sees the only wise God our Saviour glorified in having turned the counsel of the real Ahithophel against himself; in having caused the true Haman to be gibbeted on the "tree" (Est. v. 14, vii. 9; Heb. ii. 14; 1 Pet. ii. 24), which he had prepared for the Faithful Servant; in having raised his fallen creature, through death and resurrection, into union and fellowship with Himself; and in having exalted the creature made of the dust of the ground to be the fulness of Him that filleth all in all. CORRESPONDENCE.

SIR,—In your article, "The Good Tidings of the Reign of God," in your issue of the 9th inst., reference is made to the remarkable passage, Rev. xiv. 6—8. Thankfully do I recognise the truth of what you say as to the Everlasting Gospel. May I venture, however, to suggest another thought? It is generally agreed, I believe, that the preaching of the Gospel, there described, takes place in the latter days—whether already past, or, as I venture to think, still future. On either supposition, is it not striking to see that the proclamation is followed by an intimation that He is to be worshipped "that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters"? Years ago such an exhortation would have seemed superfluous. No one doubted the fact. Now, alas! how many scientists speak of the eternity of water and fire, and teach that thus, by means of evolution, the world has reached its present condition? Of course, such a view involves the denial of the Creator's existence. Such teaching, I fear, may be described as generally accepted. Here, then, is the warning against preachers of the Gospel being influenced by this materialistic unbelief. The passage, seen in this light, is deeply significant and very practical.

As I have my pen in hand, may I also say how thankful I was to read your account of Captain Smith and his work in the Evangelisation Society. It would be impossible to find a society doing more for the spread of the Everlasting Gospel. Avoiding all sensationalism, and relying only on the power of the Holy Ghost, it sends out men—whose equals as evangelists I do not know—who preach Jesus Christ and Him crucified. If your readers desire the banner of the Gospel to be unfurled, whether in our great cities or benighted villages, let them increase their support of this truly apostolic Society.

TENT MISSION IN CARDIFF.

MY former fellow-labourer, Mr. E. Hurditch, is now in Cardiff engaged in a Tent Mission, and God has set his seal to the work in a marked manner. The tent is situated on the East Moors in a rough neighbourhood, where there is little evangelistic work carried on. The work began in a storm of physical opposition from the neighbours, some of whom entertained themselves by showering stones at Mr. Hurditch, but this has passed away, and in place of it many of these same people are now seeking the Lord. Each night the tent is crowded, and on Sunday hundreds failed to obtain admission.

Working people form the bulk of the congregations, and they listen to the word as if spellbound. Several excellent cases of conversion have been reported. Two young women found the Saviour on Sunday last through the singing of a sacred song, and to-day they sailed for America full of holy joy. Two women have been rescued from an infamous life, and both have received Christ.

F. C. SPURR.

Longcross Baptist Chapel, Cardiff.

A SPHERE FOR LADIES IN INDIA—In the old or mission church district in Calcutta, there are seven thousand nominal Christians, chiefly Eurasians and East Indians, of the middle and poorer classes. The men speak English and the majority of the women also. The clergyman in charge has the aid of a Scripture reader and Bible woman, but, with such a small staff, it is impossible for the people to be visited regularly. Though a great many of the people are ignorant adherents of the Romish Church, they welcome Christian workers who will explain the Bible to them and lead in prayer. The great and pressing need of the district is some ladies who have been accustomed to parish work in England, and are willing to work, under the direction of the clergyman, who is associated with the Church Missionary Society. Volunteers must be quite independent as to means, and should also have good health. The climate is said to be good. Full information may be had from Mrs. Harington, care of Canon Parker, Cathedral House, Gloucester.

THE FOURTH WATCH.

WHEN tired and weary in the night,
I hear the wind's weird sigh,
And, longing for the morning light,
I count the hours go by,

Dear Lord, within my silent room
Thy presence let me feel,
And let thine eyes beam through the gloom,
And love Divine reveal.

If, Master, Thou consent to stay
A little while with me,
The watch will be as glad as day
If it be shared by Thee.

As in the dusky eventide
That o'er Emmaus fell,
Thou didst with Cleopas abide,
Enter, and with me dwell.

I fain would touch in utter need
Thy garment's trailing hem,
Thy cross, thy death, I humbly plead,
Thy thorny diadem.

JAMES BOWKER.

LIGHT IN CENTRAL CHINA.

MISS E. H. HOLMES, of the China Inland Mission, who left England in 1887, says in a recent letter:—"I spent five months in the study of the language in the training home in Yang-Chau, in the province of Kiang-su. The result of seeing the large temples and idolatrous processions, &c., was to send me in real earnest upon my knees. Although I could not speak, I realised there was a work for my Master in prayer. Those at home little know of all the good done by their prayers.

"It was very peculiar, travelling in a native boat up the river to Han-Cheng (Shen-si), and to feel that at last I was going to be an isolated worker in the interior of China. The journey, which lasted about three months, was on the whole delightful; of course, everything was entirely new to me. For the first few months here I scarcely did anything but study; the dialect is very different from that of Yang-Chau. Now I have a class in the Sunday-school. The Sunday-schools are not like those at home, but are composed of men and women, and only a few children, the latter mostly from our Mission school. I am looking for bright results from my class. Some of the members seem deeply interested. The visiting is very happy work; though, of course, there are the dull times as well as the pleasant.

"I have been on a visit to a city some distance from here, called Cheng-Ku. The work is making progress there. Someone asked me to spend the afternoon over at her house, as she had some visitors. This I did, and in one room I was shown all the household gods, the incense, candles, &c. Everything was explained to me, and I afterwards had the privilege of speaking of the love of Jesus. One of the visitors seemed much interested; in fact, she asked me many questions about how to worship the true God. The tears came into her eyes when I told her that He really loved her. I have learnt to love these women so much that I think it would be the greatest trial of my life to be taken from them. The church at Han-Cheng is in a very prosperous condition, and many are rejoicing in salvation. There are also quite an equal number of inquirers."

THE LINCOLN CASE.—Funds for the prosecution of the Bishop of Lincoln continue to pour in at the Church Association offices, where over £7,000 of the £10,000 needed have been received. It is significant that the fund is not indebted for its size to a few large amounts from wealthy subscribers, but is made up by comparatively small contributions from all parts of the English speaking world.

NORTHFIELD CONVENTION.—1.

THESE summer Conferences on the banks of the Connecticut, under the shoulders of the sheltering hills, do not touch simply America, but the world. Said a happy-faced missionary, recently from Siam, to me, "I saw in a paper a thousand miles away, the notice of the Moody's meetings; and, though a stranger and alone, I felt I must place myself under such helpful influences." Last year Dr. Chester, of India, was here; on his return he met in the train a missionary family, and told them the story. For two hours in the rattling car they listened with closest attention to his glowing description of the meetings. One of them remarked, "Our souls just hungered for such a gathering. We have been in India some forty years, and we need the inspiration to be had in that hallowed spot in America." So is it with one of the striking faces which we meet, the silver-haired Rev. John E. Chandler, of Madeira, who with wife and daughter are here.

Influences are set in motion at these annual gatherings which reach all parts of the earth, and the world is yearly becoming more and more represented here. It is a rallying point for home and foreign missionaries, for Christians of all denominations, for pastors and evangelists, who find among these hills a fountain of strength and refreshment, for body as well as soul. As Mr. Moody remarked to-day, "We ask you here not only that you may gain spiritual vigour, learn more of the deep things of God, be filled with the Spirit, and go out to better living, but we want you to be blessed physically; ramble among these fragrant pines, scale the hills, climb the mountains, visit Mount Hermon, and be enriched in all your physical being."

Not the least of the delights of these meetings is the singing. Mr. Sankey, fresh, sunny, and as full of song as ever, rings out the new and the old with undiminished fervour. Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, Professor and Mrs. Towner, the Mount Hermon choir, all help to lift us up on the wings of song.

Mr. Moody is absolutely untiring. He looks after the great throng gathered in hall, cottage, and hotel. Is there any baggage missing, is there need of telephone or telegraph, are carriages needed for a mountain trip, are any sick, or in need of help, he carries all these interests upon his large heart, and gives attention to the most trivial thing, if by so doing he can help another. The secular part of such a Convention as this demands unwearied watchfulness, and he is steward, hotel manager, and general supervisor. Of course he has a corps of most admirable assistants; but there must be one head to devise and to plan. Then, to wisely direct the daily services in Stone Hall, to steer clear of all breakers, to arrange so that the greatest spiritual good may be secured, demands wisdom and prudence. There is method, but a delightful informality in the meetings. For instance, promptly at ten o'clock on the first day, Mr. Moody was on the platform with Mr. Sankey, who led the large audience in the familiar hymn, "There shall be showers of blessing," turning our thoughts away from the dripping skies, to the rich mercies about to descend. After prayer for God's smile and favour, Mr. H. M. Moore, of Boston, an alert, wiry, business man, in a business suit, read and commented, in an earnest, practical way, on Heb. xii. 1 and John xii. 32, lifting up Christ, and tenderly appealing to Christians to be true to their profession. Then followed an earnest address from Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, upon

SALVATION AND SERVICE.

I present to you one of the grandest mottoes in the Bible—Acts xxvii. 23: "Whose I am and whom I serve." Salvation and Service are presented in this motto. The believer in Christ is saved for two reasons: he has been purchased by the precious blood of the Son of God, and he has surrendered himself to Jesus Christ. "In Christ" presents salvation for Christ's service. Notice the prepositions of the Bible, how expressive and powerful they are! Gal. ii. 19 and 20, presents all these prepositions to our notice—through, to, unto, with, in, by, of, and for. "In Christ" is the greatest phrase in the Bible.

Ezekiel, in a vision, saw a wheel so grand that everything was included in it. So with the Bible. It rests on the earth; it reaches into heaven. It is large enough and grand enough to take in the whole world. "In Christ" is the key to all the Epistles of the New Testament. The phrase has three applications—

JUSTIFICATION, SANCTIFICATION, SUPPLICATION.

Justification may be explained by the word identification, and this may find an illustration in the condition of a husband and wife who have been truly married. Each exists in and for the other—they are identical. Two partners in business are identical. So with the Christian: he is identical with Christ. Justification tells us why God regards men with love and compassion. God looks at Christ and He sees us; if He regards Christ He must regard us, for we are in Him. A man went West at one time. He saw, loved, and married an Indian squaw. People about him in society tolerated and welcomed the Indian wife for the sake of the husband. So we are received for Christ's sake.

By faith in Jesus we are justified and also sanctified. This is the secret of supplication also—calling upon God in Christ's name in prayer. John xvi. 23, 26, 27; xiv. 13; xv. 7 and 16 illustrate this. "In Christ's name" means —what? Some people say "for Christ's sake." It is to ask because of your

IDENTIFICATION WITH CHRIST

—in Christ—and such a prayer has never failed of an answer. Eph. ii. 18—"For through Him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father"—is the only place in the Bible where the three persons of the Godhead are mentioned in connection with prayer. The Spirit breathes the request in our hearts, Christ presents it, and God hears the prayer.

We do not always understand what prayer means. Suppose Mr. Moody should send a young man from Mount Hermon School to me at my home in Philadelphia. Suppose he should bring a letter from Mr. Moody telling me that the young man was very desirous of finishing his studies at the school, and asking me to help him in some way. Whose petition should I receive? Not the student's merely, but Mr. Moody's. We are in Christ, and God looks on us only as we are in Christ. We should read John x. 14, 15—in the New Version rendering—xvi. 26, 27, and xvii. 21. Here are four distinct statements. First, the knowledge subsisting between the Saviour and the disciple is the same as that between God and Christ; second, the love subsisting between the Saviour and the disciple is the same as the love between God and Christ; third, the glory extending from the Saviour to the disciple is the same as that extending from God to Christ; and, fourth, the unity of the Saviour and the disciple is the same as that of God and Christ. Can anything be more perfect than this? Yet the Bible tells us these truths. But because of the privileges Christians enjoy, they have many and great responsibilities.

Now, what is the work, the workshop; what are the tools and the rewards of the Christian? Acts i. 8, "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me," and Matt. iv. 19, "I will make you fishers of men," tell us what is the work of a Christian.

WHAT MUST A WITNESS DO?

He must know and he must tell; he must have a Christian soul and a tongue; these make a Christian witness. Every one can be a witness to Christ. A fisherman must make fishing a business, and he must adapt means to ends; this is all that is necessary to become a fisherman. Such a business does not require good clothes. We must have something that will float on the water, and something that will sink into the water, and perhaps old clothes, so that, if necessary, we may go into the water for the fish. We must not think of ourselves, but only of the fish we are to catch. Some people think they are out for a pleasure ride on the water, and not to catch fish. They are greatly mistaken. Go in, clothes and all, and get the fish.

1 Cor. vii. 20: "Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called"—tells us what is the Christian workshop. We do not need to change our occupations, unless we have a special call to other work. We do not change our business; we simply take in a partner, get a new aim, and the field is the world in which we are all preachers. We need men who will do their best in their daily work, build good houses, and so forth. What is that in thine hand? A shepherd's crook in the hand of Moses, a sceptre in the hand of Solomon, a sling in the hand of David—these have done God's work. A needle led to the raising of Dorcas from the dead by Peter.

What we have in our hands is the tool on the human side; the

the Word of God, is the tool on the spiritual side. What is the working force of the Christian? The power from on high, the power that comes when the Spirit comes. Christ Himself had to be anointed before He said, "The Spirit of God is upon Me." Christ waited, and so must we. God does not want quantity, but quality, in religion. Do not leave out preparation; better have one hour's work and three hours' prayer, than three hours' work and one hour's prayer. As the ointment wherewith Aaron was anointed touched his eyes, his ears, his shoulders, and the skirts of his garments, so the ointment must touch our eyes that we may see, our ears that we may hear, our shoulders that we may become strong, and the skirts of our garments that our whole bodies may become fragrant with Christ's Spirit.

How is this anointing to be obtained? By prayer. God cannot fill a vessel that is already full. Put out that which is vile, and be filled with his Spirit. This is a supernatural power and must come through some supernatural means, and faith is the only hold we have on the supernatural. What are the wages of a Christian? There is a difference between salvation and reward. Eternal life is nowhere represented as a reward; it is a gift of God to us. Reward comes for faithfulness in Christian work.

Are you building of stubble and of hay, or are you building of precious stones? In a race all racers run, but only one gets the prize. If we do not win the race, we shall not lose salvation; but if we do win, we shall receive rewards for our labours.

MR. MOODY ON A HIGHER TYPE OF CHRISTIANITY.

Carrying out the idea of Mr. Moore, Mr. Moody suggested as the first great need of the Church, Personal Religion—a piety which stirs every fibre of the being. The Christianity of to-day is a dwarfed, puny thing, when it might be a giant sweeping everything before it. Thinking men who are not disciples of our Lord are repelled by the weakness of his professed followers. One holy, godly man, will do more to upset infidelity than any other power. If this Convention lifts a few Christians to a higher plane, then it will be a success. We need quality not quantity. Is Christ real to us? Are we in his name fighting against iniquity, or are we still in prison and chained to some pet sin? Are we irritable, peevish, surly, selfish, unforgiving? Let us get rid of such habits, and not hide behind the paltry excuse, "I inherited it." Christ is a perfect Saviour. He cleanseth from all sin. Exod. vi. has which are introduced and ended by "I am the Lord"—"I will bring you out from under the burden of the Egyptians," "I will rid you of bondage," "I will redeem you," "I will take you to be my people," "I will be your God," "I will bring you to the promised land," "I will give you a heritage." Are you in Egypt bound by some sin? Be practical. Question your own heart. Where are you in God's sight? Are you winning victories over any particular sin? Are you given to jealousy, backbiting, and the "little sins," as you term them? If so, Christ is not your Saviour. In Mark v. there are three hopeless cases, (1) A man possessed with devils; but Christ is a match for demons. When the demoniac met Jesus the devils had to go. Meet Christ, oh, you sinful disciple, and you will be free. Can't he deliver you and me? These little foxes which spoil the vines must be looked after. (2) The diseased woman whom doctors could not heal. She went to Christ in faith, and the touch of faith was quickly discovered by Him. Some will come to this Conference, and go away wondering what people find to interest. But there are diseased souls here who will go away cured. Suppose there are people here with bad irritable tempers. The Lord is a match for such. He is a physician, and will heal if you will let Him. (3) The daughter of Jairus. All said to the Son of God,

"TOO LATE!"

But they did not know our Christ. He spoke, and the maid arose. There is more power in his voice than in all the armies of the world. You, who are spiritually dead, need life—life from Christ. If your way is dark, He will give you light. What the sun is to the solar system Christ is to the spiritual life. What is the way? "I am the Way." What is the truth? "I am the Truth." What is the life? "I am the Life." All centres in Him. Be right with Christ at the outset of this Conference if you would receive a blessing. Get the stumbling stones out of the way. I knew of because of the bottles of wine which always appeared before her when on her knees. She had stolen them long years ago from her employer, now dead. She wanted to compromise by paying the Lord their value. But He does not want stolen money. Why the streets of heaven are paved with gold! Not until she hunted up the rightful heir, and made to him restitution, could the load be lifted. We need a revival of uprightness, honesty, integrity. God wants to bless you. Will you pay the price necessary for such a blessing?

In closing Mr. Moody prayed that this Conference might be one of heart-searching, that God might show each one the plague spot of his heart, that there might be no sham work, but that all should be fitted for service.

The exercises were varied. The second day of Conference a number of reformed men, saved from a drunkard's hell by the grace of God, spoke with a power which only a man could have who had been in the chains of sin. A German, Mr. Singer, of New York, who had been born with love for beer, spoke with great tenderness, and made a most earnest appeal for Christians to go out to rescue the lost. In the evening of a busy day Mr. C. H. Yatman, an evangelist, spoke briefly of his conversion from a life of sin, and then opened up the Scriptures: "I would recommend Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, and Romans to unbelievers. Take the Epistle to Romans, the book of doctrines, and see how Paul has condensed into a few chapters seventeen facts which no earthquake could upheave, viz., the divinity of Jesus Christ, the inspiration of the Scriptures, the Triune God, the immortality of the soul, the universal need of salvation, the atonement of Christ for all, the forgiveness of sin, the new birth or regeneration, salvation by faith, the resurrection of the dead, the day of judgment for each one, the reward of the righteous in heaven, the eternal conscious punishment of the wicked in hell, the guidance of the Holy Ghost, the efficacy of prayer, the Church of Christ—and my own conversion."

The present report gives an idea of two days only. Many favourite speakers and teachers will occupy the coming week. At the Conference are Christian workers from Siam, Syria, Turkey, Mount Lebanon, India, Guatemala, and California, with more arriving daily.

BY REV. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

XXII.—A STRICKEN CASE.

AT the time of the revival in the north of Ireland, in 1859, there were many wonderful stricken cases. I spoke on this subject one day at the house of a friend, who said, "I will never believe in such cases unless I see one for myself."

I replied, "Then your opportunity for believing it will be gone. We believe what we do not see; what we see we do not take on faith. Believing is taking upon trust."

"Well," he said, "I cannot trust that."

So the conversation dropped, and the subject might have been forgotten. Some months afterwards, however, I was conducting an evangelistic meeting in a schoolroom where my friend was present. In the after-meeting he came to me on the platform, and said, "If I believed in stricken cases I should say there is one."

"Where? where?" I asked.

"There, close at your feet," he replied.

I immediately stepped down from the platform, and saw a woman lying on the floor with her body and limbs as rigid as a corpse. I took her hand in mine, and, excepting for its warmth, it might have been that of one dead. Her arm was as stiff and firm as her hand. I spoke to her, but received no answer. I repeated several texts, but this had no effect. Then it came to my mind to say the words:

How great the love that Him inclined
To bleed and die for thee.

Immediately I felt the muscles of her hand begin to relax. Every time I repeated them, these words had increasing effect upon her. In due course a number of persons gathered round us, and I bid them sing:—

Behold the Saviour of mankind,
Nailed to the shameful tree;
How great the love that Him inclined
To bleed and die for thee.

When we had sung this verse three or four times, the woman sat up and said, "Angels are singing of Jesus—Jesus and His love to me." "Jesus loves you," I said, "rise up," at the same time putting out my hand to help her. She rose to her feet, but was not yet conscious of the things about her. Her husband, having been fetched from his house, was present, and led her away home. I promised to call the next day.

The meeting was carried on for an hour after this, and the people present were much affected, even solemnised by what they had seen. Some of them knew the woman, and also knew her violent opposition to the service; they wondered that she came at all.

I do not profess to account for this case, I merely state it, and know it took place.

The following day, I went to the house of my friend, and he accompanied me to see the stricken one. We found her rejoicing in peace and salvation, and not only so, but ready to give a very good and intelligent account of herself. She said she was at church on Sunday morning, and was so angry with me for my sermon, that she was sorry she went, and declared she would "never hear that man again." Her husband, who was a believer, was grieved to hear her speak like that, and disappointed too, for all through the sermon, he was thinking to himself how wonderfully appropriate it was, He said if he had spent an hour in telling me everything about his wife, I could not have hit her case more perfectly.

She went home and spent her time in inveighing against the sermon, declaring she would take care and not go to the school-room on Monday.

"Very well," said her husband, "I will go, and you shall stay at home and mind the children." On Monday she repeated more than once her determination not to go to the meeting, though she was not asked. The husband was very quiet, and had made up his mind to go if she did not. At tea-time, however, she said of own accord, "Fred, if you'll mind the children, I'll go to the meeting to-night!" The school-room was just opposite where they lived. She came and felt all through the address, "I don't believe that, I won't believe that." She recollected being opposed like this the whole time, until she remembered no more.

When she came to herself, she was in her own house, and was rejoicing in the love of God, who gave his Son to die to save her, and she was saved.

I said to her, "But you are such a sinner, how can that be? How can you be saved?"

"Well," she said, "That beats all I ever heard. Didn't you say yourself that Christ died for sinners? Now you say I'm a sinner, and I can't be saved. I know better than that if you don't. I tell you, I am saved."

"Are you sure of that?" I asked.

"Of course I am," she replied; "I'll tell you what words were applied to my mind, 'How great the love that Him inclined, to bleed and die for me.' That was me you know—me, yes, me—He died for ME."

I said, "Then let us sing,

'I do believe, I will believe,
That Jesus died for me;
That on the cross, He shed his blood,
From sin to set me free.'"

She was quite ready to do this, and her husband also. My friend stood looking on in amazement. Presently he said, "Well, there seems to be reality there."

I said, "Can you not say more than 'seems'? There is reality, and besides that, there is wonderful teaching, and work of God's Spirit, unless it is a delusive work of the devil."

"Oh, no," he said, "it is not the devil." As if he shrank from the idea of the devil's work; but yet he could not bring himself to believe that it was God's work.

"This woman's story," I said, "gave a plain and unvarnished insight into a conflict and the victory. God's Spirit began to strive with her in the church, but she did not yield to it; so Satan stepped in, and stirred up her flesh (the carnal mind, which is enmity against God) to resist and oppose as she did. Thus she inveighed against the sermon, and declared in that gratuitous way, that she would never go to the meeting again. There was a reason for all this opposition! But God who began the work in her soul, it may have been in answer to her husband's prayers, carried it on; and in so doing overcame the flesh and the devil; and brought that poor woman to Himself in the remarkable way which you witnessed."

The gentleman said, "If you knew that woman as I do, you would not believe so readily—ungrateful, unthankful, violent woman that she was!"

"Yes," I said, "and she was more than that. God saw how much she wanted changing, and He has changed her! You think that if she had been a more deserving character she might have been a better object for God's pity and compassion. 'Blind unbelief is sure to err, and scan God's ways in vain.' He saves sinners —He saved that woman."

I believe that this case afterwards helped my friend to see the way of God, and his sovereignty more clearly than he had done before. God is not bound to give us an account of his matters!

For the Young.

AMONG THE INDIANS.

The following interesting incidents are from the experiences of Rev. Egerton Young :—

INDIAN HEROISM.

A few years ago that terrible disease, the smallpox, broke out among the Indians of Saskatchewan, and wrought terrible havoc among them. Thousands died. It got into the home of our beloved missionary, McDougall, and three of his loved ones died. The Province of Manitoba had then been organised, and the Government decided that there should be no traffic between the Province and the distant settlement of Saskatchewan. This meant a great deal of hardship for the missionaries and the Hudson Bay officials, and the surveyors and a few traders and settlers who had gone in. So a gentleman came up to Norway House and said :—

"Mr. Young, can you possibly induce one hundred and sixty of your best Indians to take a large number of those new boats, each carrying about four hundred tons cargo, up the mighty Saskatchewan, to relieve those people in their dire necessity there? They will go through the country where hundreds are dying on each side of the river; they must keep in the middle of the river all the way. It is an awful risk; do you think you can get them to do it?"

I called them together, and put the matter before them. I said—

"Indians, the white man has not treated you fairly and honourably all through, but here is a grand chance to do a glorious act. The white men, with their wives and children, up there will suffer if they don't get supplies. Are you willing to run the risk?"

I picked out one of the class-leaders, and said—

"Samuel, you are to be the guide and leader of the party." He said, "Will you give us a little time to talk it over?" So we left them.

When we went back they said, "Missionary, will you let us have one Sunday more at the church, and give us the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper ere we start upon the dangerous journey?"

I said, "Yes," and we had such a memorable sabbath. It seemed to me as though the men who were going into the jaws of death for the sake of doing a kindly act were there commemorating the death of the Lord Jesus Christ for the last time. We saw them start a day or two after on their long journey. They had to paddle their boats one thousand two hundred miles up the current to this settlement.

After being away about ten weeks, they came back in peace and safety, and all well with the exception of the guide, such had been the strain upon him. In spite of all we could do he drooped and died. I was with him when he passed away. It was a beautiful afternoon. There he lay, stretched out on his bed of robes, on some balsam boughs. He was emaciated and wasted away. I saw a change coming over him. His life had been his testimony, but there was a longing in my heart to hear his living voice again, and bending over him I said, "Samuel, this is death that has come for you; tell your missionary how it is with you."

His hearing had partly left him, and he didn't recognise me. Speaking loudly, I said, "Samuel, my brother, you are in the valley of the shadow of death, tell your missionary how it is with you, if you can."

His eye brightened, and he caught my question. He lifted up his emaciated arm, he seemed to be holding on to something, and he said—

"Missionary, I am holding on to God; He is my all, my joy and happiness;" and the arm fell nerveless, and my comrade was in the better land.

"WHY WERE YOU SO LONG IN COMING?"

There was an old Indian, a strange, savage-looking fellow; if you met him in the swamp, you would like to have your rifle handy. His hair was braided back and reached to his knees, it was a most wonderful switch, and all his own too. This fellow came and stood before me, and pushing his fingers through his hair as far as its braided condition would allow, he said: "Missionary, once my hair was as black as a crow's wing, now it is getting white. Grey hairs here and grandchildren in the wigwam tell me that I am getting to be an old man. I never heard before such things as you told me to-day. I am so glad I have not died before hearing this wonderful story. Stay as long as you can, and when you have to go away, come back soon, for I have grandchildren; I have grey hairs, and may not live many winters more; come back soon."

Then he turned as though he would go to his place; but he again faced me and said, "Missionary, you said just now 'Our Father.' That is very sweet to us. We never thought of the Great Spirit as Father; we heard Him in the thunder, and saw Him in the lightning and tempest, and were afraid. The Great Spirit Father! That is very beautiful to us."

Then he said, "May I say more?" "Yes; say on." "You say our Father—He is your Father?" "Yes." "Does it mean He is my Father—poor Indian's Father?" "Yes, your Father." "Your Father, missionary's Father, Indian's Father?" "Yes." "Then we are brothers?" "Yes," I said: "we are brothers." "Ah," said he, "it does seem to me that you, my white brethren, with that great Book and its wonderful story, have been a long time coming to tell it to your red brother of the woods." That is the question which the weary, waiting, longing pagan millions of earth's nations are asking us—why we with the Bible should be so long coming with its wondrous story.

PERILS ON THE KRU COAST.

A surf boat was a few years ago in charge of "Buck Pierson," and going up the coast under his command, assisted by Wesley Yeates, who now commands our little Mission schooner, with six native men and two women as passengers. Off Grand Waupee they were caught by a heavy gale and capsized. The savages of Grand Waupee came with their canoes, and took the boat in tow. They seized the native men and women, who were swimming for life, took them ashore, robbed them and beat them, and were about to kill them, when they managed to escape. The two Liberians were left to drown.

They were in the water from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m., and when the Kahboys, the fishermen of Grand Waupee, saw them nearing the shore, they seized them, took them ashore, and said they would kill them, and barred them in a hut. The boat was bound for Peddy Town, not far beyond, and someone told the Peddy people what had happened. So the king of the Peddy people came and begged for the release of the two prisoners; but the Kahboys were furious, and signified their intention of killing them, simply because they were shipwrecked Liberians. The king came a second time, and failed.

Long after midnight the prisoners heard the approach of what appeared to be an army of native soldiers. They thought an army of Kahboys had come to torture them to death, and cried to God to prepare them for the tragedy awaiting them. All of a sudden crash came a great cleaver that cut off one end of the hut, and made a gash on Wesley's arm. The poor fellows gave up all hope of life, when a man rushed in and shouted:

"Where are the Americans?"

And Wesley said, "Here me, daddy!"

"Get before me."

The two prisoners fell into line before the King of Peddy, and, guarded by his soldiers, they were rescued from impending torture and death.—(Bp.) Wm. Taylor, in The African News.

MR. SPURGEON ON ORDINATION.—A few days ago, at a meeting in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, in a course of a description of evangelistic effort in a recently opened field, a missionary spoke of some of his helpers as ordained, and others as unordained. Thereupon, Mr. Spurgeon queried, "What's the difference, brother?" Later on, he observed: "I never was ordained myself, and never mean to be. The apostles used to lay hands on those they set apart, but there was something in their hands. If any one has such hands, I am ready, but empty hands reduce the practice of the apostles to a trifling ceremony. When a church chooses a man to be its pastor, that man is ordained if God has called him, and filled him with the Holy Spirit and power."

HELP FOR THE BLIND.—It is gratifying in the extreme to see that so much to-day is being done to alleviate the hard lot of the blind. A lady writes to us testifying to the great usefulness of the Home Teaching Society for the Blind, whose office is at 31, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars, E.C. One great feature of the work is the sending out of blind visitors, who manifest a deep sympathy with their fellow sufferers. The sightless are taught to read from Moon's raised type. Another excellent society is the South London Association for Assisting the Blind, the hon. secretary of which is Mr. J. T. Edmonds, Carlton-villa, 155, Brixton-road, S.W. The blind are assembled in classes, and taught to read the Scriptures in embossed type. During last year no fewer than 230 persons were so instructed. Devotional meetings are held, books are lent, relief administered, and in urgent cases pensions are allowed. A lady, who has for some years devoted her energies to work amongst the blind in West London, writes to us appealing for something to be done to meet the cases of poor blind children on leaving school. She says: "Such children cannot earn a living, and yet we shrink from sending them to a workhouse. The question is one for Christians. We can pass the boys on to other institutions at twelve years of age, but something must be done for the girls. Pray with us that some of the Lord's stewards may be inclined to help poor blind girls who are friendless, or whose friends are too poor to keep them at home."

THE INSPIRATION of the BIBLE.

A LECTURE
By H. L. HASTINGS.

THE question as to the inspiration of the Bible is not a question raised by me. It is a question that is already up for discussion through the length and breadth of the land. What are we to do with the Bible? How are we to regard it? Is it the best book in the world, or the worst? Is it a true book, or is it a false book? Is it God's book, or is it man's book?

We find men on all sides of the question. There are persons who tell us this book is a good book—but then there are others just as good. The Bible is inspired, and so was Plato inspired, so was Socrates, and so is the almanac inspired; in fact, everything is inspired—the book of Mormon, the Koran of Mahomet, the sacred books of the Hindoos and the Chinese; —they have their Bibles, you have yours; all are good, and one is about as good as the other. Shakespeare was inspired, Milton was inspired, Thomas Paine was inspired, and everything and everybody is inspired.

It is not worth while to waste time on false issues. When I open Shakespeare's plays I do not read at the commencement, "Thus saith the Lord God of hosts"; when I turn to Plato's writings I do not read, "Hear ye the word of the Lord"; when I peruse the almanac I do not read, "The word of the Lord came unto me." Hence, you see that this book must be judged by a standard different from all other books. Over and over again this book says, "Hear ye the word of the Lord." Now, the message is the word of the Lord, or it is a lie. It is the word of the Lord, as it professes to be, or it is a cheat, a swindle, a humbug, a fraud.

To illustrate: A man tells me that Jesus of Nazareth was a good man; but then, there were other men just as good. He was a spiritual medium; but there are other mediums equally powerful in these days. To be sure, I do not remember any spiritual medium giving a public dinner, for nothing, to five thousand hungry people! You may have heard of such a "manifestation," but it has not fallen under my notice. I have not heard of a spiritual medium hushing the winds or calming a storm at sea. I have heard of dancing tables and similar operations. I prefer to have my tables stand still!

But while you say, "Christ was simply one of many remarkable men," He says, "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world; again, I leave the world, and go to the Father." He says, "O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." Now do you say he was a good man, and yet he told lies? What is your idea of a good man? I do not believe that a good man lies; and I do not believe that a man who lies is a good man. Perhaps you do, but if so, you were brought up in a different way from that in which my father brought me up. So I do not believe that a book packed with lies from one end to the other is a good book; and I do not want anyone to come and tell me that Jesus Christ was a good man, and the Bible is a good book, but neither of them tell the truth. I join issue there. This book is what it professes to be, or it is a swindle; Jesus of Nazareth was what he professed to be, or he was an impostor.

Suppose a man comes to town and represents himself as the son of a British nobleman. He is well dressed, has plenty of money, turns the heads of half the young ladies in the town, and makes himself at home generally: but after a while they find out that he is the son of "old Jenkins, the blacksmith," down in the next town. Now I do not want you to tell me how prettily he behaves, what fine broadcloth he wears, or what a perfect gentleman he is in all his deportment. The fact is, he is a liar, a fraud, and a scamp. He has come under false colours, and palmed himself off on the community under false pretences; and the more good things you say about him the less I think of him: because, if he is such a well-educated gentleman, he knows better than to be going around as a fraud, and deceiving the people. So we must accept Jesus of Nazareth and his claims entirely, or else we must reject the whole Gospel as an imposture, and as the grandest, most stupendous fraud the world has ever known.

Now, do not be fooled by this soft talk about the Bible being "a good book," and yet just like many other good books. There is not another like it in the world. Let us look at some of its peculiarities:—

Here is one: The Bible is a book which has been refuted, demolished, overthrown, and exploded more times than any other book you ever heard of. Every little while somebody starts up and upsets this book; and it is like upsetting a solid cube of granite. It is just as big one way as the other; and when you have upset it it is right side up, and when you overturn it again it is right side up still. Every little while somebody blows up the Bible; but when it comes down it always lights on its feet, and runs faster than ever through the world. They overthrew the Bible a century ago, in Voltaire's time—entirely demolished the whole thing. In less than a hundred years, said Voltaire, Christianity will have been swept from existence, and will have passed into history. Infidelity ran riot through France, red-handed and impious. A century has passed away. Voltaire has "passed into history," and not very respectable history either; but his old printing press, it is said, has since been used to print the Word of God; and the very house where he lived is packed with Bibles, a depôt for the Geneva Bible Society. Thomas Paine demolished the Bible, and finished it off finally; but after he had crawled despairingly into a drunkard's grave in 1809,* the book took such a leap that since that time more than twenty times as many Bibles have been made and scattered through the world as ever were made before since the creation of man. Up to the year 1800, from four to six million copies of the Scriptures, in some thirty different languages, comprised all that had been produced since the world began. Eighty years later, in 1880, the statistics of eighty different Bible societies which are now in existence, with their unnumbered agencies and auxiliaries, report more than 165,000,000 Bibles, Testaments, and portions of Scripture, with 206 new translations, distributed by Bible societies alone since 1804; to say nothing of the unknown millions of Bibles and Testaments which have been issued and circulated by private publishers throughout the world. For a book that has been exploded so many times, this book still shows signs of considerable life.

I have heard of a man travelling around the country exploding this book, and showing up "the mistakes of Moses," at about 200 dollars a night. It is easy work to abuse Moses at 200 dollars a night, especially as Moses is dead, and cannot talk back. It would be worth something, after hearing the infidel on "the mistakes of Moses," to hear Moses on "the mistakes of the infidel."* When Moses could talk back, he was rather a difficult man to deal with. Pharaoh tried it, and met with poor success. Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, and it is said found a grave in the Red Sea. Korah, Dathan, and Abiram tried it, and went down so deep that they have not yet got back. But now Moses is dead, and it is easy to abuse him. It does not take a very brave beast to kick a dead lion. †

But, after all, this book seems to stand abuse, and thrive upon refutation. A few months ago some learned men, after working for a number of years on the revision of the New Testament, finished their work. Having inserted a few modern words instead of others which had become obsolete, made some slight corrections of errors in translation, and rectified from ancient manuscripts some little errors that had been made by copyists in transcribing the New Testament,‡ at last the book was announced as ready to be issued on a certain day. What was the result? Why, men offered five hundred dollars to get a copy of that book a little in advance of its publication; and the morning it was published, the streets of New York were blockaded with express waggons backed up and waiting for copies of that book which had been refuted, exploded, and dead and buried for so many years. Millions of copies of that book were sold as fast as they could be delivered. They telegraphed that book, from the first of Matthew to the end of Romans, from New York to Chicago, about 118,000 words—the longest message ever wired —for the sake of getting it there twenty-four hours sooner than steam could carry it, to print in the Sunday newspapers.

A dead book, is it? They would not pay for telegraphing the greatest infidel speech ever delivered in this country, from here to Tophet. This old book seems to show some signs of life yet. It is like Aaron's rod that budded and blossomed, and it is being scattered all over the world.

This book outlives its foes. If you could gather all the books written against it, you could build a pyramid higher than the loftiest spire. Now and then a man goes to work to refute the Bible; and every time it is done it has to be done over again the next day or the next year. And then, after its enemies have done their worst, some of its professed friends torture and twist and mystify and misrepresent it. Surely it is no fool of a book if it lives through all that. Infidels have been at work nearly eighteen hundred years. firing away at it, and making about as much impression on it as you would shooting boiled peas at Gibraltar.

The fact is, this book has come into the world, and it seems to have come to stay. It is in the world, and I do not know how you are to get it out. One hundred years ago you might have found that book in twenty or thirty translations; but now you can find it in between two and three hundred different versions, most of which have been made in this last progressive, intellectual, nineteenth century. All over the globe it goes; touch any shore, and you will find that book there before you.

And it is a curious fact that most of our sceptical friends contrive to keep very close to

* There lies before me a letter written to me by Mrs. Mary Benjamin, who at the age of eleven years was an eye-witness to the death-bed agonies of Thomas Paine. She writes from Williamsport, Pa., April 25, 1876:—

"I was invited by a distant connection...to go and see T. Paine on his death-bed...The scene to me was appalling, and I wished to leave at once. I remember him as he lay, his head near and close to the door we entered, his glaring, rolling eyes; uttering imprecations, apparently in agony of body and mind, his screams could be heard at a great distance. As I shrank back they said (there were many here) he called on Jesus Christ for mercy, and next blasphemed."

This independent witness simply confirms the testimony of other respectable persons; whose veracity is only impeached by infidels who were not present, and who know nothing of the facts, but who with characteristic candour expect us to believe their testimony concerning events which occurred years before they were born!

† It would be interesting to hear a military leader and legislator, like "Moses the man of God," who, after he was eighty years old, commanded for forty years an army of six hundred thousand men, emancipating, organising, and giving laws to a nation which has maintained its existence for more than thirty stormy centuries, give his candid opinion concerning "the mistakes" of a "colonel" of cavalry, whose military career is said to have included one single engagement, in which "he was chased into a hog-yard, and surrendered to a boy of sixteen"; after which, as soon as exchanged, he heroically resigned his commission in the face of the enemy, subsequently turning his attention to managing swindling whisky rings, discussing theology, defending scoundrels, blaspheming God, and criticising dead men who cannot answer him.

‡ For an account of these errors and their extent and importance, see "The Corruptions of the New Testament," by H. L. Hastings.

where its shadow falls. It does not take a great while to get out of sight of the Bible. You can go, in a very few days, where there are no churches, Sunday Schools, Young Men's Christian Associations, preachers, deacons, or anything else of the kind—you can "go West." There is little difficulty in getting beyond the reach of the Bible. Your scalp might not be very safe, but you can easily get away from the reach of the Bible. But the infidel, while finding fault with the Bible, takes good care to stay where the Bible is. Why is this?

There was once a vessel wrecked on one of the South Sea Islands. There was on board a sailor who had been there before, and who knew that the people were cannibals. And when the ship was wrecked, and they were cast away on this shore, they knew there was no hope for them, for they saw no way to escape. The sailor, however, climbed up on a hill-top to reconnoitre a little. Presently his shipmates saw him swinging his arms in great excitement, and inquired what was the matter. He had seen just over the hill the steeple of a meeting-house! That was what took all the fear of trouble out of his soul. He knew that church spire made his neck safe on that cannibal island.

Now infidels know that fact just as well as he did. Years ago, a young infidel was travelling in the West with his uncle, a banker, and they were not a little anxious for their safety when they were forced to stop for a night in a rough wayside cabin. There were two rooms in the house; and when they retired for the night they agreed that the young man should sit with his pistols, and watch until midnight, and then awaken his uncle, who should watch until morning. Presently they peeped through the crack, and saw their host, a rough-looking old man, in his bear-skin suit, reach up and take down a book—a Bible; and after reading it awhile, he knelt down and began to pray; and then the young infidel began to pull off his coat and get ready for bed. The uncle said, "I thought you were going to sit up and watch." But the young man knew there was no need of sitting up, pistol in hand, to watch all night long in a cabin that was hallowed by the Word of God, and consecrated by the voice of prayer. Would a pack of cards, a rum-bottle, or a copy of the "Age of Reason," have thus quieted this young infidel's fears?

Everyone knows that where this book has influence it makes things safe. Why is this? If it were a bad book, we should expect to find it in the hands of the worst men. In New York there was once a kind of rogue's museum—a place where they had all kinds of skeleton-keys, and jimmies, and brass knuckles, and dirks, and pistols, and implements of mischief, which they had taken away from roughs and criminals. Do you suppose there was a single New Testament in the whole kit? Why not? If it were a bad book you would expect a man to have a revolver in one pocket and a New Testament tucked away in another. There was a row the other night, and a man broke his wife's head with a—Bible? No! it was a bottle! Where the Bible bears sway, the rows and quarrels do not come.

What makes this book so different from all other books? Whose book is it? Who made it? Infidels have the strangest ideas on that subject. I recollect in Marlboro, Mass., I read in a newspaper an article written by an infidel, which stated that the Council of Nice, in the year 325, compiled the New Testament. They had a lot of Gospels and Epistles, genuine and spurious, and no one could distinguish between the two; so they put them all on the floor, and prayed that the good ones might get up on the communion table and the bad ones stay on the floor; and that was the way that the present New Testament was compiled. And that is the kind of food that infidels are made to swallow and digest; for that very statement can be found in various infidel books now issued by infidel publishers. This writer said that this account rested on the authority of Papias, an early Christian bishop. I replied, in a lecture, that there was one difficulty about that story—that Papias was dead and buried a hundred and fifty years before the Council of Nice was held; but as they might have got the news from "the spirits," that might be no great objection to them. The man rose to explain, and said that this was not the right Papias, but that it was another Papias, "an obscure Christian bishop of the fourth century." I told him I thought he was obscure; so obscure that no one ever heard of him before or since. On investigation it was learned that a German dominie, named John Pappus, preacher in Strasburg, and a professor at Münster, who died in 1610, discovered this story in an old Greek manuscript entitled "Synodikon," which was written by some old romancer back in the dark ages, about the year 900, for it relates things which occurred as late as 879, over five hundred years after the Council of Nice was dead and buried. And this story, written nobody knows when, where, or by whom, has been swallowed, believed, and published by infidels far and near, as an account of the origin of the New Testament: and the men who believe and peddle such fables call Christians fools for believing the Bible.

I have on one of my library shelves between twenty and thirty volumes, containing about twelve thousand pages of the writings of different Christian authors who wrote before A.D. 325, when the Council of Nice was held. Many of these books are full of Scripture. Those writers had the same books which we have; they quoted the same passages which we quote; they quoted from the same Gospels and Epistles from which we quote.

Origen, who wrote a hundred years before the Council of Nice, quotes 5745 passages from all the books in the New Testament; Tertullian, A.D. 200, makes more than 3000 quotations from the New Testament books; Clement, A.D. 194, quotes 380 passages; Irenæus, A.D. 178, quotes 767 passages; Polycarp, who was martyred A.D. 165, after having served Christ eighty-six years, in a single epistle quotes thirty-six passages; Justin Martyr, A.D. 140, also quotes from the New Testament; to say nothing of heathen and infidel writers like Celsus, A.D. 150, and Porphyry, A.D. 304, who refer to or quote scores of the very passages now found in the Scriptures which we have. Indeed, Lord Hailes, of Scotland, having searched the writings of the Christian Fathers to the end of the third century, actually found the whole of the New Testament, with the exception of less than a dozen verses, scattered through their writings which are still extant; so that, if at the time of the Council of Nice every copy of the New Testament had been annihilated, the book could have been reproduced from the writings of the early Christian Fathers, who quoted the book as we quote it, and who believed it as we believe it. And now infidels talk about the Council of Nice getting up the New Testament. You might as well talk about a town council getting up the Revised Statutes of the state or nation, because they happened to say they accepted or received them. The Council of Nice did nothing of the kind. The books of the New Testament were received from the Apostles who wrote them, and were carefully preserved, and publicly read in the churches of Christ long before the Council of Nice was held.*

Says Tertullian, A.D. 200, "If you are willing to exercise your curiosity profitably in the business of your salvation, visit the apostolic churches; in which the very chairs of the Apostles still preside in their places; in which their very authentic letters are recited, sounding forth the voice and representing the countenance of every one of them. Is Achaia near you? You have Corinth. If you are not far from Macedonia you have Philippi and Thessalonica, if you can go to Asia you have Ephesus, but if you are near to Italy you have Rome."†

These apostolic churches received the Gospels at the hands of the men who wrote them; and the Epistles were written and signed by men whom they well knew. Paul wrote, "The salutation of me, Paul, by mine own hand, which is the token in every epistle, so I write."*

Now, what did these writers testify? They testified things which they knew. The Apostle John does not say, "That which we have dreamed, imagined, or guessed at, that thing do we declare unto you;" but, "That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of Life" (1 John i. 1). This was their testimony. They testified they saw Christ in his life and in his death; that they saw Him after his resurrection, and felt his hands and feet, and saw the nail-prints and the spear-wounds; and they knew these things and testified of them, and they preached Christ, who had died and risen again.

When Lepaux, a member of the French Directory, complained to Talleyrand that his new religion, "Theo-philanthropy," made little headway among the people, the shrewd old statesman replied:

"I am not surprised at the difficulty you find in your effort. It is no easy matter to introduce a new religion. But there is one thing I would advise you to do, and then, perhaps, you might succeed."—"What is it? What is it?" eagerly asked Lepaux." "It is this," said Talleyrand; "go and be crucified, and then be buried, and then rise again on the third day, and then go on working miracles, raising the dead, and healing all manner of diseases, and casting out devils; and then it is possible that you may accomplish your end!" The philosopher went away silent; and no infidel has succeeded in fulfilling these conditions. But Christ has died, and has risen again, and these Apostles suffered the loss of all things, and even of life itself, in proclaiming these facts; and they left their testimony on record in this Book. Then the Apostles quote from the prophets, and the prophets quote from the Psalms, and refer to the Law which was given on Mount Sinai; and so we go back from book to book, until we reach the book of Genesis, and that does not quote from anybody or anything. You have then reached the fountain-head.

"But," says one, "I think that the Bible may be a true history, but that is no proof of its inspiration. It does not require Divine inspiration to write a true history." So you think it an easy matter to tell the truth, do you? I wish you could make other people think so. Suppose you go and read a file of the newspapers published just before the last election, and see if you do not think it requires Divine inspiration to tell the truth, or even to find it out after it is told. Truth is mighty hard to get at, as you can see by perusing the daily papers on the eve of an election.

There are certain things in the Bible which, to my mind, bear the impress of Divinity. A sceptic will tell you what a race of old sinners we read about in the Bible! Noah got drunk; David was guilty of adultery and murder; Solomon was an idolater, and wrought folly; Peter denied his Lord, and Judas sold Him for thirty pieces of silver; all these people that the Bible talks to us so much about are a pretty set of men! Very well; what kind of men do you expect to read about in the Bible? Noah got drunk. Is that strange? Did no one else ever get drunk? Peter cursed and swore. Are there not other men who curse and swear? Judas, an Apostle, sold his Lord, who said He had chosen twelve and one of them was a devil. Do you not sometimes find a Judas in the church even now-a-days? One in twelve was a thief and a traitor then, and we need not be surprised if we find about the same average now. But you seem to think that when you read about a man in the Bible he is sure to be free from all kinds of errors, frailties, faults, and sins. You have formed this idea of men from reading in Sunday-school books about good children, who usually die young; or perusing excellent biographies, which, as you read them, cause you to exclaim, "I wish I could be as good as that person was; but I never shall." No, I presume you never will, and if you knew the whole story about the person you might not feel so deeply on the subject.

Do you suppose that if the Bible had been written by some learned doctor, revised by a committee of eminent scholars, and published by some great ecclesiastical society, we should ever have heard of Noah's drunkenness, of Abraham's deception, of Lot's disgrace, of Jacob's cheating, of Paul and Barnabas' quarrelling, or of Peter's lying, cursing, or dissembling? Not at all. The good men, when they came to such an incident, would have said, "There is no use in saying anything about that. It is all past and gone; it will not help anything, and it will only hurt the cause." If a committee of such eminent divines had prepared the Bible, you would have had a biography of men whose characters were patterns of piety and propriety, instead of poor sinners, as they were. Sometimes a man writes his own diary and happens to leave it for someone to print after he is dead; but he leaves out all the mean tricks he ever did, and puts in all the good acts he can think of; and you read the pages, filled with astonishment, and think, "What a wonderfully good man he was!" But when the Almighty writes a man's life he tells the truth about him: and there are not many persons who would want their lives printed if the Almighty wrote them.

Suppose a young man goes, say from the country, down to the city. Perhaps he is a rich man's son, who has had more money than was good for him at home, and who comes to the city to see the sights. He sails around in dangerous waters, and slips into various ports that are not exactly safe, and the next morning finds him hauled up before his Honour in the police-court. You get a morning paper, and you expect to find the full particulars of the case. You do, do you? You find a paragraph on this wise: "A certain young man from the rural districts came to town yesterday, sailed around in different parts of the city, and fell into rather bad company. This morning he was brought up before his Honour, who admonished him to be more careful in the future, and he departed a sadder and a wiser young man." This is the kind of paragraph you will find in the papers when a rich man's son comes to the city, goes on a spree, and has his head smashed and his eye banged in a fight: you don't get many particulars. But if he is a poor vagabond, without a second shirt to his back, you can get his name, and perhaps his genealogy for generations, and all the particulars of his case. This is the way men write history; but when the Lord undertakes to tell his story of a sinful man, He does not select a poor, miserable beggar, and show him up; He does not give even the name of the thief on the cross, nor of the wretched outcast who bathed the Saviour's feet with her tears, nor of the guilty woman to whom He said, "Neither do I condemn thee; go in peace, and sin no more"; but He takes King David from the throne, and sets him down in sackcloth and ashes, and wrings from his heart the cry, "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving-kindness; according to the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions." And then when he is pardoned, forgiven, cleansed, and made whiter than snow, the pen of inspiration writes down the whole dark, damning record of his crimes, and the king on his throne has not power nor wealth, nor influence enough to blot the page; and it goes into history for infidels to scoff at for three thousand years. Who wrote that? A book which tells the faults of those who wrote it, and which tells you that "there is none righteous, no, not one," bears in it the marks of a true book.

MEN LOVE OBJECTIONS.

Now we have to discuss this subject from all points of view, but mainly from the direction of objections. Men love objections; and so they say there are difficulties, and absurdities, and errors, and contradictions in the Bible. You have all heard such assertions. After speaking once in the city of Boston, an ex-minister came to me and told me that the Bible was not true, for there was that story which Moses told about the quails. Israel lusted after flesh, and the Lord sent them quails to eat, and they fell by the camp a day's journey on each side, or over a territory forty miles across, and they were two cubits deep on the ground, and the Israelites ate them for a full month. I have in my possession an infidel paper which was published in Boston, in which there is about a column of arguments and figures on this "quail story"; giving an estimate of the number of bushels of quails that were piled up over the country, and showing that when they were divided among the host of Israelites, each one would have 2,188,643 bushels of quails, which they were to eat during the month; giving each poor Israelite 69,620 bushels of quails to eat at each meal for thirty days, and therefore the Bible was not true!

I said to this gentleman, "The Bible does not say any such thing!" He replied that it certainly did; but I answered that it did not say any such thing. He insisted that it did. "Well," said I, "find it!" And when you ask an infidel to find anything in the Bible, you generally have him. He could not find the place; so I turned over to the eleventh chapter of Numbers, and there read that instead of the birds being packed like cord-wood on the ground, three feet deep, the account says that the Lord brought the quails from the sea, and let them fall by the camp, as it were "two cubits high," or about three feet high upon, or above the face of the earth. That is, instead of flying overhead and out of reach, they were brought in about three feet high, where any one could take as many of them as he chose.* And this sceptical friend had got the birds packed solid, three feet deep, over a territory forty miles across. As if I should say that a flock of wild geese flew as high as a church spire, and some one should insist that they were packed solid from the ground up, a hundred feet high! This is a sample of the arguments infidels bring to prove that the Bible is not true!

The book, to my mind, bears the marks of inspiration in the foresight which it exhibits. This book foretells things. You cannot do that. You cannot tell what will be next year, or next week. "The spirits" cannot tell who will be the next president, or governor, or emperor. They may tell a great many things which are past. They may tell you who your grandmother was, and may copy the inscription on your grandfather's gravestone, and may tell things which are written in the family record. They may reveal many many things in the past—for the devil knows about the past—but they cannot foretell the future. I did hear of one spiritual medium who foretold her own death, and she died within a few hours; but when they got the stomach-pump, they pumped out of her stomach poison enough to kill two or three. That kind of prophecy requires no omniscient foresight.

Years ago I talked with an infidel in Plymouth, Massachusetts, and he wanted me to give him some evidence that the Bible was true. After some conversation, I loaned him a little volume, an abridgment of "Keith on Prophecy." Some ten years after, as I took my seat in a railway train, he came and sat down beside me and began to talk, and he said: "If you want that book you can have it; but no one else can have it at any price." It had knocked his infidelity into atoms, and he was a believer in Christ, and a member of the Church.

The revelations of prophecy are facts which exhibit the Divine omniscience. So long as Babylon is in heaps; so long as Nineveh lies empty, void, and waste; so long as Egypt is the basest of kingdoms; so long as Tyre is a place for the spreading of nets in the midst of the sea; so long as Israel is scattered among all nations; so long as Jerusalem is trodden under foot of the Gentiles; so long as the great empires of the world march on in their predicted course,—so long we have proof that one Omniscient Mind dictated the predictions of that book, and "prophecy came not in old time by the will of man."*

We call this Bible a book; but here are sixty-six different books, written by thirty or forty different men. A man may say, "I do not believe in the book of Esther." Well, what of that? We have sixty-five others left. What will you do with them? A man says, "I find fault with this chapter, or with that." Suppose you do? If you were on trial for murder, and had sixty-six witnesses against you, suppose you impeach one of them, there are sixty-five left; impeach another, and you still have sixty-four; impeach another, and you have sixty-three—surely enough to hang you if you are guilty. Do you not see that you cannot impeach this Book, unless you do it in detail? Each book bears its own witness, and stands by itself on its own merits; and yet each book is linked with all the rest. Blot out one, if you can. I am inclined to think it would be difficult to do this. This Book seems built to stay together; it is inspired by one Spirit.

The authorship of this book is wonderful. Here are words written by kings, by emperors, by princes, by poets, by sages, by philosophers, by fishermen, by statesmen; by men learned in the wisdom of Egypt, educated in the schools of Babylon, trained up at the feet of rabbis in Jerusalem. It was written by men in exile, in the desert, in shepherds' tents, in "green pastures" and beside "still waters." Among its authors we find the tax-gatherer, the herdsman, the gatherer of sycamore fruit; we find poor men, rich men, statesmen, preachers, exiles, captains, legislators, judges; men of every grade and class are represented in this wonderful volume, which is in reality a library, filled with history, genealogy, ethnology, law, ethics, prophecy, poetry, eloquence, medicine, sanitary science, political economy, and perfect rules for the conduct of personal and social life. It contains all kinds of writing; but what a jumble it would be if sixty-six books were written in this way by ordinary men. Suppose, for instance, that we get sixty-six medical books written by thirty or forty different doctors of various schools, believers in allopathy, homœopathy, hydropathy, and all the other "pathies," bind them altogether, and then undertake to doctor a man according to that book! What man would be fool enough to risk the results of practising such a system of medicine? Or suppose you get thirty-five editors at work writing treatises on politics, or thirty-five ministers writing books on theology, and then see if you can find any leather strong enough to hold the books together when they are done.

But, again, it required fifteen hundred years to write this book, and the man who wrote the closing pages of it had no communication with the man who commenced it. How did these men, writing independently, produce such a book? Other books get out of date when they are ten or twenty years old, but this book lives on through the ages, and keeps abreast of the mightiest thought and intellect of every age.

Suppose that thirty or forty men should walk in through that door. One man comes from Maine, another from New Hampshire, another from Massachusetts, and so on from each State, each bearing a block of marble of peculiar shape. Suppose I pile up these blocks in order, until I have the figure of a man, perfectly symmetrical and beautifully chiselled, and I say, "How did these men, who have never seen each other, chisel out that beautiful statue?" You say, "That is easily explained. One man planned that whole statue, made the patterns, gave the directions, and distributed them around; and so, each man working by the pattern, the work fits accurately when completed." Very well. Here is a book coming from all quarters, written by men of all classes, scattered through a period of fifteen hundred years; and yet this book is fitted together as a wondrous and harmonious whole. How was it done? "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." One mind inspires the whole book, one voice speaks in it all, and it is the voice of God speaking with resurrection power.

Again, I conclude that this book has in it the very breath of God, from the effect that it produces upon men. There are men who study philosophy, astronomy, geology, geography, and mathematics; but did you ever hear a man say, "I was an outcast, a wretched inebriate, a disgrace to my race, and a nuisance in the world, until I began to study

* The Hebrew word al, rendered upon, Num. xi. 31, signifies above or over, as well as upon; and it is applied to the flight of birds; fowl that may fly above the earth" (Gen. i. 20); "a wind to pass over the earth" (Gen. viii. 1); "the curse that goeth forth over the face of the earth" (Zech. v. 3); "Darkness was upon the face of the deep; and the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters" (Gen. i. 2). The Septuagint renders it by apo, "from the earth"; and the Douai version gives the true sense thus: "They flew in the air two cubits high above the ground.

* Jer. li. 37; Nahum ii. 10; Ezek. xxix. 15; Ezek. xxvi. 5; Deut. xxviii. 64; Luke xxi. 24; Dan. ii., vii.; 2 Pet. i. 21.

mathematics, and learned the multiplication table, and then turned my attention to geology, got me a little hammer, and knocked off the corners of the rocks and studied the formation of the earth, and since that time I have been happy as the day is long; I feel like singing all the time; my soul is full of triumph and peace; and health and blessing have come to my desolate home once more?" Did you ever hear a man ascribe his redemption and salvation from intemperance and sin and vice to the multiplication table, or the science of mathematics or geology? But I can bring you, not one man, or two, or ten, but men by the thousand who will tell you, "I was wretched, I was lost; I broke my poor old mother's heart; I beggared my family; my wife was heart-stricken and dejected; my children fled from the sound of their father's footsteps; I was ruined, reckless, helpless, homeless, hopeless, until I heard the words of that book!" And he will tell you the very word which fastened on his soul. It may be it was, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest"; perhaps it was, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world"; it may have been, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." He can tell you the very word that saved his soul. And since that word entered his heart, he will tell you that hope has dawned upon his vision; that joy has inspired his heart; and that his mouth is filled with grateful song. He will tell you that the blush of health has come back to his poor wife's faded cheek; that the old hats have vanished from the windows of his desolate home; that his rags have been exchanged for good clothes; that his children run to meet him when he comes; that there is bread on his table, fire on his hearth, and comfort in his dwelling. He will tell you all that, and he will tell you that this book has wrought the change.

Now, this book is working just such miracles, and is doing it every day. If you have any other book that will do such work as this, bring it along. The work needs to be done: if you have any other book that will do it, for Heaven's sake bring it out. But for the present, while we are waiting for you, as we know this book will do the work, we mean to use it until we can get something better.

What we most need is the book itself. It is its own best witness and defender. Christians sometimes try to defend the Word of God. It seems like half-a-dozen poodle dogs trying to defend a lion in his cage. The best thing for us to do is to slip the bars and let the lion out, and he will defend himself? And the best thing for us to do is to bring out the Word of God, and let "the sword of the Spirit" prove its own power, as it pierces "even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit."

Suppose, for example, all the good people of this town should try the Bible, say for a single year. Suppose you start to-night, and say: "We have heard about that book, and now we will begin and practice its teachings just one year." What would be the result? There would be no lying, no stealing, no selling rum, no getting drunk, no tattling, no mischief-making, no gossiping, no vice nor debauchery. Every man would be a good man, every woman a good woman; every man would be a good husband, father, or brother; every woman a good wife, mother, or sister; every one in the community would be peaceable; there would be no brawls, no quarrels, no fights, no lawsuits; lawyers would almost starve to death; doctors would have light practice, and plenty of time to hoe in their gardens; courts would be useless, gaols and lock-ups empty, almshouses cleared out of their inmates, except a few old stagers left over from the past generation; taxes would be reduced, hard times would trouble nobody—all would be well-dressed and well-cared for; and presently the news would go abroad, and we should hear in Boston, "What wonderful times they are having up there in old Spencer. The people have all gone to living according to the Bible." The news would get into all the local papers, the Springfield papers, the Boston papers, the New York papers; the telegraph wires would be kept busy with the news; they would hear of it in Cleveland, in Cincinnati, in Chicago, in St. Louis, in New Bedford, and Fall River, and Portland; and the reporters would start off to investigate. One would be inquiring, "Are there any houses to let in Spencer? any to sell? any building lots? any farms for sale?" Capitalists would come here. Some man from Boston would say, "I am going to move to Spencer; I am sick of the noise and hurry of the city, and I want a place where I can bring up my children, and not have them go to perdition." There would be a general rush from all quarters to Spencer. It would raise the price of real estate twenty-five per cent. in six months; taxes would come down, property would go up, and good people from far and near would want to move into town, and nobody who was worth having there would want to move out. And this would be the direct result of reading and obeying this book. Now, if a book will do that for a community, what kind of a book is it? Is such a book the Lord's book or the devil's book? It seems to me that a book which will do such work as that must be the Book of God, inspired by the very breath of the Almighty.

The book is its own witness. It bears its own fruits and tells its own story. The great trouble with us is, we do not read this book, we do not use it, we do not understand it. It is a sorrowful fact that you can hardly go into a prayer-meeting, but you are likely to hear a quotation from Scripture that is not in the Bible and never was. You may hear, "In the midst of life we are in death," from the prayer-book; "He tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," from an old romance; "God unchangeably ordains whatsoever comes to pass," from the Catechism; accompanied by passages misquoted, misunderstood, and misapplied, which show that the people do not read their Bibles, and do not understand them: and the worst thing about it is, one-half the people who go to meeting do not seem to know the difference. We need to read the Bible, to search it, study it, believe it, and obey it, and we shall find that it is filled with sanctifying power to our own souls, and that it is the word of salvation to the lost and perishing.

But says one, "I do not understand the Bible. I read it, but I cannot make anything of it. Somehow it is obscure, and my mind does not take hold of it." How do you read your Bible? "Oh, I read a chapter now and then; I read it here and there."

Suppose your boy comes home from school and says, "I can't make anything of this arithmetic: it is all dark to me." You say to him, "How did you study it?" "Oh, I read a little at the beginning, and then I turned to the middle and read a little here and there, and skipped backward and forward. But I don't understand it; I can't see into it."

You say to him, "My son, that is not the way to understand arithmetic. You must begin at the beginning, with the simplest elements, master every principle, learn every rule, solve every problem, and perform every example, and then the whole book will open to you as you go on."

When you read a novel do you begin in the middle, and read a page here and a line there, and skip about hither and thither, and say, "I can't make anything of this book?" No; you begin at the beginning, where "A solitary horseman was seen one dark, tempestuous night, riding along upon the margin of a swollen stream which wound about the base of a lofty mountain, on which stood an ancient castle," &c., &c. There is where you begin; and then you read every line and every page of the book until you get to the end. Sometimes they print a column or two of a story in a paper, and go and scatter it through the town, and at the end of it you will read, "The remainder of this thrilling story will be found in the columns of the Weekly Blazing Comet"; and then you start off down to the newsroom and buy the Blazing Comet to find out how the story ends! Why will you not take the Bible and read it in the same way? Why will you not give as much attention to the faithful words of the living God as you will to a pack of lies spun out by some sinful man? Why will you not take the Bible and read it from beginning to end, and see how it comes out? You will find it the grandest and most thrilling story the world has ever known. Sometimes, when you have not time to read a novel through, you read the first chapter or two, to find out who the hero is, and then skim through the pages and read the closing chapters, and find out who was murdered, who was hung, and who was married; and then you can guess the rest, for there is usually about so much sawdust put in the middle for stuffing. Why will you not do as much as this for the Bible? Begin at the beginning, and read until you find out who is the hero of the story. You will find that the presence of one Person pervades the whole book. If you go into a British Navy yard, or on board a British vessel, and pick up a piece of rope, you will find that there is one little red thread which runs through the whole of it—through every foot of cordage which belongs to the British Government—so, if a piece of rope is stolen, it may be cut into inch pieces, but every piece has the mark which tells where it belongs. It is so with the Bible. You may separate it into a thousand parts, and yet you will find one thought—one great fact running through the whole of it. You will find it constantly pointing and referring to one great Personage—"the Seed of the woman" that shall crush the serpent's head; "the Seed of Abraham," in whom all the nations of the earth shall be blessed; "the Seed of David," who shall sit on David's throne and reign for evermore; the despised and rejected Sufferer, the Man of Sorrows, the Christ of God, born in Bethlehem, crucified on Calvary, rising triumphant from Joseph's tomb, ascending to sit at God's right hand, and coming again to judge the world and reign as King and Lord of all forever. Around this one mighty Personage this whole book revolves. "To Him give all the prophets witness"; and this book, which predicts his coming in its earliest pages, which foreshadows his person and his ministry through all its observances, types, and sacred prophecies, reveals in its closing lines the eternal splendours which shall crown and consummate his mighty work.

God's Word declares the end from the beginning. It is not only the chart which guides each weary wanderer to his own eternal rest, but it is the record of the great plan and purpose of the Almighty concerning the world which He has made, and the Church which He has redeemed. It unfolds God's everlasting purpose, as manifested in Jesus Christ; and if one will read three chapters at the beginning of the Bible and three at the end, he will be struck with the correspondence which there exists.

At the beginning of the Bible we find a new world: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." At the end of the Bible we find a new world: "I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away." At the beginning, we find Satan entering to deceive and destroy; at the end we find Satan cast out, "that he should deceive the nations no more." At the beginning, sin and pain and sorrow and sighing and death find entrance to the world; at the end, there shall be no more pain nor sorrow, nor sighing, and no more death. At the beginning, the earth, for man's transgression, is cursed with thorns and thistles; at the end, "there shall be no more curse: but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it." At the beginning, we find the tree of life in Paradise, from which the sinner is shut away by a flaming sword, lest he eat and live for ever; at the end we find the tree of life again, "in the midst of the Paradise of God," and the blessed and the blood-washed ones have a right to the tree of life, and "enter in through the gates into the city." At the beginning, man was brought beneath the dominion of death and the grave; at the end, "the dead, small and great, stand before God," the sea gives up its dead, and death and hell are destroyed in the lake of fire. At the beginning, the first Adam lost his dominion over earth, and was driven out of the garden of Eden in shame and sorrow; at the end, we find the second Adam, victorious over sin and death and hell, enthroned as King and Lord of all, and reigning in triumph and glory for ever.

Now, when you get the plan of this book, you find that it is something more than a book of detached sentences, good maxims, and comforting words. It is a book which unfolds the Divine purpose, and not only reveals the way of salvation, but marks the pathway of the people of God through this wilderness, and foreshows the destiny of the world which He has made and the church which He has redeemed.

When we look at these facts we see that this is no man's book. When Columbus saw the river Orinoco, someone said he had discovered an island. He replied: "No such river as that flows from an island. That mighty torrent must drain the waters of a continent." So this book comes, not from the empty hearts of impostors, liars, and deceivers—it springs from the eternal depths of Divine wisdom, love, and grace. It is the transcript of the Divine mind, the unfolding of the Divine purpose, the revelation of the Divine will. God help us to receive it, to believe it, and be saved through Christ our Lord.

The Blood they couldn't See!

By R. SCOTT MONCRIEFF.

Some weeks ago, at a railway station in one of our popular sea-side resorts, the Saturday had been an unusually busy one; several excursion trains, in addition to the ordinary trains, had arrived, each one crowded with passengers who had hurried forth from it in thousands, eager for rest or recreation by the sea-side, during the Whitsuntide holidays.

"The place has been full of life all day," one would have said; but "there is death here," he would have added, could he have looked into a room off the platform, in which one had been lying that day, waiting for the summons to go forth in an opposite direction, on a journey she knew not whither, and absolutely alone!

About nine o'clock that evening, a friend at whose house I was a guest, Mr. M——, received an urgent message to "come and pray with a woman dying at the railway station." Her name was not given, nor any other information, by the girl bringing it; nor did she know Mr. M——'s name, having been told to run to the house and ask for "the gentleman that preaches on the sands." And as it was his practice to do so every evening, he had no hesitation in accepting the message as for himself, and hurried off, after asking me to follow him soon, as he could not remain absent from his own house for above half-an-hour.

When I entered the station soon afterwards, glad to leave behind me the glare and noise from a crowded drinking and dancing saloon immediately adjoining it, the platform was deserted and quiet at last; but quieter still was the room in which I found the departing traveller, a girl of about twenty, one of the two barmaids employed in the restaurant. She had been seized on the day before with an illness so severe that the doctor had failed to check its progress; and he told me, as I spoke to him at the door, that though she might survive until next day, the end might now come at any moment. But a short time before, she had seemed so rapidly sinking that her companion in the refreshment-room, who had frequently heard Mr. M—— preaching on the sands just opposite the railway station, had sent for him, not knowing a single minister of the Gospel, or having a single Christian friend in the town, as she told me.

She assured me, further, that during the eighteen months which she had spent in that situation neither of the barmaids had been allowed time to go to a place of worship on one single Sunday, though they had asked for it again and again; and that she had been able to hear the Gospel preached only now and then by crossing the road on a Sunday evening, between trains, and listening to the preaching on the sands! She added that her companion, a delicate girl, had come to the situation, from London, only a few weeks before, during which she had not been absent from the bar for a single day until now, and that the girl had not a single friend in the place!

The mother, hastily summoned from London, sat sobbing at one side of the sufferer; at the other Mr. M—— was kneeling, now quoting to her, in low and gentle tones, passages from the Word of God, setting forth Jesus as the only Saviour, and able to save to the uttermost; and now, in simple words, offering prayer. On his rising to leave her, I took his place, and found her mind quite clear and her voice strong, though she was exceedingly weak. She was quite conscious that her end was very near, and admitted that she was not ready for it, and that all was dark before her. She had never been religious, she said; had never thought about her soul; or read the Bible; or cared to go to church. But now she was no longer indifferent, as she had been up to that hour. Mr. M——'s words had thoroughly aroused her to a sense o her need of a Saviour. She was very quiet; but the earnestness of her expression, and of her gaze, revealed the state of her mind, as she told me how she wished she knew Jesus as her Saviour.

"Do you remember," I said, "the old Bible story of the people in Egypt, who were told by God to kill a lamb for each family, and sprinkle the blood on the door-posts in the evening, and that none of the family were to go out of the house until the morning? And do you remember what then took place—how the angel of God, going through the land, killed the firstborn in each house not marked by the blood, but passed over each house on the doors of which blood was sprinkled?"

"Yes; I remember that story," she said.

"And by whom was the blood to be seen," I asked—"by the people inside, or by the angel outside, the house?"

"By the angel outside," she answered.

"So then," I added, "they were saved by trusting to blood which they themselves had shed, but now could not see?"

"Yes; they could not see it," she replied.

"Now," I said, "Jesus, the Lamb of God, was slain by men, and his very blood was poured upon this earth, as the blood of the lamb was put on the door posts. The Word of God says, 'Christ our Passover was sacrificed for us.' God saw his blood, and still sees it upon every one that believes in Jesus; and if you believe in the blood of Jesus, the Lamb of God, now, He will see it on you, and pass over your sins. Do you follow my meaning?"

"Oh, yes; I understand that. How wonderful!" she exclaimed, with animation.

"Now I will tell you a true story," I said. "Many years ago, in India, I had been travelling all day, on horseback, with an elder brother. Late in the evening, when it was quite dark, we came to a river, which we had to cross in order to reach his house on the other side, where his wife and children were expecting us. But we found it so flooded that we could not ford it, and had to wait until a boat could be procured. After long waiting, we were told that the boat was there; and on going down to the river-side, we saw a long, narrow canoe, hollowed out of a single tree, in which, as we were told by the men who had brought it, they would take us across in safety, one by one! My brother had crossed before in that very boat, and had no hesitation in stepping into it, saying he would go first. It was pushed off, and in a moment was swept away on the rapid current, out of sight in the darkness, and I was left alone on the margin of the river.

"After a time I was hailed from the further and unseen shore by a voice which I recognised as my brother's, and I knew that he had crossed in safety. So when the canoe was brought for me, instead of being afraid, as otherwise I might have been, you know, I stepped down into it without fear, and was immediately borne away from the shore. It was not long before we reached the other side; and though it was so dark that I could not see on what to step as I left the canoe, I had been greeted by a voice which I knew to be that of my own brother, and my hand had been grasped by a hand which I felt could be none other than his, as he assisted me up the bank; and ere long he brought me to his own house, where I found a room had been prepared for me, and a hearty welcome."

"I see; I see," said the dying girl, with much earnestness.

I went on saying: "There is a dark river before you, and you are brought down to the very brink of it; but there is One who, if you believe in Him, will show Himself to be your own brother, who has crossed this very river before you, having gone to prepare a place for you in his Father's house on the other side. Can you trust Jesus to save you?"

"Oh, how you have helped me, sir! how you have helped me!" she suddenly exclaimed, with intense earnestness, seizing my hand with an eager grasp, as if I was to support her on her stepping down into the boat.

"Listen," I said, "to what He cries to you from the other side: "When thou passeth through the waters I will be with thee: and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee." "Fear thou not; for I am with thee."

She had raised her head from the pillow, and her left shoulder, turning toward me on seizing my hand; but now she sank back again, murmuring: "Oh, how you have helped me! Thank you; thank you!"

I think I shall never forget the eagerness of her gaze as she seemed to hear the Elder Brother's voice hailing her from the further shore:

On the other side of Jordan,
By the sweet fields of Eden.

On hearing a fresh burst of sobs from her mother, sitting now at the foot of the bed, she partly raised herself again to look at her, and called to her in a very tender tone: "Mother, mother, try not to cry; I have no fear now!"

I then reminded her of her sins, telling her that Jesus could not receive her on the other side unless she repented of them and confessed them on this side. She said that she did indeed feel what a sinner she had been. I urged her to confess them to God in her heart, saying that that was her part, and that so surely as she did that, so surely might she rely on Him to do his part, and to forgive and to cleanse her from all unrighteousness. Still holding my hand, as I rose to leave, she said, "You will come again, sir?"

"Yes, but you will probably have crossed the river before I can come again," I replied.

"It may be so," she calmly answered.

"Then I leave you trusting in the blood, though you can't see it?" I said.

"Yes, just as they did!" was her reply.

The quietness of the room had been disturbed now and then by the clink of glasses in the adjoining bar, and the increasing noise of preparations in the station for the arrival of a train due from London, and as I stepped out on the platform, the crash of dance music and the sounds of revelry from the saloon fell on my ear in very sharp and painful contrast to the scene I had just left; and yet how very many would have pronounced it a scene of death in the midst of life!

About 11 a.m. on the following day I stood once more by the side of the dying girl, who had been expecting me, she said. I was much struck with the brightness of her countenance, and her cheerfulness of voice. Though evidently much weaker, her mind was still quite clear. She was still "trusting in the blood which she could not see, just as they did," she said, and was not afraid of the river; and then, at my suggestion, she earnestly thanked the Lord for the forgiveness of her sins.

After a brief visit, and giving her some passages of Scripture for her encouragement, I bade her farewell as one whom I felt sure I would meet again. I was at the door when I heard myself called, and turning back, I asked her mother if she had called me; but the daughter, with a bright look from her pillow, said, "It was I, sir; only to say good night!"

Mr. M—— called soon after I had left her, and was no less surprised than I had been at her cheerfulness. She assured him that now she was not afraid to die, having found Jesus to be her Saviour, and thanked him as the one whose words had first led her to seek Him.

When I called again, about 5 p.m., I found that she had crossed the river!

Looking at the crowds of idlers in the streets and on the sands, how many would have said again of the scene in the chamber, "It is death in the midst of life!"

But would not He have pronounced it life in the midst of death, in whose Word it is written, "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth" (1 Tim. 5, 6); "He that hath the Son, hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life"? (1 John v. 12.)

THE CAPE GENERAL MISSION.

Mr. W. Spencer Walton and his party are now on their way to the Cape, having left London on Friday last, followed by the benedictions and prayers of many devoted servants of Christ. The spirit and purpose of the Mission have been heartily entered into by thousands of earnest Christians, who will, it is hoped, continually remember each and all of the workers at the throne of grace.

The farewell meeting, held on Wednesday last week at Exeter Hall, was a blessed time, alike for the missionaries and those who attended to wish them God-speed. The chair was occupied by Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, who takes a hearty interest in the Mission. The first speaker was Mr. Schreiner, who dwelt upon the great spiritual need of the Cape. Having lived at Kimberley for nineteen years, he had seen something, not only of the darkness of heathenism, but also of the moral destruction which follows in the wake of ungodly civilisation. He dwelt upon the ravages of drink and the ruin of vice among the natives, the result of contact with the white man, and gave expression to great joy in view of the establishment of the Mission. As is well known, Mr. Schreiner has himself for a dozen years or more done evangelistic work in and around Kimberley, and, alluding to this fact, he said that with others to whom the honour of God and the welfare of the poor people has been a matter of serious concern, he has long prayed for organised work on a large scale and definite Gospel lines. In the visit of Mr. Walton to the colony he discerned the hand of God, and in the Mission he distinctly saw an answer to prayer. Mr. Schreiner observed that the Salvation Army is doing a grand work in Kimberley, and indeed throughout South Africa, but its endeavour lies mainly with a particular class of people. We want, he said, another class to be likewise reached, and I believe this Mission is going to touch this needy class, many of whom are, in fact, longing for the pure Gospel.

Mr. T. B. Miller followed with some earnest words on Acts xiii. 2, 3, in which the separation of Barnabas and Saul to take the Gospel to the Gentiles is recorded. By the "laying on of hands" those who sent them forth identified themselves with the apostles; we also should not overlook the fact that, though "abiding by the stuff," we may, by identification with this Mission, enjoy the privilege of partnership in the efforts of the workers, and thus "share alike with those who go forth to the war." Mr. Miller referred with pleasure to the fact that the Mission is unsectarian; its members belong to different sections of the visible church, but they are all members of the Church of God, and filled with the Holy Ghost and love for their fellow-men. The missionaries having been commended to the Lord in prayer, Mr. A. A. Head appropriately gathering up the thoughts of many hearts, Mr. Walton delivered a short address. Among friends who could not attend were Rev. J. Gelson Gregson, and Mr. J. E. Mathieson, both of whom directed attention to the promises contained in Joshua i. 5—7. The message of Mr. E. H. Glenny, of the North Africa Mission, was "God be with you till we meet again," while a family of friends sent the text: "I will go before thee, and make the crooked places straight: I will break in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron. And I will give thee the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places, that thou mayest know that I, the Lord, which call thee by thy name, am the God of Israel" (Isa. xlv. 2, 3). Having given some account of the origin of the Mission, Mr. Walton declared its purpose to be the exaltation of the living Christ, in order that men may accept Him as Saviour and Lord.

The other members of the party followed with brief addresses. They showed themselves to have experimentally realised the mysteries and joys of the faith of God. Mr. Dudley Kidd quoted 1 John iii. 17, and varied it thus: "Whoso hath the next world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" The millions of Africa are perishing in ignorance of the pardon and deliverance in Christ which the Gospel makes known to mankind. If we shut up our bowels of compassion, how can it be said that the love of God dwells in us? Mr. D. Jackson took his stand upon the gracious promises of 2 Cor. vi. 16: "I will dwell in them, and walk in them." Mr. W. Malcolmson joyfully said good-bye to his friends, for if going to South Africa would unite him eternally with hundreds of souls, he regarded separation from a few for what must, at longest, be but a short time, as an inestimable privilege. Mr. A. Walklett asked for the prayers of the audience, as also did Mr. M. Coates, who was exultant in view of the high vocation to which he had been graciously called. Mrs. Walton, who hopes to assist the Mission in many important ways, was not present, being in the north of England bidding farewell to her friends. Miss Edith Walton, who is completing her training as a nurse, anticipates joining the Mission shortly. She read out John xv. 4: "Abide in me and I in you," &c., and remarked that the work is being undertaken in the strength of God. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe made an earnest appeal for workers for the foreign field, being followed by Mr. John McAuliffe, who besought the abundant blessing of God upon the Mission. May grace be multiplied upon each of the labourers, and news soon come to hand of a great awakening, as a result of evangelistic endeavour at the Cape!

It should be stated that Mr. Daniel Jackson goes out as the missionary of the Railway Mission, this step having been rendered possible by the generosity of Lady Ashburton, who guarantees his yearly stipend. Mr. Spencer Walton has kindly undertaken the supervision of his work at the Cape.

BETHNAL GREEN FREE LIBRARY.—The report that the Committee has just issued, setting forth the work it has done during last year, must be regarded as more than encouraging. The progress in a dozen years has been quite phenomenal; for the 500 volumes, with which a commencement was made, have grown to 20,000, besides an immense number of magazines, &c. In point of fact their very success has been a source of perplexity to the Committee, necessitating additional enterprise and larger outlay, the entire movement being supported by voluntary aid. The plan of posting the advertisement-sheets of the daily papers outside the library at 7 a.m. every day, for the benefit of those seeking employment, is much appreciated. It is estimated that, through its reading-room, lectures, and classes, the Library benefitted some 50,000 persons last year. The trustees are hoping soon to commence building much larger premises, as at present the accommodation is quite inadequate.

ROMANISM IN THE UNITED STATES.—There is coming a struggle between the Church of Rome and the United States, of which the premonitions have been felt at times, and are now agitating the minds of thoughtful men. It may be the last great struggle between the Papacy and Republicanism, issuing in a final triumph for the one or the other. We cannot doubt what the event will be. Romanism is still mighty, but the institutions against which it strives are mightier, because they stand for less error and more truth. It is altogether likely that the Papacy will receive its death wound on the soil of the New World—unless, indeed, it received it at the hands of Luther and his coadjutors, and is simply requiring several centuries of alternate sinkings and risings before lying prostrate for ever. Catholic papers are discussing, to some extent, the question of a "Catholic Congress of the United States," similar to the Congresses which have been held in Europe this year. We hope they will have it. It would tend to increase the sum total of popular intelligence respecting Romanism.—Boston Morning Star.

COUNT CAMPELLO AT SAN REMO.

Count Campello has been working quietly but very successfully in his native district of Valnerina in Umbria. But thousands in every part of Italy are outside the pale of the Church of Rome, and they are inside no other. They are no longer ignorant and superstitious and priest-ridden, and so they cannot see the force of attending a church where, neither intellectually or spiritually, can the priests and their services do them any good. The men feel that. The women are still under the power of the priest, and attend church. But, as a number of fine young men said to me the other day, "We want female education in Italy, that our wives and sisters may be disgusted, as we are, with the present system, and desire a purer and a better."

Count Campello is meeting this state of things. He came to San Remo, and we simply intimated a day or two before that he would hold certain conferences. The people turned out in their thousands to hear him; they applauded what he said; the local press advocated his cause. Before he left for Umbria many waited upon him and begged his return. He has just paid his second visit. We asked the Syndic to grant us the use of the town theatre—being the largest building in the place—that as many as possible might hear Campello. The Syndic put the matter to his colleagues, who unanimously and cordially gave us the use of the building free of expense. Admission was by ticket, so as to secure as far as possible a representative and influential gathering. Last Sunday afternoon the theatre was packed from floor to ceiling with an audience any orator might be proud to address. For two hours Count Campello and his young evangelist and law student, Signor Ugo Janni, discoursed on the nature of true religion as a thing of the heart and of the will, as reconciliation to God through Jesus Christ, and submission of the whole being to his law in love, and of the mission of a church to teach and foster this religion in the heart. They showed how once in early times the Christian Church in Italy answered this purpose. Then, in scathing terms, they denounced the present Papacy as no Church, but a cruel, corrupt, criminal system at war with the interests spiritual, intellectual, and material of the individual, the family, and the community at large. And then they appealed to their countrymen in noble, eloquent words to become Christians by receiving Christ into the heart, and to rally round the banner of Catholic Church reform.

Their words were not in vain, for the very cream of San Remo youth met the two reformers at a private conference the next day, and, after a frank statement of ideas on both sides, an agreement was come to whereby these young men would aid Count Campello in establishing a mission at San Remo as the first step towards the formation of a Reformed Catholic Church.—Rev. Alex. Robertson, in "Evangelical Christendom."

"ECHOES FROM JAPAN."—Dear Sir,—May I through your columns express my regret at the unavoidable delay which has taken place in the publication of this work to those who have subscribed for copies. I trust that this work may be published before the end of the month. Those who wish to secure copies would do so most easily by ordering beforehand, as only a limited number will be issued at present. The book contains missionary information and sketches of the country and people from personal observation, as well as various hints and suggestions which may prove helpful to those who contemplate labouring among this singularly-prepared people—the Japanese. Messrs. Passmore and Alabaster are the publishers.—Yours faithfully,

M. McLean.

DOWN AMONG THE POOR.

SCENE:—The common room of a small lodging-house in East London. Time:—Sunday night. Present:—About fifty men. Enter mine host, known in the neighbourhood as an infidel, and therefore presumably not actuated by any regard to the Sabbath in administering, as he proceeds to do, a vigorous rousing to his lodgers and to the room in general.

"Tidy up a bit now, an' clear this room, I say!"

His orders are promptly obeyed. Presently the cause of the unwonted fit of respectability appears in the person of two simply-dressed young women, whose grave, bright faces, gentle earnest demeanour, sweet presence, and glad Gospel message, are evidently welcome and familiar.

"Deaconesses, they is, from 'Arley 'Ouse, up Bow," a rough man answers to a newcomer's inquiry. The people of the narrow court outside come round the windows to listen to the hearty singing and the simple words.

"Oh, that was good! Just what we wanted to-night!" sighs one of the dreary-looking women. And a poor wandering Italian, come to seek a fortune in our fabulously wealthy England, who has found consumption of the lungs and but little bread or money, looks up with a new wonder lighting his dark southern face as the story of the love of God is told.

"Oh, is it true, miss?" he cries. "I don't get much love in this world."

Things here are not always plain sailing, as one young sister finds, when, after discoursing eloquently to a man who had excited her interest and sympathy, she finds that he is deaf and dumb. Sundry smiles and nudges, unobserved by her, testify to the other lodgers' enjoyment of the mistake; but the fault is atoned for next Sunday by chosen verses being written out for the afflicted man, across whose sad face there comes a gleam of pleasure as his eyes trace on the paper that has been brought there specially for him, "God so loved..."

Sometimes the lodging-house kitchen is rather a noisy scene, and the friendly offices of the landlord are required.

"H'order there, lads! It's all very well, this noise, w'en the men's a-speakin' to you, but w'en the ladies is 'ere you must be quiet," he said one night, unconsciously supplying evidence of woman's influence which we would submit to those who maintain that, however earnestly "we also believe," we should not be allowed to "therefore speak."

As, leaving tracts behind them, our sisters prepare to go, one man says earnestly—

"I wish, miss, I was at work for so good a Master as you are."

And so they pass out into the darkness, leaving the good seed sown upon the waters.—Regions Beyond.

CHURCH GROWTH IN THE UNITED STATES.—The New York Independent has published an elaborate array of figures, showing the extent of Christian progress in the United States. The number of communicants, including Roman Catholics, was increased last year by 877,000, the total rising to 20,667,000. The larger part of the increase is attributed to the Roman Catholic Church, in which all adherents have been reckoned as communicants. As, however, the Romish directories show serious discrepancies, their figures cannot be relied upon. The statistics of the evangelical churches have been compiled on stricter lines. Altogether there are 142,767 churches and 98,322 ministers in the country, being a nett gain of 3882 churches and 3865 ministers on the year. The Independent cogently remarks: "A clear addition of an average of between ten and eleven churches, and as many ministers, every day in the year, does not appear to indicate decline of power of growth. A daily harvest of 240 souls is not symptomatic of that decay which certain sceptics profess to discover in Christianity in this country."

THE KESWICK CONVENTION:

HOW TO EXTEND ITS USEFULNESS.

SIR,—The recent Keswick Convention was attended by many missionaries just now at home on furlough, and by a considerable number of young men and maidens, some going forth almost immediately for the first time, and others only waiting till the Lord shall make his way plain before them.

There were present also many ministers of the Gospel from England, Scotland, and Ireland. All alike bore testimony to the wonderful help the Convention had been made to them, and not a few who had been present in former years were able to tell that the blessing they had then received had been abiding, standing well the test of daily life and work in common home scenes.

It was very generally felt that it might be a great blessing if in future years a far greater number of the heralds of salvation could be gathered together on this interesting occasion. It would mean quickened spiritual life in themselves, and new life in many a pulpit, parish, and mission station.

But the costliness of a visit to Keswick, especially at Convention times, places such a privilege beyond the reach of very many to whom it would be a great boon. Many this year owed the enjoyment of it to the liberality of some of the Lord's stewards, and before I left Keswick I heard of a little company of Christians who had been blessed themselves, resolving to make it easy for several others to attend next year.

This kind thought is capable of yet further extension. It was suggested that a fund for the purpose of paying the expenses of missionaries and other poor ministers for the Keswick week should be commenced at once. I was asked to make the suggestion known, if you will allow me, through your columns, and to say that contributions may for the present be forwarded to me. If this proposal be according to the mind and will of God, the money will be forthcoming, and "friends in council" will then be able to decide to whom to send invitations.

I have authority to say that Mrs. H. C. G. Moule, Ridley Hall, Cambridge, will gladly do all in her power to make the necessary arrangements at Keswick for the reception and entertainment of those who may accept these invitations.

FREDERICK BALDEY.

St. Simon's Vicarage, Southsea.

DEAR SIR,—It will greatly rejoice the hearts of many to see that they are to be visited in their lonely and isolated positions by such men as Mr. Grubb, and that they, amid their heathen surroundings, are to have a visit from Keswick, if they cannot pay a visit to Keswick. Only those who are to some extent acquainted with the isolation and loneliness of work in foreign lands can know how helpful such a visit is likely to be. Many will feel that the Holy Spirit Himself has guided the friends to take up such a work as this. Many will be longing for the visits, and expecting to hear of rich blessing received through such visits, and of lasting results arising from them. No wonder that Mr. Grubb has already more invitations than he can accept. Such work is likely to be most helpful to the missionaries themselves, but not to them only, but to the many native workers, and also to the hundreds of convinced but undecided ones.

The Keswick friends have been guided to a new and most important method of missionary work. The field for such work is almost unbounded. The workers in it are few indeed. Why, then, should not the Keswick friends use the greater part of the money contributed in sending out others in this same way? Our great Master has given the money, and, if we seek them, He will give the men. By this means Keswick might extend its influence over the world, and influence every missionary station in heathendom. I would especially plead for India. Such work seems to be greatly needed there, and surely, in many ways, India has special claims on British Christians. Why should not someone be sent out from Keswick to visit every missionary station in that land? Is not this the best way in which the money already given can be spent? Are there not many who would gladly give more to be spent in the same way? It is not so much more workers that is needed as a fresh baptism for those already working. Let us unite in praying that the great Master will send out others on this grand mission. Let us also plead earnestly that God's richest blessing may accompany them, and that each vessel in which they travel may be the better because they have travelled in it, and each station they visit the better because they visit it.—Very truly yours,

JOHN D. KILBURN.

Helsingfors, Finland, August 13.

A CRY FROM THE AUSTRALIAN BUSH.

DEAR SIR,—You have inserted letters lately as to opium-smoking in Sydney and Melbourne, and as to mission work among the aborigines of Australia.

May I call attention to another crying need of that vast country, viz., evangelistic work among the scattered English settlers in the back bush. At one of the missionary mettings held at Friar's Crag, Keswick, after the Convention was over, a letter was read from a gentleman in New South Wales, which stated that there were thousands "out back" who were worse practical heathen than the Chinese. "Send us," he wrote, "some of your energetic and single-minded men out here." I can confirm his statement as to the godless lives, and the absence of all means of grace except at a great distance and at uncertain intervals, in the back settlements. I met with a man, still young, who had not seen a Bible, nor had a word spoken to him about God or his soul, for fourteen years.

The population is so scattered that no settled minister or fixed place of worship is of much use. What is wanted is men of sound common sense, strength, and energy, full of love and of the Holy Ghost, to be continually moving about from station to station, to hold services, pray, instruct, converse, sell Bibles, &c.

Shall we not all join earnestly in the prayer which was offered that evening at Keswick, that the good Shepherd would be pleased to stir up the hearts of his people, so that the means and the men may be forthcoming, both here and in Australia, for gathering in these stray sheep in the wilderness?—Yours truly,

LAMORNA.

EDINBURGH G.P.O. MISSION BAND. — A number of witnesses for Jesus have recently been raised up in the Edinburgh G.P.O. They have organised themselves into a mission band, and are willing to go as deputations to any place in or around the city. Anyone in charge of a mission wishing such a deputation could have a date fixed by communicating with Alex. Muir, Telegraph Dept., G.P.O., Edinburgh.

THE NEW VICAR OF CROYDON. — Some anxiety has been felt as to the tendencies of the cleric appointed to succeed the late Rev. J. W. Braithwaite, who was universally beloved for his staunch Protestant principles. "A Beverley Resident" writes in The English Churchman: He is by no means a ritualist, but a "moderate churchman," with no extremes one way or the other. At St. Mary's, Beverley, he adopts the north position, not the eastward, and the Hymnal in use is "Church Hymns," and not "Hymns Ancient and Modern." The services are reverently performed, but with no leanings to a high ritualistic order. The music is fairly good, and elaborate on special occasions. Mr. Fisher is a hard-working clergyman, and much beloved by his present parishioners, particularly by the working classes, by whom he will be much missed when he has to leave. He is an excellent preacher and a staunch advocate of temperance, both in his public and private capacity, having been a total abstainer, I believe, for many years.

THE NEW BISHOP OF SYDNEY.—The Rev. Canon W. Saumarez Smith, Principal of St. Aidan's College, Birkenhead, has accepted the Bishopric of Sydney, New South Wales, vacant by the resignation of Bishop Barry. The new bishop signed the memorial of 1881 against the toleration of extreme ritual. The bishop-designate was a scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took a first-class both in the Classical and Theological Tripos. He took the Carus Greek Testament prize, the Scholfield, Seatonian, and Maitland prizes, and held the Crosse Theological and Tyrrwhitt's Hebrew scholarships. He was ordained by the Bishop of Ely to the curacy of St. Paul, Cambridge, and was vicar of Trumpington in the same county. He has been Principal of St. Aidan's College for twenty years, and is an honorary Canon of Chester as well as examining chaplain to the Bishop of Norwich. He is one of the most scholarly evangelicals, and his work on Genesis and his sermons on Christian Faith had a considerable reputation.—English Churchman.

A MORMON STRONGHOLD STORMED.

Richmond, a town in the Cache Valley, in the north of Utah, has a population of about two thousand Mormons. Five years ago no one questioned the authority of the bishop, no one dared to challenge his power. Recent evangelistic activity in the place has been eminently blessed, and is thus described by a correspondent of The New York Observer:—"Rev. W. E. Renshaw came to this place, found a plot belonging to the Presbyterian Church, with a small log cabin on it which served as a school-room, and made his home where no one dared openly to be his friend. He opened a religious service. A few little girls came; large overgrown rude boys would stand at the window, make disturbances at the door, and near the close of the service would enter and make a noise. With a disposition that knew no anger and no fatigue, the services would be begun over again and the boys would hear a little, and this was done as many as three times in the evening until some of them caught the spirit and loved it. This work has been continued for four years, and what is the result?

"It was my pleasure to spend a Sunday here and assist in the services of the neat and commodious Presbyterian Chapel.

HOW DID THIS COME?

"The women of the Synod of Indiana and others know how this labour of love was accomplished. To them it is an open secret. It was their prayers and their faith; to us it is a building wrought of God. March 3, a glorious Utah day, the chapel was open. In a regular manner the congregation assembled and filled the place to overflowing. A new order of things is in the community, and now no one can be too friendly to the Presbyterian minister. A fearless, plain speech, a patience that is never ruffled, a ready word in this centre of priest-craft, intolerance and lust, upheld by the laws of the United States, has done its work. Where four years ago no one dared to question Mormon authority, now there is a growing sentiment, and the conviction is spreading, that its days of darkness are numbered.

"Let no one think the work done. When the power is broken, there remains a still more pressing and solemn duty. Few people can understand outside the Territory the character of Mormonism. Some say "break up polygamy" and let them alone. But polygamy in their religion can never be broken up. The law may restrain it as it does avarice and licentiousness, but with the Mormons it is the very central doctrine of the whole system. The faithful presentation of Christ with noble examples, and continuance in well-doing with faith and prayer: these must receive their reward. A great work lies before the Church; may God give grace that, without faltering, it may be pressed to success in dispelling the darkness and ushering in his glorious kingdom."

CARLISLE CONVENTION for the Deepening of Spiritual Life, Monday to Thursday, September 2—5, in the Drill Hall. Preparatory meeting, Monday evening, 7.45; other day meetings at 7, 11, 3, and 7.30. Hon. Secretary, Mr. C. I. Clapperton, 6, Chiswick-street, Carlisle.

BRAZIL.—Rev. E. H. Soper writes:—I am anxious to begin lecturing in England, as I have just received news of two more of our missionaries in Brazil having been ordered off the field at once through illness. This may hasten my recall to Brazil. My permanent address while in England will be 179, Cattell-road, Birmingham.

GLASGOW CONVENTION.—Eighth annual Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life, will be held in St. Andrew's Hall, Berkeley-street, Glasgow, September 24 to 27. Meetings at 11, 3, and 7.30; preparatory meeting on Monday evening, September 23, at 7.30; also daily prayer meeting in Berkely Hall. Programmes from Mr. Wm. Sloan, 8 Gordon-street, Glasgow

JEWISH MISSIONS IN GERMANY.

There is at Basle a small society of Friends of the Jews. They have no missionary of their own, and Pastor Gottheil, of Stuttgart, is their only representative. In a letter to a friend, published in Woman's Work (America), Pastor Gottheil says:—

"The work of preaching the Gospel to the Jews in western Germany is of a peculiar character. In the east of Germany, and still more so in Austria, Poland, and Russia, the spirit of Romanism (in Russia, Greek Catholicism) prevails and influences the public mind, and rather deters than attracts the Jew from an approach to inquire into the motives of Christianity. All they think about it, more or less, may be summed up in this, that the religion of these Gentiles that dwell among them amounts to worshipping the figure of a dead man on the cross: for the rest, it is a system permitting the indulgence of every sort of licentiousness and evildoing, topped by a very fervent hatred of the Jew, so that it appears as if the best Jew hater be the best Christian. Of course, the Christian missionary is not, especially in the outset, a welcome visitor; under such circumstances, it would be strange were it otherwise. For the Jews in these regions have no knowledge of the fact that the Christianity they see and suffer from is a miserable distortion of the real article, which in its essence is spirit and love, and culminates in the worship of a Spirit, and in love of the one true God.

"Different it is in western Germany, where Gospel light and life prevail. True, it is not all light; there is no want of shade, yea, even darkness is prevailing. But still the Bible is widely spread and the Gospel manifests itself as a power of God, as such recognised even by those who do not yet believe in it, though they participate in its blessed fruit in the concerns of common, every-day life (1 Tim. iv. 8). So we have to do with Jews who are within the influence of the heavenly light, partaking, though unconsciously, sometimes ungratefully, of its sweet and generous impulses. Our appeals, accordingly, are as much to the intellect as to the conscience. And we do not plead in vain on those grounds: for truth is a power that prevails in the end; in the case of the Gospel, in God's good time. For such time, to look out and wait is the pleasure and duty of faith in the Word and promises. Meanwhile, as if to encourage us in believing on, spite of many disappointments and much delay, the faithful Master gives here a soul and there a soul as

EARNESTS OF THE COMING HARVEST.

Thus at this station, worked now by the writer of this paper for well nigh forty years, scarcely any year has passed but that the Lord has graciously given some precious souls from among Israel, to be added to the number of those that have grace to believe unto salvation.

"The first Jew to be drawn to the Son, under this my ministry, was an artisan (a weaver), about the year 1853. He was then a young man—now glorying in his grey hairs—but his Christian life has been one of continued exercise in the grace and graces of Gospel life, so that he has grown a very patriarch in his neighbourhood; and, as a friend remarked who lately heard him expound the Word, 'Verily a prince in Israel.' For all his humble position in life, he has had the privilege of laying hold on many a wavering soul and steadying it in its heavenly course by wise counsel and fervent intercession. Truly he is as salt and a good savour to his surroundings.

"As I write, my thoughts revert to two Jewish ladies, mother and daughter, who are now already with the Saviour, seeing Him whom their souls did love. It was a memorable hour when they both knelt down, confessed their sins, and yielded themselves up for life, death, and eternity, into the pierced hands of Him who has died that they might live and obtain mercy and forgiveness, without money and without price.

"Another young daughter of Israel, having fallen ill, was kindly attended day and night by our deaconesses until recovery. During her illness (two months) this Jewess was much occupied with the question, how it was that these deaconesses, not being Jewesses, bestowed so much unwearied attention upon her. She at last resolved to inquire, and the reason she heard given still more astonished her. It was for the love of Jesus they showed love to others; they thankfully thus repaid, in a small way, the great love wherewith Jesus had loved them. The Jewess was so much struck with the bearing of the sisters, that before her full recovery she resolved to follow in their footsteps and devote her life likewise to such a good work. Of course she was told that she must first become a Christian herself. She was thus brought under the influence of the mission, instructed by myself, and received into the Church. Even whilst yet under instruction she gave herself with all her might to loving work among the sick and suffering, and she promises to shine a bright jewel in his crown, which may He grant!"

A MISSION IN HEBRON.

This ancient town where the remains of our forefathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are buried, has at present a population of 12,000 inhabitants, of which about 2000 are Jewish. Our hearts were drawn out towards it, and there was not a single missionary to tell of a Saviour's love.

After earnest prayer we visited the town and began to preach the Gospel there. For the present we have taken two rooms, arranging for one man to stay permanently and others to make occasional visits. We found the Jews willing to listen to the Gospel, and they gladly received books. In the first two days we gave away all the books we brought with us—viz., 100 Psalms, 50 Hebrew New Testaments, and 50 Hebrew Christian almanacs.

The Jews are divided into two sects, the Sephardim and the Ashknazim: they have two large ancient synagogues, one called "Father Abraham's Synagogue." There is a tradition that once there were in Hebron only nine Jews, and on the Day of Atonement they assembled at the synagogue for worship, but as they had not the full number of ten men which is required for worship, they prayed to the God of father Abraham, and a strange Jew entered. They then began the worship, and at the reading of the Law they asked the stranger what his name was. The answer was "Abraham," and directly after the service the stranger disappeared. Taking it for granted that the patriarch Abraham was the man, they called the synagogue after his name.

Any information about the Evangelical Mission to Israel, which I superintend, can be obtained from Theodore Walker, Esq., Leicester.—Yours in the hope of Israel, Jerusalem. D. C. Joseph.

THE ABORIGINES OF AUSTRALIA.—Mr. and Mrs. Matthews, accompanied hy Paddy and Jennie Swift, have addressed meetings at Finsbury Park Y.M.C.A. Large audiences have listened with deep interest to the story of mission life and work in Central Australia, and many have been the prayers offered that when Mr. Matthews returns, in October next, to resume his work among the dark-skins of Australia, God's blessing may attend his deeds of kindness and words of Gospel hope. There are some 250,000 poor blacks in the great island continent, and those who have seen and heard our dark-skinned friends, Paddy and Jennie Swift, cannot but desire that Mr. Matthews may return full of the Spirit, and be sustained by the prayers of a large number of British Christians.

"FROM ME IS THY FRUIT FOUND."

Hos. xiv. 8.

From Me is thy fruit found;
If thou the joy wouldst know
Of bearing fruit that shall remain,
My life through thee must flow.

From Me is thy fruit found:
Thy efforts all are vain,
Thou canst not grow by taking thought,
Nor fruitfulness attain.

From Me is thy fruit found;
The branch without the tree
Is withered, dead, and cast away—
So thou, apart from Me.

From Me is thy fruit found;
I am the living Root,
Abide in Me and I in you,
So shall ye bear more fruit.

From Me is thy fruit found;
Abundant life I give,
Much fruit the Father's glory is,
For this alone ye live.

From Thee is my fruit found;
Lord, keep me safe in Thee,
Increase the fruits of righteousness,
Live out thy life in me.

WORK AMONGST MARINES.

Though the exodus of workers from London during the summer months necessarily causes a diminution of Christian work in the Metropolis, compensation is to be found in the many special efforts put forth in the health resorts around the coast. The following brief account of a somewhat unique work may prove an incentive to further effort in the same direction.

Mr. F. W. Barclay, a member of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., who is spending his vacation at Deal, has been led to undertake a special work amongst the 1600 Royal Marines stationed in the barracks at Walmer. By invitation of the leader, Mr. Welldon, he took charge of a Bible-class for these young soldiers, which is held every Sunday afternoon in a room adjoining the Victoria Baptist Chapel, and by personal invitation in the streets succeeded in inducing many to attend. Admission to the barracks was next obtained, and in every room he was enabled to give testimony to the men assembled of the saving power of the Gospel as experienced in his own life.

Mr. W. R. Lane was at this time staying in the town, and he was soon enlisted in the work. By kind permission of the pastor, Rev. N. Dobson, three special meetings were held in Victoria Chapel, and on each occasion there was a most encouraging attendance of young soldiers. Mr. W. R. Lane, who was formerly in the Coldstream Guards, gave the addresses, and many professed to accept Christ as their Saviour and Captain. On Wednesday, 14th inst., a tea meeting was held in the same place, after which a Gospel meeting, presided over by Rev. N. Dobson, took place. Addresses were delivered by Mr. F. W. Barclay, Mr. J. H. Putterill (Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A.), and Mr. W. R. Lane. At the close many hands were held up signifying a desire for prayer, and the workers were engaged till a late hour directing those who were anxious to the Saviour. It was gratifying to see one of the drill-sergeants of the corps assisting in this work. When leaving, this faithful soldier of Christ said: "I shall soon have a 'Hallelujah Squad'; six of my men have become Christians." Similar work to this might be carried on during the summer months in all towns where soldiers are stationed.

DR. BAEDEKER IN RUSSIA.

"Hitherto the Lord has helped us." From Moskow we went to Nijney Nowgorod, and then by steamer viâ Kasan to Perm. From Perm by railway across the Asiatic frontier to Ekaterinburg and Tjumen. In all these places we visited the prisons, and found open doors and eager listeners in the prisons, as well as warm sympathy on the part of the governors and officials.

The flood of exiles is simply overwhelming: the prisons on the high road to Siberia are terribly overcrowded. The officials do what they can with a kind heart, but they are not able to stem the stream. Tjumen is the great thoroughfare of exiles who go by land to Siberia; from 18,000 to 19,000 pass that way every summer from May till September. During the winter season they accumulate in the prisons in Russia. At Tjumen the British and Foreign Bible Society have placed a colporteur, who gives to the exiles, as they pass on board the barge, copies of the Gospels, &c. Leaving Tjumen yesterday morning we arrived at Tobolsk this afternoon, and we hope to visit the three large prisons in this place to-morrow and the day after. On Friday we hope to start by steamer to Tomsk, a journey of about seven days. We have been favoured with a permit to travel part of the way in the barge with the exiles, and we may thus have blessed opportunities to give the glorious Gospel to those who are fast bound in iron, and under the terrible power of the prince of darkness. The barge is taken in tow by the steamer.

I will not stop to speak of special cases; it is enough to say that the prisons of Russia present a sad sight. But darkness cannot be too dark for the light to come in to disperse it. "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound."

My visit to these dark regions of humanity is necessarily short; my time is running out fast, and strength for such arduous labour will soon fail. But I feel persuaded that many servants of God would most eagerly step into the gap, and do the work much more effectually than I can do it in only one visit to these parts. This is, indeed, "a region beyond and beneath," which has scarcely come under consideration for missionary enterprise. My friend and fellow-traveller, Schertuzin, is a great help and comfort to me, both as an interpreter and as a most kind and gracious companion. We are grateful for every remembrance in prayer.

After visiting Tomsk, with four to five thousand prisoners, we hope to return via Tjumen to Perm, and thence to Kasan and Samara. Orenburg and Upha are within access by rail from Samara.—Yours in the fellowship of his service, F. W. Baedeker.

Tobolsk, Siberia, Aug. 6.

CONFERENCES will shortly be held in several places. Details of some are given in our list of forthcoming meetings. At Perth (September 10—12) the subject will be: "The Holy Spirit in and with our Lord Jesus Christ, in and with the Written Word, in the World, and in the Church on earth and in heaven." There will be evangelistic addresses, and statements on work at home and abroad.—At Clifton (October 1—3) the subject will be: "God, our own God" (Ps. lxvii. 6).

MR. AND MRS. WILSON, of Redruth, are departing for Australia with the good wishes of a large number of English friends. That Mrs. Wilson's health should have necessitated the change, is deeply regretted, and at a public meeting held a few days ago sympathy with them was expressed in a very practical manner. Mr. Wilson is a native of Australia, and his journal shows that during twenty-two years, while engaged as town missionary at Redruth, he has held 4313 meetings, paid 63,700 visits, conducted 949 open-air services, distributed 270,331 tracts, and attended the death-beds of 762 persons. He told the meeting that he was not conscious of having a single enemy in the town.

THE GOSPEL IN PARIS.

The French services at the Salle Evangélique, Avenue Rapp, Paris, continue to be well attended. At some of the evening meetings it is no unusual thing for 300 or 400 to be present. At the special services in Italian and Spanish, which the Council of the Evangelical Alliance are arranging, there are some hopeful signs that the brethren, who have been invited to come from their work in Spain and Italy to evangelise amongst their own countrymen during the Paris Exhibition, will not labour in vain.

OH, THAT FRANCE KNEW THE LORD!

The number of candid souls, plunged in unbelief and doubt, who yet yearn after "an unknown God," is very great. What they need is to meet a living Saviour; and what they generally do meet are more or less erudite divines, whose arguments perplex. Among other letters from men of this stamp is the following, which may be called typical. It is addressed to one of the ladies at the Rue Auber Hall, [of the Salvation Army]:—

"You have stirred a whole world within me. You say that your religion is peace; but since I have heard you the tempest within has arisen more furious than ever. The first time I entered the hall it was from simple curiosity, and Christ once more was placed on my path.

"I have heard great Christian orators without being much touched, and what has touched me has come from poor people laughed to scorn and despised. Have they a charm? a secret? No; but doubtless they believe truly what they say, and they speak from the heart. But what must one do to believe as you believe—to become a new being?...I am weary of my doubts. To forsake the world would not cost me much. I hate this world of short-lived glory and everlasting discussion—this world of bombast, of falseness, of stupid mockery, with a hatred that you have not experienced in forsaking it, for you want to save it, whereas oft-times I would have destroyed it. Whether you are in error or not in your belief, you have in your heart a great pity for those who suffer. It is not those who are without bread that are the most to be pitied. If there is a heaven, and if I do not go there, it will not be laid to your charge."

This grey-headed man of the world is not far from the Kingdom of God, if, indeed, he has not entered. Truly, it has been said, what France wants is not splendid discourses, books, and eloquent prayers, however useful all these may be, but living Christians, each one acting as though he were the only representative of Christ on earth.—Evangelical Christendom.

NEWS OF STANLEY.—A Zanzibar telegram says: "News has been received that Stanley is making for Kavirondo, on the east side of the Nyanza Lake. He had met a white man, probably a missionary, who wanted porters, and had given him some. He will make for Mombasa, but is not expected to reach the coast for some months. Mr. Stevens, the long-distance cyclist, who was sent into Africa by a New York paper, has been heard from. He left Zanzibar some months ago for the interior to discover the whereabouts of Stanley, and is now returning, having failed in his mission.

THE MISSIONARY TRAINING COLLEGE, Puerto Santa Maria, Spain, has closed its fifth session. The principal, Rev. W. Moore, reports that the tone and conduct of the young men under training has shown a decided improvement over previous years. The session closed with seven students. Summing up his efforts, the Principal says: "All are agreed that for a native church a native ministry is a necessity; and the Christian public are now expressing their confidence that this training college is honestly, and with some measure of success, endeavouring to meet that felt need." The hon. treasurer of the college is Mr. D. Matheson, 120, Queen's-gate, London, S.W.

Missionary Jottings.

The Waldensians next September celebrate "The Glorious Return" to their valley two hundred years ago, and the King of Italy, whose ancestors drove them out, assists on this occasion by a gift of £200.

The Moravians, though small in numbers and wealth, have sent out, during the last century, 25,000 missionaries, and expended £60,000 yearly. They have nine mission ships. If all other evangelical churches did as well what a power they would be!

Spain.—The Protestant Church of Spain numbers at present 112 chapels and school-houses, 111 parochial schools, with 61 male and 78 female teachers, 2545 boys and 2095 girls. There are 80 Sunday-schools, with 183 helpers and 3231 scholars. The churches are ministered to by 56 pastors and 35 evangelists. The number of regular attendants is 9164; of communicants, 3442.

"Blind Kaldas," the Protestant colporteur in the City of Assiout, in Egypt, sold 474 volumes of Scriptures last year. He winds his way through the crooked streets without a guide; is acquainted with most of the people; has a robust intellect and a memory well stored with the Bible; is not easily angered and seldom gets into trouble. Kaldas's blindness probably helps him in many ways.

Africa.—There are 27 societies having missions in Africa, with 453 ordained and 107 lay preachers and helpers; 186 women, 10,000 native pastors and helpers, and about 16,000 communicants.—The latest news from Malange, one of Bishop Taylor's stations, is that an entire family of natives, five in number, have forsaken their idols and turned to Christ.—Bishop Crowther has lately opened at Bonny (Africa) a new church built of iron, with sitting accommodation for 1,000 worshippers.

China.—In the China Inland Mission Hospital and Dispensary at Chefoo, 5,539 out-patients have been relieved, 217 surgical operations performed, 96 in-patients treated and brought under spiritual influences, not a few of whom are believed to have accepted Christ as their Saviour; and all this work is done at the small cost of £143. One of the most encouraging signs in the missionary work in China is the hold the Gospel is gaining on the hearts of the women. One lady has from forty to fifty present at a women's meeting each Sunday.

Samoa.—The Samoans, regarding whom so much interest is now felt, are considered the finest race among the Polynesian Islands. They are graceful, pleasing, of good physique, and have a soft and musical language. They have been converted to Christianity and are very moral and honest. On Sunday no work is permitted on shore, nor are natives allowed, it is said, to work on board ships in port. The sale of liquors is absolutely prohibited. It is to be hoped that the faith of these people in Christian nations may not be wronged through violation of treaties.

The French Missionary Society.—The last year has been one of progress. Eight new missionaries, of whom three are married, have entered the field; and the French Congo Mission has been created. In Lessouto, 514 new members have been admitted into the church; 3332 catechumens are preparing for membership; 9875 persons belong to the mission church, which has 110 outposts (fourteen more than in 1887). The Tahitians who came to Paris for the Exposition were present at the annual meeting. One read a speech of thanks to the French churches, and all sang a hymn in their native tongue.

Brazil.—The following statistics are given in the "Evangelical Year Book," published by Rev. Mr. Vanorden. Presbyterian Synod:—63 churches, 32 ministers, of whom 12 are natives, 3 licentiates, 7 candidates, 2966 members, and 13 schools. Methodist Ep. Church.—346 members, 7 ordained ministers, 6 candidates for ordination, 3 local preachers, 20 preaching places, 2 schools, and 4 foreign missionary lady-teachers. Baptist Church.—5 churches, 241 members, 12 male and female missionaries, and 3 native preachers. Bishop Taylor has four labourers in Para, Pernambuco, and Maranhao. The churches organised by the late Dr. Kalley are three in number, having a membership of about 250 believers. There are five evangelical papers and two agencies of Bible societies. Thirty years ago there were hardly any native Christians in Brazil.

Dr. A. T. Pierson.—The New York Evangelist states that Dr. Pierson expects to sail about September 20, in order to spend some months in Scotland advocating the cause of missions.

Light on the Congo.—We rejoice to learn that the workers on the Congo are seeing cheering fruit of their testimony for Christ. Rev. Joseph Clark, of the American Baptist Missionary Union, writing on June 18, says: "Forty-nine baptisms at our Banza Mantike station in the early part of this month, and twenty more on the 11th. Four baptisms at our Lukunga Station on June 9." These are glad tidings. We trust we shall soon receive other equally encouraging messages.

In Persia Christianity has had great success during the last three years. In western Persia there are now more than 2000 church members. What is still more hopeful, much of this progress is made through the efficiency of native pastors. Of the seventy-nine students in the college at Oroomiah, seventy are Christians. There are many village schools established by the missionaries, and Dr. Labaree reports that the Moslems of Persia are more accessible than those of any other land.

Turkey.—The statistics for the Eastern Turkey Mission have just been completed for the year 1888. "The estimated population of the field occupied is over one and a quarter million. This gives to each ordained missionary in the field a parish of ninety-two thousand souls. Of this two and one-quarter millions within the limits of the mission only about sixteen thousand are declared Protestants, one-tenth of one per cent. of the whole number. But of the sixteen thousand declared Protestants, only 2686 are members of the Protestant Church—which makes one church member to every 500 of the souls included within the mission limits.

Syria.—Dr. George E. Post, in an article on the outlook in Syria, says: Little by little the light is stealing in. Men of all religious opinions are inclining to toleration. The Bible is being circulated among the masses. The number of readers is multiplied. Those who believe are bolder, but at the same time more discreet. Those who do not believe are forced to concede that the Bible is the source of religious knowledge and the referee in all cases of doubt or dispute. Those who are far from the spirit of the New Testament claim to be evangelical. Everything is ripening for a grand demonstration of the power of the Holy Spirit.—The Syrian mission in 1827 had only secured 20 converts; to-day its church roll exceeds 1500. The mission in Egypt reports an addition last year to the membership of 365—one for each day of the year.—The mission press at Beirût employs forty-eight persons and during the past year has printed 1900 volumes, the total number of pages being nearly twenty-nine millions. Of these eighteen millions were pages of Scripture. Since the press was established it has turned out a grand total of 394 million pages.

SUNDAY BANDS.—The question of allowing a Sunday band to play on the pier at Ventnor has been decided by the vote of the ratepayers. Voting papers were issued under the system of one man one vote, with the following result:—Against the Sunday band, 313; for the Sunday band, 243. Majority against, 70. As many as 136 ratepayers abstained from voting.

MR. HENRY COOK writes:—The Seamen's Bethel and Reading Rooms at Deanville was opened last week by Mrs. Deane Browne, who had largely contributed to its erection. The upper part of the house is not quite finished, but will soon be complete, and will be used for the comfort of all seamen coming into this Port. Lord Radstock, with Pasteur Creisseil, took part in the meetings, which were largely attended by seamen, workmen, and others. On Saturday morning a respectable man was wandering about to find a doctor, and in great agony of body with cramp, having no place of comfort on the small yacht of which he was in charge. He sought shelter on board our Herald of Mercy, and from our medicine chest we administered a remedy which was effective. Then, wishing to express his sympathy for the work, he put 10s. in the box. Our house will have a bedroom always in readiness for such cases.

On board "The Herald of Mercy, Trouville."

Kansas has abolished the saloon. It seems almost incredible that among a population of 1,700,000, extending from the Missouri River to Colorado, and from Nebraska to Oklahoma, there is not a place where the thirsty or hilarious wayfarer can enter, and, laying down a coin, demand his glass of beer.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Charles Inglis intends to sail on Sept. 4 on a preaching tour in the United States and Canada.

Mr. Leonard Weaver, who has just returned from a visit to Miss de Broen's Mission at Belleville, Paris, will accompany Mr. Inglis to America. These brethren ask prayer for blessing on their labours in the Gospel.

Farnham.—A sixteen days' mission, conducted by Mr. Wales, of the Evangelisation Society, has just been brought to a close at this village, from which great results are expected. Earnest prayer is requested that many may be saved, and that the good work may go on. G. B.

A Blind Evangelist.—Mr. Houston, formerly of Bessbrook, Ireland, has been holding revival meetings for several months in Jersey City, U.S.A. His preaching has been with much power, and Mr. George R. McKenzie, of the Singer Sewing Machine Company, has purchased a site in Grand-street, below Junction, whereon to erect a permanent mission-hall.

Tent-work in Scotland.—Through the liberality of a few friends, the Scottish Evangelistic Association (5, St. Andrew-square, Edinburgh), has been able to send a tent into the harvest-field. This is a difficult work, but, nevertheless, the practice has been greatly blessed in some cases, and with earnest prayer, cheering results may confidently be expected from the present effort.

Hungerford (Berks).—A three weeks' mission has been held here by Mr. Oscar Owers, of the Evangelisation Society. It need not be said that the teaching has been faithful; under God's blessing much good will result. The evening addresses were highly appreciated, but the afternoon "Bible Talks" were the great feature for building up and strengthening Christians in the service of the Master, and especially in encouraging a more intelligent and closer study of his Word.

Mr. and Mrs. Brryman Ridges left England for America some two or three years since. Mrs. Brryman Ridges (whom our readers will remember as Miss Brryman) was much used in evangelistic work at Syracuse, N.Y. She is now ministering to a church in Los Angeles, Cal., but is desiring to return to evangelistic work in the more eastern States. She is more calculated for usefulness in this way, than in a settled ministry. We fear they have been considerably tried financially.

Scarborough.—Rev. R. Balgarnie has been preaching at the Bar Church, Scarborough, during the month of August. Last Sunday was held the thirty-ninth anniversary. The congregations every Sunday have been very large. The open-air services on the foreshore have attracted immense crowds. On Sunday evening, after service, the cabmen, wives, and widows were invited to tea. Mr. Balgarnie commenced his ministry at the Bow Church in 1851. This is his first visit since he retired from the pastorate in 1887, to devote himself to mission work.

Weymouth and Portland.—On the 12th and 13th inst. children's services were held on the sands, conducted by Rev. F. Sumner, of Bristol, who delivered very powerful and telling addresses, which were also much appreciated by large adult audiences. Col. White, of Bournemouth, also lent his aid. There were also open-air services conducted on Portland, on the 12th: all denominations combined, and efficiently led the singing. About 500 souls listened with rapt attention to the fervid Scriptural utterances of Mr. Sumner, the word evidently taking hold. On the 13th Mr. Sumner and Mr. J. C. Allday delivered earnest addresses to about 400 Portlanders. Mr. Enos Young, a Portland farmer (whom God has greatly blessed) also assisted.

Mr. John Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society, has just concluded a three weeks' united tent mission at Purton, near Swindon, which has been greatly owned by God. The Church-people and Nonconformists have united heartily together. The tent has not only been packed full, but on Sundays hundreds of people were unable to find a seat. Some of the worst characters in the neighbourhood have been reached by this effort, and the number of young men who have attended night after night has greatly cheered the hearts of the workers. Many have come a distance of several miles to attend the services, and the most earnest attention has been paid on every occasion to the glorious Gospel, which has been the power of God unto salvation.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 25.—Judges X.

Times of quietness (1—5).—God will not be always threshing. After storms have disturbed the atmosphere, there come times of clear shining and peace. Such parentheses of rest came to Israel under Tola and Jair, of whom there is little notable to record. How often it happens that we make much of the days of strife and sorrow, while we permit the days of uneventful calm and prosperity to pass almost without remark.

Times of sin and suffering (6—9).—Very woeful is this incessant story of backsliding. The whole land must have been infected with multiplied idolatries. What a medley of gods! Yet, is it not always the case, that one idolatry of the heart leads on to another? Sin is gregarious in its nature, and suffering always follows. "Sore distress" (9); as had been foretold (Lev. xxvi. 17, 37). It is very beneficent of God to have associated sin with sore distress, as He has done physical maladies with pain, else we had been content to sin until we had dropped into death.

Times of repentance (10—18).—Truly pathetic is this scene! The cry of agony (10). There is hope when sinners cry to God with genuine contrition, and to such cries there is an immediate response. The answer of God may have come by Him, or by angels, but it was very just. Their sorrows were not due to any inattention or failure on his part. He had ever helped them. But as they had preferred others, let these now do as much for them as He had done (Jer. ii. 28). Then, when the people had gathered in solemn assembly to receive the answer, they were not driven to despair, but cast themselves on the Divine mercy, at the same time putting away their idols. Are we clear of strange Gods (1 John v. 21)? If so, the grief of God for our miseries will issue in all-sufficient deliverance. "Let us search and try our hearts, and turn again to the Lord."

MONDAY, AUGUST 26.—Judges XI.

Jephthah had a very base origin (1—3).—But men ought not to be reproached with their parentage, if their own character is sweet and noble. Let us so live as to cast a halo of light on our origin, however lowly. Is not this also an illustration of God's constant action (1 Cor. i. 27)?

The terms of agreement (4—11).—This is the way in which we treat God. First, we refuse Him, then we eagerly apply to Him. But may we not learn here the one condition on which Christ is willing to undertake our salvation? If he deliver us, we must be willing that He should be leader and head. This is where we so often fail to realise Christ's salvation. We would be glad enough to be delivered, we are not prepared to yield the sovereignty of our souls; but on no other terms will He deliver. Mark the religiousness of Jephthah's character (11).

The parley (12—28).—This was consistent with Deut. xx. 10, 11. The land had not belonged to the Ammonites, but to the Amorites, from whom Israel had taken it at God's command; Ammon, therefore, had no claim to it whatever.

His vow (29—40).—There was no need of such a vow to obtain God's favour. Our vows should not be made to win God's help, but as an expression of our gratitude and love. We should be careful as to the subject-matter of our vows (Eccl. v. 2). How noble the tenacity of soul with which these two great souls clung to the terms of that solemn vow, though it cost them so dear. There is no need to suppose for a moment that she was sacrificed in death; this was distinctly prohibited (Deut. xii. 30, 31). Besides, the women went to talk with her from year to year (40, marg.). She was evidently devoted to a life of perpetual maidenhood, a bitter sorrow to an Israelite woman. The marginal of v. 31 reads "or" for "and," which may explain the apparent failure of Jephthah to fulfil his vow.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 27.—Judges XII.

Fratricidal strife (1—6).—This is the worst of all. There is no war to be compared to civil war. Ephraim had contended thus with Gideon (Jud. viii. 1). Pride lay at the root of all. They could not endure that there should be honour and glory from which they were excluded. How conciliatory was the rugged chieftain's answer (2, 3). There is much in his character which is very noble! Ephraim was evidently the aggressor, not only by invading the territory of Gilead, but by using scurrilous terms of reproach, describing the Gileadites as fugitives from themselves. Ah, deceitful, hell-fired tongue (James iii. 6)! The word "shibboleth" means river. Forty and two thousand is 2040. This scene has led to the use of shibboleth, to indicate the tests which Christians impose on each other, and by which they condemn those who differ from them in matters trivial as an h, whilst they ignore the great bonds of a common brotherhood (Rom. xiv. 19).

Some minor Judgeships succeed (8—15), which call for very slight notice, and yet in these quiet days the people were able to recoup themselves for the grievous ravages made in their prosperity during the preceding years. We all of us need quiet, growing days in our lives, in which we may not be winning conspicuous victories, or making remarkable progress, but are righting ourselves, striking our roots deep, and repairing the mistakes of the past. Days of uninterrupted spiritual experience, of even monotony of circumstance, of unbroken prosperity are sent to give us such opportunities which are urgently needed in all human lives. But amid such times it is necessary that there should be an habitual recognition of Christ's judgeship and kingship.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 21.—Judges XIII.

Samson's story is very interesting. It teaches what can be wrought by one man who is right with God, and in whom God's Spirit dwells with mighty power. He was a man of mighty faith, and this made him the man he was (Heb. xi. 32). All things were possible to him, because he believed (Mark xi. 23). And he was able to believe, so long as he lived a life which, symbolically at least, and to a certain extent literally, was a life of separation (Num. vi. 2). Probably he was not specially remarkable in his physique: his power was the result of faith.

The Philistines (1) have given their name to Palestine, but were altogether insignificant, possessing five cities to the south; but Israel's sin made them strong. Dan's lot lay next to Philistia. The dock-leaf grows near the nettle.

An angelic annunciation (3—7).—This Angel was the Lord Himself, who is the Word of God, for his name is called Wonderful (18, marg.) and Jehovah (19). How careful should parents be to deny themselves of even lawful indulgences for the sake of their children. We should share with others, and specially with our dearest, all those communications with which God rejoices our hearts (6, 7).

Manoah's prayer and its answer (8—23).—This simple-hearted man needed further assurance, which God graciously supplied (Ps. xxv. 8, 9); and He also accepted the sacrifice with such wonderful signs as to put his Divine authority beyond dispute. God will give all needful directions, but will not gratify needless curiosity (18, marg.). Does not the Angel of the Covenant always ascend with the smoke of our praise and prayer, making them acceptable (20. Rev. viii. 3)? God's past dealings with us should assure us, amid mysterious and terrible perplexities (23).

Samson's birth (24, 25).—From the first there were evident traces of the Divine blessing, and of the possession of the Divine Spirit (Isa. xliv. 3, 4).

THURSDAY, AUGUST 29.—Judges XIV.

Samson's illicit love (1—4).—As in so many other cases this great mistake lay at the root of much of the misery and sin of Samson's life. He had no right to allow his heart to go out towards any woman of an alien race (Deut. vii. 3). The only good point about it was, that he acquainted his parents with his intention. It is said to have been "of the Lord" (4), in the sense of God permitting him to take his own way, and so overruling his actions as to bring about the accomplishment of his own purposes.

Samson's first exploit (5—9).—We are set to exercise in loneliness and on a small arena the gifts which finally are to be manifested to the world. Our great Samson encountered the lion of hell in the desert, before, as he bowed in death, he brought down in ruins the structure of hellish power. Samson would not tell his parents the origin of the honey, lest they might have scrupled to partake of it (Lev. xi. 27). In these little acts of laxity, he was already laying the fondation of his fall. The borer-worm prepares the oak for its fall long ere it snaps before the north-east blast. God may use men, even though their conduct is not wholly pleasing to Him.

Samson's marriage, feast, and riddle (10—20).—The proposal of riddles was a favourite Oriental pastime. It was the seventh day of the week, but the fourth of the feast (14, 15). The sheets were the hykes still worn in the East. This Philistine girl eventually suffered the fate, which she now sought to avoid (15 and xv. 6). How foolish is it to be ensnared by a pretty or a handsome face, unless we know something of the inner life also! How hollow is much of the friendship of the world! We may be thankful when bitter disappointments wean us from it. Let us never forget the sense in which Samson's riddle has been realised in the destruction of death by Christ (Rom. v. 3—5; 1 Cor. xv. 54; Heb. ii. 14, 15). Some of our bitterest foes yield us strength and sweetness beneath the gracious influences of the Holy Spirit.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 30.—Judges XV.

Samson was a genial, good-natured, happy soul; full of joke and mirth (xvi. 25); willing enough to forgive and forget; and so he made new advances to the woman who had so basely betrayed his confidence, but found that she had become the wife of another (1, 2).

His acts of vengeance were terrible (3—8).—The Hebrew word might be better rendered jackal, usually found in packs. How much evil may be wrought by the means of a number of insignificant fire brands!

A hip and thigh struggle refers probably to the close quarters into which he came with his foes; it was a hand-to-hand conflict; involving therefore the most strenuous putting forth of strength, with each fresh combatant.

Judah's treachery (9—17) was mean in the extreme. It shows to how low a pitch of servility those will come who yield meanly to a foreign despot's yoke. The men of Judah treated Samson, as in after years Christ, whom they bound and delivered to the Gentiles. But as Samson could not be holden by the ropes, so did the bands of death fall from off the limbs of Christ, when raised from the dead on the third day in the might of the Holy Ghost (Acts ii. 24).

A lesson of dependence (18—20).—Samson gloried too much in his own strength. It was in the moment of exultation that this great thirst came, from which his right arm could not save him. He was driven to prayer; and confessed that he was only a servant, and that the recent deliverance had been given. He pleaded that he might be now delivered for God's glory, lest the uncircumcised rejoice. So when flushed with success we are often reminded that it is not ours, but God's good gift. Many a well of comfort opened to us might be called "the well of him that cried" (Ps. xxxiv. 6)

SATURDAY, AUGUST 31.—Judges XVI.

A fatal snare again entangled Samson (1—3).—How many great men have been too weak to resist the wiles of the flesh. Those who do great exploits for God must ever watch against these. And only God's Spirit, who is not only on us for service but in us for character, can deliver us. Beware of the eye (Matt. v. 28). What a striking illustration is here of the thoroughness of Christ's victory over those who watched his grave! In spite of them He carried captivity captive (Eph. iv. 8).

A third time Samson fell under the deadly fascination of a woman (4—17).—Nor did he escape this time so easily. By a promise, equivalent to £600, the Philistine lords bribed Delilah to ascertain the secret of his strength. This proves that it was not to be accounted for merely by his great muscular development. At first he was too guarded to tell his secret. But instead of directly refusing, he uses evasive excuses, and still tarried in her company. It would seem impossible that he should even have told all his heart to one who had thrice deceived him by summoning the Philistines at her call. But licentiousness robs men of wit and courage (Prov. xxii. 14). What a warning to us not to dally with any secret Delilah sin, lest the snip of the scissors, or the sweep of the sharp razor, deprive us of our spiritual strength. The most awful thing about it is our unconsciousness of spiritual decline (20, Hos. vii. 9). Awake and arise, ye who sleep on a Delilah's lap.

Repentance and renewal (18—31).—Alone in the prison-cell reflection did its work; and prayer again arose from Samson's heart; his hair began to grow again. Is not there an analogy to Peter's repentance with bitter tears, preparing for Pentecost? What pathos in that last petition (28; Ps. lxxiv. 18—23)! There is an encouragement here for backsliders to return to God that He may forgive and restore them, and peradventure use them again.

Sunday Afternoon, September 1.

David and Goliath.—1 Sam. xvii. 32—51.

Golden Text: Rom. viii. 31.

The Valley of Elah, where this combat took place (1, 2), lay about fourteen or fifteen miles south-west of Jerusalem, and about nine miles from Bethlehem. The Philistines pitched on the south-west between Shocoh and Azekah, cities of Judah: the Israelites were on the north-east; the water-course of Elah ran through the intervening valley.

The Philistine champion was Goliath of Gath (4—7). Note his height. A cubit is about 1½ feet, and a span is half a cubit. He would, therefore, be about 9 ft. 9 in. high. His armour consisted of helmet, covering head, neck, and sides of face, leaving eyes and forehead exposed; coat of mail, and greaves upon his legs. His weapons were, target, or javelin, hung over his shoulders, and a heavy spear. His strength may be judged from the fact that his coat of mail weighed about 157 lbs., and the head of his spear about 19lbs. For forty days this armed giant challenged the Israelites to send out a man to meet him in single combat (8—11, 16). Neither Saul, nor Jonathan, nor any of the Israelites accepted the challenge. All were "dismayed, and sore afraid" (11, 24).

But a champion is found for Israel in the person of God's Anointed. In the providence of God, David comes upon the scene at the right moment. Both armies seemed to be preparing for conflict (21); it was probably the last day of the giant's challenge. The apparently accidental circumstances of David's appearance in the camp at such a time were all links in the chain of the Divine purpose. The three brothers in the camp (13); the errand upon which David was sent (17, 18); the repeated challenge of Goliath as David saluted his brethren (23), all indicate Divine arrangement, and yet without interfering with the freedom of human action. The character of David appears in his intercourse with Eliab (28, 29). He met the contemptuous rebuke of his elder brother without retaliation. He had learned the secret of self-control. And yet his meekness was not weakness or cowardice. He had the courage to do right without asking his brother's permission.

The lesson takes up the narrative at David's appearance before Saul. "Let no man's heart fail," &c. (32). They were brave words, but were not spoken in the spirit of self-confidence. Saul could not understand them. He contrasted David and Goliath (33), and saw no prospect of victory, for he left God entirely out of his reckoning. But David can give a reason for his confidence (34—37). Note his graphic description of his encounter with the lion and the bear. He never seems to have mentioned these before. And they are only mentioned now to justify his present confidence. Note, also, that he gives God the glory of these victories. "The Lord delivered me," &c. (37). David argued that giants encased in armour and full of the spirit of boasting were just as easily vanquished as were wild beasts. And much more was at stake in this conflict. Then it was sheep, now it is the people of Israel, and the glory of Israel's God. David looks not only at Goliath, but at God, therefore he sees no reason for fear.

"Saul armed David with his armour" (38).—This seemed necessary in Saul's judgment. He was utterly unable to understand the actings of faith. The invisible God was not so real to him as his own armour and sword. And in these David "essayed to go" (39). But he was unused to them; not only so, they impeded the free use of his arms in handling the sling. And it is impossible for him fully to trust God while wearing Saul's armour. The man who makes God his confidence must allow God to make choice of his own means. And so "he put them off" (39), and went forth to meet the giant as a shepherd lad. He carried his shepherd's staff, his scrip in which he usually carried his food, and his sling. This "consisted of a couple of strings of sinew or some fibrous substance, attached to a leathern receptacle for the stone." It was an effective weapon in war; and David's experience in defending his sheep had made him skilful in the use of it. Thus armed, and gathering five smooth stones from the brook, he met the Philistines' champion.

The giant looked with disdain upon David (42); he felt insulted that such a youth should appear against him with his shepherd's staff. "Am I a dog?" (43). David could not have wounded the pride of his enemy more effectually. The only thing with which he meets the ponderous armour, and the heavy weapons of the giant is the ordinary weapon of the shepherd youth. That, at least, was all Goliath could see; and so he "cursed him" (43), and expected speedily to annihilate him. But David's bold answer to the retort shows that there is something more that the giant cannot see: "Thou comest with sword, and spear, and shield; I come in the name of the Lord of hosts" (45).—Notice that David puts against the weapons of the giant, not his own sling and stones (he has no confidence in them alone), but "the name of the Lord." This means confidence in God's strength; and that he was God's representative, by whose victory God is to have glory (46, 47). Then followed the conflict. "The Philistine drew nigh;" "David hasted" (48), full of confidence in God. He placed the stone in his sling, took steady aim, and smote the giant in the one unprotected spot. "The stone sank into his forehead, and he fell upon his face to the earth" (49). Then, with his own sword, David severed the head from the giant's body (51), and gained the victory for the army of Israel (52—54).

The useful application of this lesson to our scholars will be readily understood. Let the subject be

Giant Killing.—There are many giants in our own hearts that distress us just as much as Goliath distressed Israel. Some of them are Unbelief, Procrastination, Slothfulness, Selfishness, Pride, Envy, Passion. Not one of these can be overcome, except as David slew Goliath. Trying is like putting on Saul's armour. Trusting is accepting and appropriating the power of God. Through Christ even a child can overcome (Matt. i. 21; Phil. iv. 13).

Then there are giants outside of us, by whose power others are oppressed. Such are Intemperance, Infidelity, Gambling, Dishonesty. Against these and similar evils every Christian is to wage war. Learn to fight them "in the name of Jesus."

The illustrative lesson should also be applied. Does it not exhibit in graphic form a picture of our Lord's victory gained for us? We are delivered by his victory: "I have overcome the world."

CLIFTON CONFERENCE. — Twenty-seventh annual Conference, in the Victoria rooms, Tuesday to Thursday, October 1—3. Early prayer meetings, 7, each days; other meetings, 11 and 7. The convener is Rev. James Ormiston, rector of St. Mary-le-Port, Bristol.

TEXTS ON "SANDWICH" BOARDS.—Many friends may have noticed sandwich men parading Piccadilly and other streets with texts of Scripture on their boards. These men were first engaged six months ago, through the help of a kind lady who has given herself and her all in uncalculating devotion to Him who laid down his life for her. The continuance of the work must now depend on the free-will offerings of the Lord's people, and it is hoped that a sufficient number may be forthcoming to maintain at least the two men at present employed. Testimonies have been given as to the influence of these texts, which meet the eye of many who never read the Word of God. A Christian policeman said to me recently, in reference to these texts, "They cannot help reading the Bible, when it is day by day open before their eyes in this way." Information will be gladly furnished by Mr. Edward Trotter, 5, Montagu-square, and by myself—(Miss)M. McLean, 57, King's-road, Chelsea, S.W.

A HOLIDAY MEDITATION.—I rose early in the morning to view the moutains of Arran. They were enveloped in clouds, and rendered invisible. Thus, it occurred to me, have my fair prospects in the landscape of life been often obscured, and the mists of sadness and uncertainty have shed a gloom over my spirits. I have said, "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why are thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise Him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God." I looked again across the arm of the ocean which intervened, and I saw the clouds becoming gradually thinner; the mountains showed their grotesque and interesting forms, as if seen through a veil, which at length dispersed, and the magnificent group of hills was seen in all its beauty. So, I thought, has Mercy often shed her rays over the scene of life, dissolved the clouds of apprehension and sorrow, and cheered the whole prospect with the enlivening light of hope and love. Every mountain raises its head to the glory of God; all their fantastic but sublime combinations declare his wisdom, power, and goodness. This lovely scenery shall preach to my soul. From its ever-varying features I will draw forth instruction, and subjects for praise.—Legh Richmond.

Letters to the Editor.

THE LATE DR. HORATIUS BONAR.

Sir,—I have read with much interest your excellent notice of the late Rev. Horatius Bonar, D.D. There is a curious mistake in it—viz., William Burns of Islay. This is the mixing up the names of two brothers—viz., Rev. Wm. C. Burns, who supplied Rev. Murray McCheyne's place when he visited the Holy Land, and afterwards was missionary to China; and the other, Rev. Islay Burns, D.D., who succeeded McCheyne in St. Peter's, Dundee, and was afterwards Professor in the Free Church College, Glasgow. Also, I may mention that he was not a fellow student of Dr. Bonar's in Edinburgh, as he did not study there, but in Glasgow. He was, however, afterwards associated with him in rescue work in Dundee and elsewhere. It might be interesting to state that amongst Wm. C. Burns' fellow students in Glasgow were Rev. James Hamilton, D.D., Rev. James Halley, and Rev. Wm. Arnot, names well known in the Christian world. As the last surviving brother of the Kilsyth family, I beg to send this correction.

Yours truly, Walter Burns.

THE GOSPEL FOR SOUTH AMERICA.

Dear Sir,—I wish to draw your attention to missionary labours in South America. I am a native of that vast continent, and what I have seen of it would justify any evangelical missionary society in directing its labours wholly to that one quarter of the globe. To fully understand the darkness, the depth that the people have sunk in vice, and in all that is foul and loathsome, would require a personal investigation. As regards the missionaries, I believe that there are a few of the English Church, but so few and so scattered that they have not such an effect on the people as societies elsewhere.

I hold the same views as many of the converted natives of South America hold, and that is, that a society should be started, on the following basis:—(1) That it direct its attention wholly to the vast continent of South America; (2) That instead of giving them a curriculum in a great deal of Latin and Greek, workers should be taught Spanish or Portuguese (the latter for Brazil), besides a good general English education; (3) That they (the missionaries) also be well tested as to the motives they go there for; (4) That some place be fixed where they could study the language to a certain extent before going, so as not to lose much time when out there; (5) That the society be free from sectarianism.

Hoping this will, with God's blessing, bear some fruit in that great cause,—I remain, &c.,

A Converted South American.

Stornoway, Isle of Lewis.

MRS. STEPHEN MENZIES, who is well and honourably known for her work in connection with the Young Women's Christian Association, has lately been the chief instrument in founding a a home in Liverpool, in which ladies are received for training in work among the poor or on the foreign mission-field. Though evangelisation occupies the prominent place in the scheme, nursing and medicine are duly considered. Such ladies as are possessed of private means are expected to pay for their board and lodging, but provision is made to supply this in deserving instances.

DR. JAMES MARTINEAU, whose name has long given the lustre of culture to Unitarianism, has stated his own experience in these words:—"Ebionites, Arians, Socinians, all seem to me to contrast unfavourably with their opponents, and to exhibit a type of thought and character far less worthy, on the whole, of the true genius of Christianity. I am conscious that my deepest obligations, as a learner from others, are in almost every department to writers not of my own creed. In philosophy I have had to unlearn most that I had imbibed from my early text-books, and the authors in chief favour with them. In Biblical interpretation I derive from Calvin and Whitby the help that fails me in Crell and Belsham. In devotional literature and religious thought I find nothing of ours that does not pale before Augustine, Tauler, and Pascal. And in the poetry of the Church it is the Latin or the German hymns, or the lines of Charles Wesley or of Keble, that fasten on my memory and heart, and make all else seem poor and cold."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Bishop Jones, metropolitan, of South Africa, has returned to his field of labour with over £11,000 collected by him during fifteen months' absence from Cape Town.

Canon William Saumarez Smith, D.D., Principal of St. Aidan's Theological College, Birkenhead, has accepted the bishopric of Sydney. He is one of the most scholarly of the evangelical section of the Church.

It is proposed to raise an annuity fund in memory of the late Mrs. Ryle, wife of the Bishop of Liverpool, in connection with the Ladies' Bible and Domestic Mission, in the work of which she took the deepest interest.

At a meeting of Coventry Churchmen on the Birmingham bishopric question, Lord Leigh said that no more bishops were wanted, and he did not intend to give a brass farthing to the fund. He would rather give the poor parsons a little instead.

Canon Wilberforce says that the special temptation of the Established Church is timidity and compromise in dealing with national sin. The peculiar dignity of the Church of England consists in her commission to be the unfolder of a divine life to a nation, not to a sect.

In connection with the Church Congress at Cardiff, the Dean and Chapter of Llandaff propose to have a Welsh service in Llandaff Cathedral on Tuesday evening, October 1. The Bishop of St. Asaph has consented to preach the sermon in Welsh, and a Welsh choir will be specially organised for the musical parts of the service.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, on a recent visit to Mr. Joseph Sebag-Montefiore, at Ramsgate, met Dr. Hermann Adler, delegate chief Rabbi of British Jews, and Dr. Gaster, chief Rabbi of the Spanish and Portuguese Jews in England. On this The Rock well remarks: "There is far more likelihood of converting Jews where Christianity is a force of love, than where it assumes a persecuting garb. One of the most exasperating obstacles to their acceptance of Messiah has been the frightfully unchristian attitude towards them for centuries of the Christian Church."

METHODIST.

The Birmingham mission of the Wesleyans, under the care of Revs. F. L. Wiseman and J. G. Mantle, is proving remarkably successful. At the temperance meetings 750 pledges have been taken.

At the last quarterly meeting of the members of the Free Methodist Church, Ann-street, Sydney, Rev. W. Osborne Lilley, who has been the minister of the church for nearly six years, was unanimously invited to continue for another five years.

Hitherto the Wesleyan chapel committee has not had the right to grant loans to chapels without seat-rents; but this is henceforth to be permitted, as it is now found that many causes can only be sustained by working on new lines, which include the abolition of pew-rents.

Intelligence has just been received from East Africa announcing the sad fact that the district of the Methodist Free Church mission is suffering from a terrible famine. Rev. T. H. Carthew writes as follows: "We are really in a painful condition, and what we shall do before it is possible to gather another harvest, I cannot say. The majority of the children are taking their food at the mission-house at my expense." Mrs. Herve writes: "Sick women and children wait at the mission-house every morning; my heart bleeds for them, but I can do nothing with an empty purse." Rev. G. Turner, missionary secretary, strongly pleads for subscriptions, which may be sent to him at Hanover House, Sheffield.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Sydney Presbytery have been considering how to meet the alarming religious indifference and non-churchgoing in that city.

The Moderator of the Irish General Assembly has gone to attend the bi-centennial celebration of the return of the Vaudois to their valleys, at the express invitation of the Table of the Waldensian Church.

Dr. Monro Gibson, besides assisting at the Northfield Conference from 1st to 12th inst., is to take a leading part in the Conference to be conducted by Mr. Moody in Chicago from September 20 onwards for ten days, at which time the Bible Institute will be formally opened.

Dr. James MacGregor, in an address in the city hall of Auckland, exhorted his hearers who were Scottish to train their children in the Shorter Catechism, and appealed to his brother ministers in New Zealand to minimise as much as they can the little troubles that divide them. Strong-minded and cultured natures, he said, weary of the war of creeds and churches, and seeing uncharitableness and bitterness sometimes elevated to Christian virtues, are seeking peace in scepticism; while gentle, tender natures—he knew them—tired of the endless squabbles of Protestantism, are seeking peace in Rome.

The scheme to send a missionary to the great Xesibe tribe of Kaffirs, at present being pleaded by the United Presbyterian students in the churches of that denomination, has met with unexampled success. But four months have elapsed since the pleading began, and already the sum gathered exceeds that of last year by one half. The congregations are taking up the scheme with great enthusiasm, and it is highly probable the total will be the largest ever attained. The notable feature of the increase is that it is composed mainly of small sums. The working classes are proving by self-sacrifice their deepened, intelligent interest in the work of the foreign missionary.

SALVATION ARMY.

Brilliant meetings were held at Carlisle on Sunday week, resulting in several seeking the blessing of a clean heart, and a large number of sinners becoming penitents.

Mrs. Booth continues very ill. Mrs. Bramwell Booth writes:—"During the past three months we have hoped that a great change was going on for the better, but at present there are many anxious symptoms."

The work of the Army still continues to be successfully carried on in Norway. A large building has been secured at Bergen, the principal town on the west coast, and also at Fredrikshald. Two other barracks are being erected, and a boat expedition is also being fitted up for working amongst the population living on the fjords and rivers.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. William Scott, of Albion Church, Hull, has by cable accepted the pastorate at Brisbane. Mr. Scott has been in Hull seven years as pastor of the church in which Rev. Newman Hall commenced his ministry.

Dr. Parker preached on Sunday at West Clapton-street Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and mentioned that it was thirty-eight years ago since he, a youth, heard the late Thomas Binney preach the opening sermon in connection with that place of worship.

The National Council of Congregational Guilds will continue next year its examinations of the young in religious knowledge. The result of last year's experiment of holding examinations in Welsh for the Principality was not so satisfactory as to induce the Council to repeat it, but the question will be considered at the Sunday-school Conference to be held shortly in connection with the annual assembly of the Congregational Union of Wales.

BAPTIST.

Sir Morton Peto has just attained the age which the Psalmist intimates is reached "by reason of strength"—fourscore!

The Young Men's Bible-class, South-street, Greenwich, is steadily growing in influence. The members number 130, and they have recently been benefiting, intellectually and spiritually, by addresses delivered by their president, Rev. Charles Spurgeon, returned from his journey round the world.

The church at St. Andrew's-street, Cambridge, has just celebrated the opening of a new school-room, capable of seating 400 persons, and class-rooms with accommodation for 300 children. A novel feature of the opening services was the fact that no collections were made, as the whole amount required, about £2300, had already been subscribed.

The church at Teignmouth, South Devon, struggles under a heavy burden at present. The new chapel having diminished the light of a public house opposite, Rev. E. T. Scammell, the pastor, was sued for damages, and had a verdict given against him of £50, which with legal expenses amounts to a debt of £200. A defence fund has been started, and the response has been hearty on all hands. Nevertheless, it has been found necessary to solicit aid from outside churches.

Mr. Wm. P. Lockhart, of Liverpool, has expressed his amazement at the proposal of the London Baptist Association to form an orchestral band in connection with their "forward" movement, the said band to include "reed and string instruments and a cornet." At the risk of being thought "narrow," Mr. Lockhart ventures to assert that the use of such means is contrary to the principles of the New Testament, and must in the long run be fatal to the progress of the Gospel of Christ.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

A church conference at Inverurie, attended by forty-five elders and ten ministers, discussed the subject of non-churchgoing, the care of the young, the kirk-session and its relation to the parish, and Christian liberality.

At the unveiling of the Chalmers bust on the Abbey Craig, both moderators expressed a strong desire that a union of the Established and Free Churches might soon be consummated. Dr. Laird was so sanguine as to observe that though he might not see such a union, yet younger men present would. These sentiments were received with general applause.

Sir Donald Currie, in laying the memorial stone of a new Free Church at Kirkmichael, remarked that he was one who left the Establishment with his minister in 1843, and had remained in connection with the Free Church ever since. The new edifice will be known as the Duff Memorial Church, in memory of Dr. Duff, who received his early education in the village.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Irish Presbyterian Church has now under its care 80,340 families, 103,415 communicants, and 758 day-schools, with 105,906 scholars.

The Methodist Mission tent, which has been pitched for the past two or three weeks at Derryall, near Portadown, has been largely attended, and already several have professed to have decided for Christ. The second Methodist tent has entered on a month's services under hopeful auspices at Magheragall, co. Antrim.

Sir Chas. E. Lewis, M.P., presided last week over a largely attended meeting at Portrush on behalf of the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland, a society which was established in 1859 on an undenominational basis, and which is doing an excellent work in circulating the Word of God and pure literature among all classes of the people.

Open-air religious services have recently been held with encouraging success in Sandymount, Kingstown, Rathmines, and other places in the vicinity of Dublin. Similar services have also been held at Derry-lane, Macken, and Corlespratten, near Killeshandra, and at Gortnakilly, near the foot of Mount Gabriel, co. Cork. It is believed that these meetings have been made a blessing to many.

Rev. Dr. Gallandet, general manager of "The Church Mission to Deaf Mutes," New York, is at present engaged in efforts to encourage the work in Ireland. In conjunction with Mr. Maginn and others, he has addressed meetings at Cork, Kingstown, Monkstown, and Belfast, and has given much valuable information as to the progress of Christian work among deaf mutes in the United Kingdom and America.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Benjamin Pratten, of Brighton, formerly classical tutor at Stepney Baptist College.—Mrs. W. H. Mayers, mother of Rev. W. J. Mayers, for many years an earnest worker in connection with Onslow Baptist Church, Brompton.—Rev. James Jollie, senior army chaplain at Madras, who before his departure for India, eighteen years ago, won the affection of many persons in Edinburgh while assisting Dr. Veitch, of St. Cuthbert's.—Revs. F. S. Dietrich and W. Groenning, two promising young missionaries of the American Evangelical Lutheran Mission, who succumbed to cholera at Rajah-Mundry, South India.—Mr. Robert Woodside, of Ballycastle, co. Antrim, a devoted and generous member of the Presbyterian Church.—Rev. J. P. Sutherland, formerly missionary in Samoa, latterly Sydney agent of the London Missionary Society, and highly esteemed by the Congregationalists of New South Wales.—Miss Miller, of Killala, Ireland, a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and an earnest worker on behalf of the poor, the widow, and the fatherless.—Rev. Dr. John Leech, chaplain of Kingston College, Ireland, in the fifty-eighth year of his ministry.

HOME.

Good Templary in the Channel Islands shows an increase on the year.

Guinness', Dublin, in two years and nine months, have earned £2,048,000. This is ahead of the prospectus by about 34 per cent.

Rev. Charles Garrett says England spends 7d. per head to send the Gospel to the heathen, and 70s. per head on intoxicating drinks.

Dr. Horatius Bonar, Edinburgh, recently deceased, and much lamented, was a quiet but earnest abstainer and temperance worker.

The Standard says: Seventeen members of the Nationalist party have given notice of their intention to move the rejection of the Irish Sunday-closing Bill.

The Royal Commission on Sunday Closing in Wales will resume its sittings on the 23rd prox., at Welshpool. The sittings will be continued at various towns in September and October.

Mr. Michael Davitt says half the Irish drink bill of £11,000,000 a year would be enough to set every woollen mill in Ireland running, and thus find employment for the young people in their own country.

Under the auspices of the West London Band of Hope, and by permission of the Bishop of London, a successful fête and temperance demonstration was held recently in the grounds of Fulham Palace.

Rev. Dr. Bardsley, Bishop of Sodor and Man, has joined the Rechabites. The Bishop of London and Mrs. Temple are already chiefs in their respective tents. Mr. Bowen Rowlands, Q.C., has also joined that body.

Mr. Guy Hayler, the newly-appointed secretary to the North of England Temperance League, leaves a fine record of temperance work behind him in Hull. During sixteen years he has attended an average of over two hundred meetings a year.

Under the heading of "Fruits of the Traffic," The Alliance News gives a number of instances culled from the daily papers of the ruin the drink is working in the homes of the people. It is an awful reflection on a Government-supported traffic.

The Wesleyans have now 3,436 Bands of Hope, with 358,150 members, an increase during the past year of 92 bands and 19,035 members. The adult temperance societies number 606, an increase of 86, with a membership of 41,311, being an increase of 8,922.

A memorial signed by the Marquis of Westminster, the Bishop of London, and others, on behalf of the Native Races and Liquor Traffic United Committee has been addressed to Lord Salisbury, asking his influence at the approaching International Conference on African affairs, in favour of the repression of the drink traffic with the natives.

FOREIGN.

The police of St. Petersburg have in one year arrested 47,000 persons for drunkenness.

A total abstinence society has been founded in connection with the Armenian Church at Berlin.

Rev. J. W. Faraday, Wesleyan missionary, just returned from South Africa, said at Sheffield: "More harm has been done in South Africa by brandy than all the good accomplished by the missionaries."

Rev. John Williams, Wesleyan missionary, returned from West Africa, said, recently: "They were not troubled with infidel literature in West Africa, but with floods of rum and other liquors, which were demoralising the people."

The Emir of Bokhara, in a treaty with Russia, stipulated that no spirituous liquors would be introduced as merchandise into Bokhara, except for the strict use of the Russian diplomatic corps, and the members of the Eastern community in the town of Bokhara.

OBITUARY.

MR. JAMES B. WILL, FLORENCE.

This hard-working witness for Christ and his Word passed away on the 31st ult., having been ailing for some months previously. Rev. A. Meille, of Florence, writes as follows: "Twenty years of labour together, and always in perfect harmony, form a tie that is not broken without deepest pain." He had worked hard at translating Dr. Schaff's Bible Dictionary into Italian, but did not live to complete it. An irrepressible desire to see once more his aged mother, nearly ninety years of age, prompted him, in spite of the advice of his friends, to undertake the long journey to Scotland, and, passing through Lucerne, he ascended the Rigi (by train). But the entire journey proved too much for him, and his disease taking a fatal turn, he expired six days after he reached London."

PROFESSOR TH. CHRISTLIEB, BONN.

With great sorrow we record the death of this honoured servant of the Gospel, tidings of which reach us as we go to press, in the following brief form, from Miss M. L. Christlieb:—

"He hath done all things well!" We say it with aching hearts and trembling lips, but with unwavering faith in God's boundless love and wisdom. Our beloved father was suddenly called home on Thursday evening, August 15, through the bursting of a blood vessel in the brain. There was no sad anticipation of death, no painful parting, no agony, only a falling asleep in the Lord, so quietly, peacefully, and childlike. We could not believe it to be the end. He was led dreaming through the dark valley, and never knew it till he woke up again in the glory of the Master's smile, and hearing his welcome, "Well done, good and faithful servant." Oh, it was beautiful, beautiful for him. The sympathy throughout Germany does our hearts good; it is soothing to know he was so beloved and honoured everywhere. You and many English friends will sympathise with us in the deep loss we have sustained.

Copies of "Grace and Truth" and "Safety, Certainty, and Enjoyment" have already helped more than one seeker after peace in the Rest. One led to another, and yesterday, boys were coming all day to sign! I had twenty-five recruits yesterday alone, and a whole squad more are coming this evening! and we are going in for getting EVERY boy in the whole village!—and now, 'Please, miss, mayn't the girls sign?' So I have got to open a girls' branch as well! So the work grows."

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

BRONCHO-PHTHISIS with HEART AFFECTION.—CASE of MISS SAGE.

In the early spring of this year Miss A. J. Sage applied to me for advice upon her case. She had suffered for some time from extreme weakness, pains in her side, back, and chest, with hacking cough, and greenish expectoration, flushings, palpitations, and impaired digestion. These symptoms had become chronic. Seeing an announcement in the Gospel Standard, she was encouraged to write to me.

I advised her fully; and in a letter recently received she says:—"I have found such relief from your treatment that I am now, through God's blessing, quite strong and well. I never felt better in my life. I hope your treatment will become very largely known. I will do my best to make it known.—Yours truly, A. J. SAGE, Bentley, near Ipswich."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Paper covers, 6d.; Cloth boards, 1s.

"I haven't taken up teetotal work; but teetotal work has taken me up! Morgan & Scott made me accept a big, handsome Pledge Book, in February; and somehow the thing has fairly caught fire here. One led to another, and yesterday, boys were coming all day to sign! I had twenty-five recruits yesterday alone, and a whole squad more are coming this evening! and we are going in for getting EVERY boy in the whole village!—and now, 'Please, miss, mayn't the girls sign?' So I have got to open a girls' branch as well! So the work grows."

WISH to remind the Christian friends and helpers of their work that the COUNTRY BRANCH of the MISSIONARY TRAINING INSTITUTE —Cliff House, near Chatsworth, in the Peak of Derbyshire—will be OPEN TILL THE END OF THE LONG VACATION, SEPTEMBER 25, for the reception of visitors and families.

The house is spacious and comfortable, and stands in 20 acres of picturesque grounds, through which the River Derwent runs. The climate is bracing. Tennis grounds, fishing, boating, &c.; library and observatory.

Interesting Excursions on every hand. Terms, for September, 30s. a week. Full information on application to the Secretary, Cliff House, Curbar, via Sheffield.

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm (not only cut off from the comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid), may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

HELP WANTED FOR THE TOILERS OF THE DEEP.

TEN Mission Vessels now cruise with the Trawling Fleets, each being at once a CHURCH, DISPENSARY, LIBRARY, and CLUB. Funds are required to provide a Mission Vessel for EVERY FLEET, and for the maintenance of the HOSPITAL MISSION SHIPS Queen Victoria and Albert. The urgent necessity of these floating Hospitals is shown by the fact that during last year over 7,000 cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated on board the Dispensary of the Mission Vessels. WHO WILL HELP? Large or small Offerings will be thankfully acknowledged.

6. THE CHILDREN FOR CHRIST: Thoughts for Christian Parents on the Consecration of the Home Life.

"There is a tone of fervour and devotion pervading the book that contrasts pleasantly with the trivially inane tone some writers think fit to adopt in writing for and about children. All Sunday School Teachers and parents would do well to lay its lessons to heart."
Methodist Recorder.

"All that this author writes is good, but this book is the best of all; not because it is more ably written than others, but because it treats a subject of supreme importance, and treats it for the most part in a manner well calculated to produce a deep impression."
Christian Commonwealth.

"This is a golden book, full of holy wisdom and impulse, which cannot fail to stir the hearts of all parents."
Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Robert Laws, M.D., pioneer of the Livingstonia Mission.

Our "Day in the Country" fund is overdrawn, and there are yet some applicants we desire to help. We shall therefore be glad if those friends who still purpose sending gifts towards this excellent object will do so as early as possible.

☞ Some of our friends in different parts of the country have written to us complaining of the difficulty they have latterly experienced in obtaining copies of the current number of THE CHRISTIAN. It is therefore needful to explain that our paper is to be obtained, by order, of any newsagent or bookseller. It is also kept on sale at very many book and newspaper shops throughout the country. And further, Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son have arranged to have an increased supply at their various bookstalls. It is hoped that no further difficulty will be experienced.

We would remind our readers across the Atlantic that Mr. Charles Inglis, evangelist, hopes soon to pay a visit to the United States and Canada. His last visit there was greatly blessed. We would suggest to friends to arrange with Mr. Inglis for some of his Bible-readings to Christians, a line of work in which the evangelist has been much owned in this country. He hopes to reach New York about September 11, and may be communicated with—Care of Y.M.C. Association, Twenty-Third-street, New York City.

The Roman Catholics insist now more than ever, as we have reason to know, upon the assumption that England owed her conversion to Christianity entirely to the Church of Rome, and that through the mission of Augustine, who was sent by Pope Gregory, the Gospel spread through the whole length and breadth of the land. Canon Body, while preaching lately in Durham, denounced this idea as "utterly and absolutely a fiction." Except Kent and portions of Middlesex, there was no part of England that owed its conversion to the Roman mission; other parts were taught Christianity by Oswald, Aidan, Bede, Hilda, and other saints. Although some of Canon Body's conclusions may be questioned, the fact he has emphasised is one of importance, especially in teaching English Church history to the young.

Dr. Fulton has created no small stir at Brighton and places adjacent by his very outspoken addresses on Romanism. The Sussex Daily News has been publishing columns of correspondence on the subject, and the language used by some of the Anglo-Romish apologists shows how severely the Doctor has hit them. The local Hon. Secretary of that Ritualistic organisation, the English Church Union, has the hardihood to propose that the Bishop ought to take away the licences of the three evangelical clergymen who were on the platform at Dr. Fulton's Brighton lecture! That is an indication of the temper with which the advocates of Romanising doctrine view any faithful criticism of their principles.

Needless personalities are much to be deprecated on either side of a religious controversy, but the time has come for plain speaking as to the Romeward tendencies of many churches that enjoy the prestige of State favour and aid under our Protestant Constitution. In this Anti-Reformation movement Brighton has been very conspicuously active, and we therefore rejoice that Dr. Fulton and the Protestant Alliance have attacked the evil in one of its greatest strongholds.

A correspondent of The Times rightly draws attention to the recent utterance of the managing director of the London General Omnibus Company, in which that gentleman virtually authorised, or at any rate condoned, the pilfering that is carried on by some of the Company's omnibus conductors. He declined to favour the introduction of the ticket system, because

> With the present competition, their conductors require all their time for looking after the passengers. The more money a conductor got into his own hands the more he had to 'operate' upon for his own benefit, and if by the use of tickets they took away his interest in that respect, they would, to a great extent, destroy his activity on behalf of the Company.

We agree with the writer in The Times that it is something novel and startling to find the manager of a large public company defending dishonesty, and placing a premium on pilfering. Such an attitude cannot tend to the elevation of public or private morals. Surely the true cure for the disease is the employment of men of honesty and principle, and the payment to them of sufficient wages.

No one can read the long eulogistic article on Mr. Spurgeon's sermons in last week's Guardian without regarding it as a hopeful sign, amid many of a different nature. That paper tells its clerical readers that the causes of the extraordinary success of these sermons and of their wide circulation, are the preacher's entire devotion to what he believes to be his Master's work, his intellectual ability, coupled with a deep insight into the workings of the human heart, and his sturdy, unflinching honesty, which refuses, whatever the temptation, to withhold what will be wholesome and profitable. The article says—

> The message delivered by Mr. Spurgeon is that which the Church of England ought to have delivered, and the work which he organised is that which the Church ought to have carried out.

Other reflections arise on the contemplation of the twentieth volume of "The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit," telling its tale of twenty years' work, at the rate of a hundred sermons a year from the brain and heart of a single man. Such a fact is a proof that there is a true breadth in evangelical truth, and that the men who object to its narrowness and sameness are deceived by their own false judgments. Moreover, the circulation of these sermons, wherever the English language is spoken, acts, through the providence of the Spirit, as a remarkable counteraction to the false and defective teaching of these days; and at the same time these printed sermons furnish a standard whereby tens of thousands of persons judge what kind of doctrine it is that the Holy Ghost blesses, while they keep up a healthy protest against the cold essays which are often read to congregations on Sabbath days under the pretension of preaching to the souls of men.

An International Conference on the affairs of Africa is to be held during the coming autumn. The Native Races and Liquor Traffic Committee have therefore, very opportunely, presented a memorial to Lord Salisbury through the Duke of Westminster. The memorial recalls the language of statesmen on the subject, that of the Premier among others, and urges the importance of united action on the part of the civilised powers. The Queen has been pleased to receive a similar memorial. This vigorous action will receive a grateful acknowledgment from all friends of Africa. The replies received awaken hope, but the matter is one of such moment as to call for prayer from all those who have followed the awful record of evils which have flowed from this terrible traffic.

Perhaps the most unpleasant fact in those which recently have been brought to light in connection with the tramway companies' servants' agitation is that in respect to the amount of Sunday labour which is required from the drivers and conductors. It is, therefore, satisfactory to note that, so far as the employés in Leicester are concerned, this labour will be reduced somewhat; in compliance with the men's demand, in future "one day off" in fourteen will be allowed.

We cannot regard this arrangement as altogether satisfactory, for we consider that every man is entitled to the Sabbath day of rest, and where, as in the case of the employés in question, the ordinary day's work covers thirteen hours, that rest is all the more necessary. Are there in Leicester any Christian people who use the tramcars on the Lord's day? If there are, cannot they in future abstain from so doing, and thereby lessen the men's duties, and render their Sunday work less necessary?

Lady Radnor recently enabled a troop of about fifty poor children from Stepney to spend a few weeks on her estate near Salisbury. At the close of their visit she invited them to tea in the park at Longford Castle, and escorted them through the gardens and grounds. A contemporary in recording the happy circumstance asks, "Are there not others owning parks and pleasure grounds who will follow Lady Radnor's bright example?" We venture to add that, if there are any such, they will find pleasure ground and park all the more beautiful after they have been enjoyed by some of the weary little people from one of our large cities.

It is somewhat remarkable to find that a recent agnostic writer quotes from the Bible to prove his statement in regard to the "unsearchableness" of God. Surely it ought to have struck the Editor of The Westminster Review that there is something inconsistent in the position of one who, rejecting revelation, appeals to the Old and the New Testaments in support of his arguments. The writer in question only affords another illustration of the illogical courses of those who refuse to "become as little children" in regard to the reception of Divine truth.

The Theosophists are again astir, Mrs. Besant's conversion to the cloudy system having caused some little excitement amongst both the Pantheists and the so-called Freethinkers. Mrs. Besant will do everybody a favour if she succeeds in giving a clear definition of the tenets of the Theosophists. We cannot, however, hope for this, or that she herself will find in them either peace or rest. Like hundreds of others, she is going afar for that which is near, and endeavouring to find in the misty regions of philosophy that which is revealed only in the person and work of Jesus Christ.

The Echo has some excellent remarks in regard to chapel building, both in Wales and England, in places where chapels already abound. After reference to one little town of 2500 inhabitants, with at least six chapels and a parish church, the six Nonconformist ministers having "not half enough to do," and getting "only a bare subsistence," it says:—

> Baptists and Congregationalists who do strongly repudiate sacerdotalism should give their strength to the multiplication of unpaid lay preachers, rather than to the multiplication of tiny churches, each with its paid minister.

There are thousands of places waiting for the evangelist, simply because men are too anxious about non-essentials to go over and help them. While chapel building is proceeding apace, we fear it is the case generally that Christ's command to preach the Gospel to every creature is receiving only half-hearted obedience.

It is pleasant to find in a professional and semi-scientific paper like The Hospital such an utterance as the following in regard to the lessons taught by suffering:—

> Many who are in the thick of the bustle of this world; who are making gods of themselves or of their wealth or of their brains; or, absorbed in their work, have no time to think of their souls or of their Saviour who bought them—these busy ones suddenly realise the truth of the words of the Psalmist: "Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled; Thou takest away their breath, they die and return to their dust." God leads them into the wilderness and communes with them alone. In the quiet and rest of the sick-room, if they will but submit themselves to his will, they learn more and greater truths in a few weeks than years of health and prosperity would teach them. It has been well said, "We are in the hands of a higher Physician than this world knows; One who cannot mistreat our case or prescribe wrongly for us. The great cure to be wrought in us is the cure of self-will, that we may learn self-resignation; and all God's various dealings with us have this one end in view." Happy, thrice happy are they who use this time of rest for recollection and prayer, and, rising from illness to renewed life with the earnest intention of amendment, can in after years say, "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept thy word."

The statement made the other day at the Spalding Sessions, that the practice of plucking live geese is "very prevalent in that part of Lincolnshire," seems almost incredible. We hope the fine inflicted upon the offenders, although it was far too light, will do something to put an end to so brutal a custom. That in a fairly civilised part of England, it should be alleged to be usual to pluck live geese every six weeks "for the sake of their feathers" shows what a field there still is before the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and before every Christian man and woman in the country.

From the daily press we learn that a slaughter of swallows has been organised on a large scale along the southern seaboard of France. The poor creatures alight on wires provided for the purpose, tired out after long flights to or from Italy and the East, and they are killed in thousands by means of electric currents. This massacre of the innocents has been ordained in the interests of fashion, and the slaughtered birds are used for the decoration of the hats or bonnets of dainty dames and demoiselles in London, Paris, or New York. There is some talk of petitioning the prefects of the Southern Departments to use their authority to prevent the extension and continuance of this ornithological carnage. We have welcomed the discontinuance of such decorations in the fashion of the present year, and earnestly hope that ladies will not countenance this disgraceful slaughter of God's beautiful birds by adopting them again.

So seldom does the daily or weekly secular press devote space to religious or sacred topics, that any enterprise in that direction deserves commendation. The Manchester City News has been furnishing its readers with several articles from the pen of Leo Grindon, on "The Science and Poetry of the Old Testament," the more recent papers treating of the trees, zoology, metals, gems, and colours. In these hurrying days it is well that men should have their thoughts raised above the street, the factory, or the exchange, and that they should be led to consider how the goodness of God's providence may be seen in the wonderful beauty, arrangement, and harmony of Nature.

As usual, The Daily Telegraph is improving the return of the "dead season" by initiating a correspondence on some taking popular topic. This time it is "The Battle of Life" that is the theme for many lucubrations more or less weighty and appropriate; and certainly no topic of more wide-spread interest could have been chosen. To the great majority of mankind life is a constant warfare with inimical forces, though the struggle is, in too many cases, intensified by the actual sin or the inherited disability of the combatant. It is of little use to quarrel with the inevitable; the great thing is to recognise the fact that in the abounding goodness of God ample provision is made in his glorious Gospel for fighting the good fight of faith and laying hold on eternal life.

Those to whom "eternal life" is an empty phrase, and whose horizon is bounded by the narrow span of earthly existence, must ever be at the sport and mercy of circumstance. Far otherwise is it with the true and trustful Christian, who can afford to regard lightly the affliction that is for a season, and that will one day give place to the eternal weight of glory. To all such there will neither be undue elation in prosperity, nor too great depression in adversity.

Much of the distress and misery that are everywhere around us might be prevented by godly and sober living; but much of it results from the clashing of opposing commercial interests, when the weaker is generally sure to go to the wall. The strike of the London dock labourers, that has now assumed so large proportions, is an acute phase of this recurring war between capital and labour. Popular sympathy will go with the demand of the toilers to receive such an advance in their wage remuneration as will at least keep the wolf from the door. We sincerely trust this can be accomplished without doing serious mischief to the dock companies. The proposal that the dispute should be settled by friendly arbitration is one, we think, that ought to be hailed by both sides. A prolonged social strife of this kind not only causes much immediate suffering, but leaves behind it open wounds that are difficult to heal.

Meanwhile the wives and children of the men are the deepest sufferers, and we cannot but abhor the inhuman argument that the strike must end by starving out the strikers. God has other ideas than those of political economy as to the hire of the labourer.

In view of the unscriptural tendency now so apparent in a certain section of the Established Church to exaggerate the value of frequent attendance at the Lord's Supper, and to represent it as the great, if not the only, means of spiritual nourishment to believers, the following extract from the published University sermons of Dr. Vaughan may not be inopportune:—

> None assuredly would more anxiously fence its reception with every argument of caution and warning than they who attribute to its right reception a unique and incomparable communication of grace. But is there no risk, in some language held concerning it, of an isolation of this holy ordinance, in kind as well as in degree, from every other exercise whatsoever of the Divine life? Is there no opening for the taunt: You make it the whole of religion to receive the sacrament? Shall we feel no risk of exaggeration in a view of this one means of grace which would remove it out of—I had almost said would set it at variance with—the book of Gospel doctrine and Gospel precept as a whole, and frame for it by itself a separate theology out of isolated expressions—sometimes quite evidently emotional and not doctrinal—of the uninspired writers of a post-apostolic age?

PORTSMOUTH AND GOSPORT SEAMEN'S MISSION.—It is thirty-six years since Mr. Henry Cook founded this very useful Mission, which continues to exercise an ever-widening influence. The annual report, just issued, tells of admirable work in several towns on the south and west coasts, and also records a growing effort at seaports of Northern France. With his fellow workers Mr. Cook has made up, filled, and distributed, by means of his Mission ships and boats, about 10,000 little bags, with about 100,000 Bibles, Testaments, Gospel books, tracts, and cards. These bags have been made and sent by ladies interested in the spiritual welfare of sailors, fishermen, and soldiers. Comforters, vests, cuffs, and overalls have also been given away in large numbers. Benefactions and acts of kindness have all been prompted by the love of Christ and had for their ultimate object the commending of that love to men. Copies of this very interesting report may be had from Mr. Cook, Seamen's Friend, Belle Vue-place, Stoke-road, Gosport.

Influence and Power.

By Dr. A. C. DIXON, Baltimore.

"Canst thou bind the sweet influences of the Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion?"—Job xxxviii. 31.

"Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you."—Acts i. 8.

The Pleiades was looked upon as the constellation of spring; Orion, of winter. "The sweet influences of the Pleiades" were the life forces which caused the grass to spring, the plant to grow, and the flower to bloom. "The bands of Orion" were made of ice. They only could bind the sweet influence of spring; spring only, at its return, could loose them. Nothing but silent influence is strong enough to overcome silent influence. The greatest forces in this world are those which work, like the warmth of spring and the cold of winter, in silence.

There is, in every man's life, spring and winter; and there is war between them. In this world good influence has all the time to do battle with bad influence. A legend says that after the battle of Chalons the spirits of the slain soldiers continued the conflict for several days. And after we are dead, the silent, invisible influences we have brought into being will continue their battle for good or evil. Theodore Parker spoke a great truth when, dying in Italy, he said: "There are two Theodore Parkers; one of them is dying in Italy; the other I have planted in America, and it will continue to live." We have, in spite of ourselves, an immortality upon earth. So far from blotting us out, death often intensifies our personality.

But in Christianity there is more than influence. Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." Influence is the sum total of all the forces in our lives—mental, moral, financial, social. Power is God at work. "All power is given unto Me in heaven and earth. Go ye therefore and make disciples, AND LO, I AM WITH YOU." God does not delegate power. He goes along with us, and exerts that power Himself.

Christian influences are not sufficient for the needs of the Church. The success of the Gospel at first did not depend upon influence. The only time the word is used in the Bible is in this text from Job. The Apostles were not men of influence. Few disciples were made from the influential classes, and, as soon as made, they lost by their faithfulness most of the influence they had before. Christ did not choose to become a man of influence. "He made Himself of no reputation." If he had based the success of his kingdom on influence, He would not have chosen an ox-stall for his birthplace, nor fishermen for his Apostles. Power, not influence, is the watchword of the new kingdom; not power in the abstract, but power that goes with the presence of God. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty, and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen; yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are" (1 Cor. i. 26—28). All of which is equal to saying that God hath chosen power rather than influence.

Mere influence never converted a soul. The Spirit can, of course, use influences, just as the lens gathers the rays of light and heat and brings them to a point of power sufficient to melt gold or iron. The rays without the lens would never melt anything, and influence without the Spirit never saved anybody. A young man, about forty years ago, went to the old Round Top Baptist Church of Baltimore, while Mr. Knapp was preaching there. His object was to see what all the excitement was about. He was worldly, and did not believe in the Divinity of Christ. The preacher, full of the Spirit, took for his text, "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." It went like a hot arrow through that young man's heart, and in a short time he was before the congregation, telling the people what a Saviour he had found. Power did in a moment what mere influence never could have done.

We should seek power even at the expense of influence. There is such a thing as gaining and retaining influence over a person in such a way as to lose all power with God. And there is such a thing as losing influence while we gain power. Paul had a good opportunity for gaining influence with Felix by flattering him in his sins, and could have made a splendid impression for himself by such a course. But as he gained influence with Felix, he would have lost power with God. He chose power before influence, and "reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come" till Felix trembled under the hand of God. Paul and Silas did not have influence enough to keep them out of gaol, but there was power enough with them to shake the old gaol open. By a compromising course they might have pleased the authorities, and kept out of prison, but they would have lost all power. The disciples at Pentecost had little influence. They were the followers of One who had been crucified as a malefactor. The doctrines He preached were very unpopular. But they had power, and Christians with power can get along without much influence.

If they had depended upon influence they would have set about the building of such houses and the establishment of such institutions as would have promoted it. All this would have taken time. Influences, like the forces of spring, work slowly. Power works suddenly. Not evolution, but revolution, was the effect of power at Pentecost. Not a word have I to say, let me repeat, against the use of all influences for good. What I insist upon is, that this world is not going to be converted by influences.

Men of influence may be men of power, while men of power may have little influence. The pastor of a village church had among his members some of the most influential men and women in the community. They came to church, and did their routine duties, with great regularity. But there was no power displayed in the quickening of saints or the salvation of sinners. One day in his visiting this pastor called upon a sick member who had not been to church for years, and who had begun to feel that she was a useless branch. He tried to encourage her by the assurance that she could do good by praying for him and the other active members of the Church. But her thoughts after his departure took another turn. She began to think of those she knew who were unsaved, and wrote their names on a piece of paper that she might constantly call them over before God in prayer. Soon a revival was in progress, and many were saved. The pastor had forgotten his sick member in the press of work for souls, and he did not call to see her till weeks after the meetings were over. When he called he noticed the soiled, torn list of names beside her on the pillow, and asked what it meant. With a heart too full for utterance, she handed it to him, and there he saw how she had checked off one name after another, as fast as they were converted, until nearly every name had the cross mark beside it. Here was power without influence in that room of suffering, while in the church there had been influence without power. Power is the God-ward side of us, influence is the man-ward side. That poor sick woman had hold of God; the Church and pastor were trusting everything else but God. If we must sacrifice either, let influence, our relation to man, go; at all hazards, keep in harmony with God. The spiders in Japan build their webs about the telegraph wires until, in some instances, the message cannot pass over. The electric current is carried off through the webs. And the webs of worldly compromise and thought may so encase us that God cannot pour his message of power through us unto others. "To be punished from the glory of his power" is a part of hell. And what more fearful experience can come to a Christian in this world than to be separated from his glorious power by having the harmony between him and the God of power broken?

THE CONVERSION OF THE JEWS.

Lord Beaconsfield anticipated the conversion of the Jews, or rather, to use his own words, that "they will accept the whole of their religion, instead of only the half of it, as they gradually grow more familiar with the true history and character of the New Testament." And he laid great stress on the fact that the non-Christian Jews at the present day are for the most part descendants of the earlier exiles, whose ancestors never heard of Christ till centuries after the crucifixion, when His religion approached them in the guise of a persecution.

"It is improbable," he wrote, "that any descendants of the Jews of Palestine exist who disbelieve in Christ. Perhaps, too, in this enlightened age, as his mind expands and he takes a comprehensive view of this period of progress, the pupil of Moses may ask himself whether all the princes of the house of David have done so much for the Jews as that Prince who was crucified on Calvary? Had it not been for Him, the Jews would have been comparatively unknown, or known only as a high Oriental caste which had lost its country. Has not He made their history the most famous in the world? Has not He hung up their laws in every temple? Has not He vindicated all their wrongs? Has not He avenged the victory of Titus and conquered the Cæsars? What successes did they anticipate from their Messiah? The wildest dreams of their rabbis have been far exceeded.

"Has not Jesus conquered Europe and changed its name into Christendom? All countries that refuse the Cross wither, while the whole of the New World is devoted to the Semitic principle, and its most glorious offspring, the Jewish faith; and the time will come when the vast communities and countless myriads of America and Australia, looking upon Europe as Europe now looks upon Greece, and wondering how so small a space could have achieved such great deeds, will still find music in the songs of Zion, and solace in the parables of Galilee."

WEARY WORKERS IN THE LORD'S VINEYARD may be glad to know of a quiet home at Aylesbury, where they will be welcomed, and find rest and change, for 8s. a week in summer, 9s. in winter. Address, Mrs. Hester, High Bridge Walk, Aylesbury.

The Good Tidings of the Reign of God.

VI.—THE NEW CREATION.

"Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God."—John iii. 3.

"For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creation."—Gal. vi. 15.

"If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."—2 Cor. v. 17.

"Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the Kingdom of his dear Son."—Col. i. 13.

"Flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption."—1 Cor. xv. 50.

"We are buried with Him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life."—Rom. vi. 4.

"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years."—Rev. xx. 6.

It would be a great mistake to suppose that when first John and then Jesus came preaching the Kingdom of Heaven, it was merely the proposal to the people of Israel to accept Jesus as their King, to sit on David's throne. The Kingdom of Heaven, the Reign of God, as preached by John, demanded, as its first condition, confession and repentance. Jesus took up the testimony where John laid it down at his imprisonment, and repeated John's very words: "Repent ye, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." The seven Beatitudes were the principles of the Kingdom, and show that the Kingdom of God is first of all an inward reign, and that its foundations are in the hearts of men.

To suppose that the Kingdom was exclusively Jewish would be another great mistake. Long before Judah was born, his great grandfather Abraham, the progenitor of the nation, had received, beneath the midnight stars, the promise that his seed should be as those stars for multitude, and as the sand upon the seashore, innumerable. And lest it should in after time be thought that this meant only his natural seed through Isaac, it was added from the mouth of God, "In thy Seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."

The probation of the Israelitish nation was the probation of the human race. For Israel was a slip of the vine of the earth taken out of the wood, and planted in a very fruitful hill, if, perchance, under the highest cultivation, it might bring forth good fruit. But when the Husbandman looked that it should bring forth grapes, it brought forth wild grapes, and proved itself "the degenerate branch of a strange vine," "an empty vine," "a vine of Sodom," though planted in God's very fruitful hill. The highest cultivation could not change its nature, but, contrariwise, brought out the worst virus of the plant.

It was to Israel "He looked for justice, but, behold, oppression" toward his elect Servant, for by them "He was oppressed and He was afflicted"; to Israel "He looked for righteousness, but, behold, a cry"—"Crucify Him!"

But though Israel took the lead, they were not alone in condemning Him: "For of a truth against thy holy Servant Jesus, whom Thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the tribes of Israel, were gathered together." The Reign of God, with its joy unspeakable and full of glory, was preached to Israel, that through Israel it might embrace and be embraced by all mankind; but Israel blasphemed the Holy Ghost, and crucified the Son of God; and thus, by the highly cultured and Divinely educated Jew, the Gentiles, whom God had suffered to walk in their own ways, and at the times of whose ignorance He had winked, were led to uttermost rebellion and apostasy. Henceforth it is hopelessly impossible for man as born of Adam or of Abraham to see the Kingdom of God; to flesh and blood the Kingdom of God is barred for evermore: "Except a man be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God"; "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God."

For the Kingdom, the Reign, of God, which in the person of its King, God manifest in the flesh, was proffered to Israel, and through Israel, representatively to the race, was rejected by man in the flesh, both Jew and Gentile. He held relation to Israel as King, and he held relation to the race as Son of Man. Thus Matthew traces his genealogy to David and to Abraham, while Luke traces it to Adam and to God. But man, cultured and uncultured, divinely educated and left to his own ways, having by wicked hands crucified and slain their King, the Son and Heir of God—God raised Him from the dead, and said: "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee." Thus the King passed out of the region of the Adamic creation, out of the sphere of flesh and blood, and became the Head of a New Creation. In the person of the King "old things have passed away, behold all things have become new." In the days of his flesh on earth He has been the Amen, the Faithful and True Witness, and sealed his testimony with his blood; He has become in resurrection

THE BEGINNING OF THE CREATION OF GOD.

"He is," says Archdeacon Lee, in the Speaker's Commentary, on Rev. iii. 14, "the source not only of the first creation, but also of the New Creation, which springs from Him as the second Adam—'Behold I make all things new'" (xxi. 5). Accepting and affirming this, we think, however, that following as it does his title as "the Amen, the Faithful and True Witness," the further title, "The Beginning of the Creation of God," refers more especially to the New Creation, and that Rev. iii. 14 is parallel to Col. i. 15—18, where He is spoken of (1) as "the Firstborn of every creature," and (2) as "the Beginning, the Firstborn from the dead—that in all things He might have the pre-eminence."

But the King having passed out of the first and ruined creation, through death, into resurrection life, it is manifest that those who are joint-heirs with The Christ must also pass out of the old creation into the New. Therefore said the Lord to Nicodemus: "Except a man be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God." Therefore, also the Apostle says we are "translated out of the power of darkness into the Kingdom of the Son of his love." Therefore, again, we are exhorted that "we receiving a Kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear." The things of the old creation are the things which are shaken, but those of the New Creation cannot be shaken; they remain for ever.

The Kingdom therefore is on resurrection ground. It can only be entered by regeneration. Thus, and thus alone, are we made meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light.

There is no question that the Kingdom of God will, in its manifestation, be in resurrection life and glory: it is equally certain that the Kingdom of God's dear Son, into which we who have believed have been translated by being born again, the Kingdom which is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, is not of the old creation but of the New, for we are already in the Kingdom which flesh and blood cannot enter. Erratum.—In the letter from Dr. Bennett on this subject, inserted in our last, a printer's error occurred which destroyed the sense:—"the eternity of water and fire" should have been "the eternity of matter and force."

Conventions on Holiness.*

Two Faith Mission Conventions were held in May and June; and the speakers included, besides several Faith Mission Pilgrims, Revs. C. G. Moore, J. Gelson Gregson, and J. G. Mantle. In every such Convention there will certainly be phrases used with which some hearers cannot fully agree. But learners on this subject need to be advised that there may be a true experience behind doubtful expressions. If possible, let the critical spirit be laid aside, and let the truth be received, however conveyed. Yet it is needful on the other hand to advise teachers on this subject not to awaken prejudice against a truth by conveying it in questionable language. Through not "holding fast the form of sound words" on this subject, many have been prejudiced against it. Nothing is more necessary, and therefore more important, than the cultivation of holiness. It touches the Church's real weakness, and, if rightly conducted, will answer the yearning of hundreds of Christians who have not found all they expected when they first trusted Christ. The words of Mr. Gregson are instructive to teachers and learners alike—

> We should be clear that we do not go beyond what God has revealed in the Word; and on the the other hand that we do not believe less than He has declared...God reveals his truth to those who are willing to receive it (p. 31).

Let the readers of this pamphlet cultivate the spirit that is willing to learn, and they will find that, speaking generally, the speakers have taught not more and not less than does the Word of God.

A few quotations may indicate the searching and practical character of these addresses—

> There were two things which had a difference between them, but ought to have no separation—our position in Christ, and our walk as Christians. Pardon and deliverance ought never to have been separated (p. 6).

This is, no doubt, true; and it is the custom of separation between these two which the present holiness movement reproves. If our public teachers would present in doctrine and in life a full salvation, there would be no need to invite men to a "second blessing." Practical holiness is but the neglected half of salvation, which many Christians hardly dare to expect.

* Report of Conventions at Rothesay and Kinross. (Marshall Bros. 4d.)

In an address on "The Valley of Dry Bones," Mr. Mantle said some excellent things—

He believed it was God's will for us to have a bright, happy religion; but he also believed that the Lord was longing to find men and women in true symyathy with Him over the lost condition of the world (p. 10).

In the following illustration he presented the truth that man's heart would respond to God's word—

When the sun sets in the western sky, the daisy closes its eye and heart. Bring a lamp to it. "Little daisy," says the lamp, "open to me! I have light enough for thee." No response. The stars shine in the heavens and say: "Open to us, little daisy! surely we have light for thee," but it still remains closed. The moon sheds her silvery light over the earth, and says: "Little daisy, surely I have light enough!" but its appeal is all in vain. Only when the sun rises, and throws his gladdening light over the world, does the daisy open its eye again, and rejoice in its rays. So the heart that is proof against aught else will open to the Sun of Righteousness" (pp. 11, 12).

We have space for only one other quotation, which indicates that the dangers of this movement are not ignored. Mr. James Govan, referring to 1 Cor. x. 12, showed how one who professed holiness might be very much occupied with self, and might even depreciate the spiritual attainments of a brother or sister who was never known to speak of "I," because the latter had not in his estimation got "the blessing." He added: "I would rather have the blessing of losing sight of myself, and being taken up with Christ, than any so-called second blessing" (p. 52).

We are glad to commend the pamphlet. It contains some things we cannot fully endorse; and it leaves unsaid some things which an exhaustive treatment of the subject requires; yet it is calculated to encourage and help those who are seeking "life more abundantly."

THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.

The number present was small, but the usual happy meeting of Christian workers took place at the Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green-road, on August 21. After the friendly intercourse at tea, the meeting gathered in the upper room, when Mrs. Merry spoke briefly of the work on the other side. The news was cheering, and she felt constrained to say, "Praise the Lord." In the course of the meeting she announced the safe arrival of the fifty-eighth party of emigrants at the Stratford Home.

Mrs. Birt spoke touchingly of her rescue work in Liverpool. She related the sorrowful histories of some little children received during the last few days, and told of the Lord's goodness in having provided the funds for the new Home, which she hopes will be opened in October. Her work in the province of Quebec was also touched upon.

Mr. Anderson, leaving shortly for China, having spoken of the joy he had had in working amongst the children at Hackney, Mr. W. R. Lane gave an address on "The Stewardship of Life" from Matt. xxv. 14—23. The main lesson of the parable of the talents is to teach us we are stewards. The preceding parable of the ten virgins teaches us we should always be in the spirit of watchfulness, whilst that of the talents brings us into a sphere of work. There should always be the inward life of restfulness coupled with the outward life of activity. The rewards are not according to results, but to fidelity. Both workers doubled their talents, and both were rewarded accordingly.

XXIII.—"I FEEL LIKE SINGING."

As the approach of sunrise is ushered in by the song of birds and the spreading light of dawn, so now, the increasing light of the Gospel, spreading as it is over the world, and the abounding songs of praise, may be regarded as indications of the coming of the Lord.

Surely there never was a time in the history of this dispensation when there were more Bibles, more messengers to proclaim the truth, or more songs of praise to God for his love in sending his Son into the world to save sinners, than the present.

We were holding a praise meeting at a mission, when a particular young lady was present. She took no part in the proceedings, and, judging from her looks and manner, it was clear that she had no sympathy with our work. Nevertheless, other persons at the meeting were very happy, and they knew why.

I gave out the hymn beginning with the words, "I feel like singing all the time." The young lady's disgust at this was quite undisguised. She did not try to hide it, though she made no remark. However, after the service was over, she opened her lips. Then she told us her mind about our singing, especially about those "intensely vulgar hymns," as she called them. "There is no music in them," she said, "and no sense either, particularly in that one, 'I feel like singing.'" She added that she considered that hymn "a song worthy of dark minstrels on the other side of the Atlantic, or their imitators with blackened faces on this side."

It was as well to let her pour out her anger which had been pent up for some days. I said to her, "Such feelings are better out than in. I remember the time when I felt very much as you do, but that is past long, long ago, and now I confess I do feel like singing. I wish you did the same, or even looked like it."

"Thank you," she said, "for nothing—I would rather not."

The hymns we had been singing were selected from the collection by Mr. Sankey, upon which God has set His seal above all other hymn-books in the world. There is scarcely a mission station at home or abroad where the Gospel is preached, where these hymns are not sung and appreciated. Translated into many languages, they are used of God for carrying the Gospel message far and wide. If some men, and women too, do not like them, God evidently does.

I told the lady that I visited a place once where the people, who had been lively and happy, were then drooping and cold. Instead of scolding, I taught them some verses and the chorus of a hymn from this book. Then I went over the tune, which was easily taken up. We sang that one hymn with its chorus over and over again, until everyone in the meeting was more or less revived. I said, "Did you not notice those people in our praise meeting, how happy they were, and how joyfully they sang?"

"Yes, indeed, I did," said the lady; "I saw them, and that man next to me too, who gave me the full benefit of his brazen throat. He put his head back, and opened his mouth, sending forth such continual blasts that it was enough to deafen anyone. You call that singing—I do not!"

"Dear fellow," I said, "it did me good to see and hear him, as you say, with his head thrown back, and his mouth wide open, as if he would pour out his heart towards God."

"Our tastes differ," said the young lady, with a look of disdain, and she walked out of the room.

I remarked to the vicar, "I do not think that young lady is very happy; nay, rather, I should say she is under conviction. When children are first awakened out of sleep, they are often cross. I think she is like that."

He replied, "I only hope it may be so, for, to tell the truth, I invited her here at this time, praying that she might be awakened. She is under very legal teaching at home."

I said, "Legal teaching conduces to praying and working, in order to get salvation, whereas the happiness and songs of the Gospel are indications that we have received it, and therein rejoice."

The Mission went on, and with it the ordinary awakening and conversion of souls, until one night, when there was an unmistakable manifestation of God's presence.

"I knew there was going to be something," said a man upon a similar occasion in another church, "for I felt the pulpit and pews were getting very near one another." At the same service a woman said to one sitting next to her, "I shall shout presently, I cannot help it." "I shall die if you do," said the other. "I shall die if I don't," rejoined the former.

There was just such a power on the present occasion, and in an instant, as if by mutual agreement, ten or twelve persons shouted out, "Hallelujah." The whole congregation was aroused, and besides the sound of rejoicing there was to be heard audible sobbing and praying too. It was altogether unnecessary to speak longer; the message had gone home, and the answer was come. We went down among the people, and a goodly number of persons were brought to God that night,

At a late hour we returned to the vicarage. Shall I say I was tired? No, indeed; such meetings are most invigorating to body as well as to soul. I have often gone to services of this kind worn and tired, and come back refreshed and renewed in every way.

Still another refreshing awaited us in the house. As we entered, we heard the grand piano in the drawing room being played with great energy. Some one was singing too, not with a brazen throat to be sure, but with a joyful and ringing voice like a clarion.

This was indeed no other than our young lady. She had found pardon and joy, and her heart was overflowing with praise to God. This was her song:—

"I feel like singing all the time,
My tears are wiped away;
For Jesus is a friend of mine,
I'll serve Him every day.
I'll praise Him, praise Him, praise Him all the time,
Praise Him, praise Him, I'll praise Him all the time!"

We stood there, and begged her to go on and let her heart out. It is a good thing to give thanks. After she had finished her hymn, I said, "Tell me about it, it will do you good, and me too."

She answered, "On Sunday when you gave out your text, 'I love the Lord,' it came upon me with a feeling I cannot describe, and when you said, 'Love shows itself in action,' I thought to myself, all my actions are done for the sake of getting love. I saw I was all wrong, and if any one had spoken kindly to me at church I believe that I should have been converted then and there. But when I came back, I began to make fun of the service, and criticised the sermon. I became more and more angry at different things that were done, particularly at the praise meeting. And when I told you my mind about these things, you looked so undisturbed—indeed, as if you were glad to see me so angry."

"It was so," I said, "but pray go on."

"Then," she continued, "this evening when you spoke of the duty of praising our benefactor, and above all the duty of praising God, in an instant the spell was broken, and I was free. I came out of church, lest I should disturb the service with any outburst of my feelings."

"Thank God for you," I exclaimed. "Now go on praising Him continually."

A Plea for Egypt.

ENGLAND is now responsible for the good government of Egypt. We have by our own acts deliberately accepted that responsibility, and to a very important extent we are faithfully discharging it. We control the administration, and insist upon its being conducted in a just, righteous, and merciful manner. The taxes are no longer collected with the whip; oppressive imposts have been removed, forced and unpaid labour on the public works has been abolished at a very heavy cost to the Government; the irrigation, upon which the whole cultivation of the country depends, has been greatly improved and extended; and, as far as its scanty means will permit, the Government is endeavouring to spread education.

But the Government is not responsible for the evangelisation of Egypt; that is the duty of the Church of Christ, and pre-eminently so of the Church of Christ in England. If it is our duty to care for the spiritual needs of the heathen and Mohammedan world, it is doubly so as regards those portions of it which we have subjected to our rule. What have English Christians done to make the Gospel known to the Egyptians?

The population numbers 7,000,000: of whom at least nine-tenths are Moslems, about 100,000 Europeans, and 400,000 Copts. About 1,000,000 are in the two great cities, and in the larger towns, and 6,000,000 in the villages. The great mass of the village population is entirely without the Gospel. A very important work has been done by the American missionaries in the villages along the Nile above Cairo, and there is one missionary to Mohammedans in Alexandria. The Church Missionary Society and Miss Whately's Mission are also working in Cairo, but millions in the other towns and villages have never heard of the love of God and the gift of his Son.

In Alexandria, out of a total population of 250,000, 60,000 are European Christians from all nations round the Mediterranean. They are either Roman Catholic or of the Greek Church, and of course ignorant of the Gospel.

Now the door of access to both Christians and Moslems is open. As regards the former, what is needed is a knowledge of Italian, that being the language most generally spoken, though other European languages are valuable. All nationalities, Greeks, Italians, French, Austrian, Slav, will listen to the Word, and readily receive, nay, often ask for, tracts.

The Mohammedans, too, though they oppose, will listen to the Gospel, will receive the written Word of God, will engage in conversation on the subject, and will attend meetings for the reading and teaching of the Gospel. This has been proved by actual experience this year in Alexandria, the city of the massacres. If Moslems can be reached there, they can be reached anywhere else. Egypt is in fact open to the Gospel, and its people are perishing for lack of knowledge only because English Christians neglect them.

What is required? (1) As regards Alexandria, two or three or more ladies would find an ample field of labour among the 60,000 neglected Christians. A work like Miss Trotter's in Algiers might be commenced at once. The climate is delightful for most of the year; the cost of living, about £80 per head; the sea-passage, about £15. A similar band might go to Cairo (population 400,000), which has one of the finest climates in the world. (2) As regards the Moslems, any number of young men would find plenty to do among them. If two could be found to go at once, trusting the Lord for their support while there, the funds for sending them out and starting them would be forthcoming. The language is Arabic. All that is needed is to learn it, and then go forth and preach everywhere; there is no need for schools; the door is open. The work would eventually extend into Arabia.

Who will go? The work is delightful, and interesting beyond expression. You soon get to love the Moslems, and, if they see you are in earnest, they learn to love you.

Think of 6,000,000 of them, within seven days of London, without a soul to tell them of the Saviour. F. T. HAIG.

Pakefield Conference.

THE eleventh annual Conference for the Deepening of the Spiritual Life was held on Tuesday and Wednesday, August 13 and 14, at this pleasant East Coast summer resort. As in past years the meetings were held in Pakefield Schoolroom. Rev. L. Price, the rector, presiding over the proceedings. The greatest interest prevailed, and the Conference ended with a deeply solemn hour of prayer and consecration.

The Mastership of Jesus Christ: its Basis, Benefits, and Obligations was the first subject considered. Taking for foundation texts, Matt. vi. 24, John xiii. 13, and Luke vi. 43, Rev. A. J. Begbie, vicar of Framsden, pointed out that in the Gospels five different Greek words are alike translated "Master." Confining himself to the two signifying "Lord" and "Despot," he named, as the bases of Christ's "despotism" over all believers, the Father's gift, the right of purchase, and Christ's self-subjection as man to God's control. The benefits of this mastership include: (1) Perfect protection of the mind from doubts, the heart from sin, and the body from foes and accidents, each believer being immortal till his work is done; (2) constant direction: as Jesus gave particular direction to the seventy, the twelve Apostles, &c., so He still does by Word and Spirit to those in the attitude of Ps. cxxiii., who cheerfully answer, "Speak, Lord." Having freely accepted Jesus Christ as absolute "Master" of their whole being, Christians ought (1) to choose nothing but that which is provided or promised by their Master; (2) to refuse nothing He sends or permits, whether duties, trials, losses, or burdens; (3) to withhold nothing their Master demands—time, talents, or members, even to the yielding up of our dear ones to his service as readily as Hannah yielded Samuel, and Abraham Isaac.

The new vicar of St. John's, Lowestoft (Rev. J. B. Wane), spoke of God's witnesses. In nature, rocks and mountains are witnesses of God's power, and fields and valleys witnesses of his love. In man, God has witnesses in walk, word, and work. The Lord Jesus is declared to be the Faithful Witness. God has many ways of speaking to men by the testimony of life. He needs witnesses to confirm the truth of his Word and his power. The qualifications of witnesses include personal knowledge. As the world watched Jesus Christ to see some fault in Him, so it is watching each of us to see what testimony we bear. Our actions are narrowly scanned, and by them our characters are often determined. Our witness must be outspoken. How often it is a mumbling undertone! Moreover, courage is most essential. One act of boldness will make it easier to be brave in the next trial of witnessing. Let us seek for these necessary qualifications, if we would be faithful witnesses, and so not be ashamed at his coming.

Rev. Cartaret Leathes, rector of Reedham, spoke of "the believer's completeness in Jesus Christ." "Ye are complete in Him" (Col. ii. 10), filled as from an infinite fulness. There is a preparatory completeness in respect of righteousness, peace, and pardon, which leaves no room for envy, laziness, or grumblin Every oarsman knows that if a boat is to pr ceed it must be balanced. Four boys in a we trimmed craft will beat four men in one whic is all on one side. The boat and its equipme may be perfect in their way, but all this is re dered unavailing for want of balance; so with all our completeness, we are not to paralysed for the purpose of work, the so must be well balanced, and if, in effecting thi the Lord takes a coveted treasure from or side, or adds a trial on the other, we must n find fault. Moreover, there is no room f slavish deference to the customs, fashions, an opinions of men around. A certain respect ha to be paid to custom, but it must not be allowe to interfere with the Mastership of Christ. H who taught David's hands to war, and gave h fingers skill to draw such melody from the har will teach his children now. There is a gl rious secret of liberty, peace, and power i being taught of God. He who teaches the bird to build their nests, and the ants to gather thei food, will teach the humblest child who believe in Jesus, and seeks to serve Him with a singl eye.

Rev. L. Price called attention to 2 Peter i 5. Good works follow saving faith, never pr cede it. The word translated "add" has th idea of accompaniment to a tune. The tun is faith, and the accompaniment the seve graces. Faith to the soul is like the hand t the body. By the hand we appropriate to ou selves what we need. So by faith we appro priate Christ in his person, death, and resurrec tion, and obtain pardon, peace, and eterna life thereby. From this faith proceeds virtue Christian courage—courage to witness by wor and deed for God and for truth, and against si and Satan. This was the witness which Chris bore on earth, and the witness his faithfu people have to bear now. The courage of faith results in the victory which overcometh th world. Such witness will lead to increasing knowledge of friend and foe—the grace an power of Christ to overcome on the one hand and the strength of sin and Satan to assail o the other, with a good balance of power on th believer's side; to temperance, or self-con trol in the use of earthly and spiritual things making Christians kings over good and evil; and to patience, which leads us to regard al things as willed or permitted by God for ou good, thereby doing away with every reason fo impatience. The Apostle adds godliness t patience, and St. Paul says patience worketh experience, both meaning the same thing—an experimental knowledge or conscious posses sion of the blessings of the Gospel; brotherly kindness—love to the brethren. Christ makes brotherly love a test of Christian character. "I a man love not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" No love to the brethren, no love to Christ—no Christian at all; charity—love to all men—not to their sins, but their persons. Nature can never teach us this lesson, but grace can. God loved the world, but not its sins. This is Christian love in its perfection. Nothing more like God, and nothing more unlike the world. "If these things be in you and abound, ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of Christ."

Several visitors, ministers, and others rendered valuable assistance at the Conference, which was a season of refreshment to many.

PROTECTION OF CHILDREN.—Important as are the provisions of Mr. Waugh's Bill, it will remain a dead letter unless the Christian and philanthropic public furnish him with the means for enforcing it, and for carrying on efficiently the Home, at 7, Harpur-street, Bloomsbury, to which child criminals will be henceforth sent on bail. The yearly income of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is about £20,000; that of the Society which undertakes the care of the children is, at present, only £4000. A far larger sum will be needed if the provisions of the Bill are to be carried out as they should be, and we most sincerely hope that it will be forthcoming.

For the Young.

THE CHURCH ON THE SANDS.

We give below extracts from reports of meetings held in various watering places by workers of the "Children's Special Service Mission":—

Weston-super-Mare, August 19 (Mr. H. G. Harris).—"'Exceeding abundantly' is the measure of blessing for which we praise God as we look back on the last few days, especially the Saturday night lantern service and the Sunday services. The meeting for 'boys only' was the most striking I have yet seen. About twenty stood up, and I trust made a full surrender."

Penmaenmawr, August 19 (Messrs. Howard Staines and S. R. Webb).—"As the week proceeds, the blessing which God is giving us becomes more and more marked, and we are much encouraged by the growing sympathy in the work. Yesterday (Sunday) we had a large meeting on the beach, between 500 and 600 being present. Some of our boys started a prayer-meeting before the beach service."

Deal, August 10 (Mr. Livesey Carrott).—"We have just completed our first week's work, and I think it has been owned of God in a most remarkable way. In previous years we have not seen any very definite work for Christ, until later on in the mission; but this year from the first we have had distinct cause to thank God for His great goodness. A great spirit of inquiry has been manifested amongst young people between twelve and fourteen. At our first service we had quite two hundred; since then the numbers have steadily increased. Amongst them we have Roman Catholics, and we pray for much grace to say the right word to them."

Bridlington, August 17 (Mr. Henry Hutchinson).—"We began on August 1, amidst bright sunshine, with an attendance of about 1200, and more the next day. But the following week was extremely wet and cold, and the tides were most unfavourable. The last week, however, has shown a great improvement in the weather, for which we praise God, and we were able to have our usual large meetings on the sands every day, except Wednesday, when it was wet, and we had a crowded meeting in the Sailors' Institute. Our evening meetings in the Institute have been most helpful, happy, and blessed, and much testimony has been given to us of the blessings resulting from them. We have had several helpful addresses from Rev. E. A. Stuart, of Holloway, and Rev. G. F. Head, of Christ Church, Hampstead, who have also helped us by addressing the children on the beach."

Llandudno, August 11 (Mr. E. Arrowsmith).—"Have had capital meetings. Over three hundred boys and girls on Saturday morning. Bishop of Lichfield present, and also at the sports on Thursday. Many have been converted, we believe, and are now working well. August 20.—All the meetings have been well attended. There was an immense crowd in the 'Happy Valley' on Sunday, and an excellent parents' meeting in the evening. We had nearly ninety at the boys' meeting, and several professed to decide for Christ. On Monday we made a huge sand castle, and had a brief service; there were quite 400 children in and around. In the evening, although the weather was most unfavourable, we had over 300 lanterns in the procession, and a large crowd surrounded the children, who were formed on the parade, outside a railed-off enclosure, which made an excellent barrier. The Venerable Archdeacon Blakeney spoke on the shore last week, and praised the work of the C.S.S.M. most highly; and Mrs. Blakeney had a capital ladies' meeting on Monday afternoon. I have a splendid band of lady workers, who are working heart and soul amongst the girls, and are being greatly cheered by manifest tokens of God's good hand upon their labours."

Brighton, August 13 (Mr. Henry W. Figgis).—"All the meetings here are well attended, and are full of deep interest. Last week I held afternoon services on the East Beach, which were a great success, fully eight hundred being present on one occasion. Now we hold them at Hove. The indoor services are most encouraging, the various places being always well filled. The Lord is owning his precious Word to the conversion of sinners, and the consecration of believers; many have given satisfactory testimony as to having been convinced of their need of a Saviour, and having found peace through his blood. A staff of lady workers is giving grand help."

Eastbourne, August 14 (Mr. C. F. Harford-Battersby).—"A fortnight of our Mission has already passed, and we can do nothing but praise God for the blessing given. As the town is rapidly filling, the number of children attending our services is markedly increasing. For a few days we had with us Mr. C. E. Millard, lately returned from Foochow, China, where he was engaged in business, and where he is shortly going out as a missionary. He kept us all alive by his vivid descriptions of life and customs in China, and made us all feel a very deep interest in the Chinese people, and long to help them. On Monday evening our lantern service was very successful. The evening was a splendid one, and a very large crowd gathered to hear an address from Rev. Sydenham Dixon, of Park Chapel, Chelsea. There were about ninety lanterns in the procession."

Margate, August 14 (Rev. H. E. Sampson).—"Compared with last year, this year's work is gigantic. Our services are now flocked to, and especially by elder boys and girls. Mr. H. Brown (St. John's Hall, Highbury), is giving valuable aid. The confidence of the visitors and their interest have been gained, and their active support is rendered in many ways. Rev. W. Taylor Jones has most kindly placed his cricket field at our complete disposal, so we have grand gatherings for cricket matches, athletic sports, and all sorts of games for boys and girls. The most solid instrument of blessing is the 'special meetings' for boys, and also for girls. Last week we had one for girls, on Wednesday, in a lady's drawing-room, kindly placed at our disposal. I know of not a few who were brought to a decision for Christ. A dozen boys have come of their own free will, and told me, with serious and modest manner, that they have begun to serve Christ as never before."

TO SCHOOLBOYS.

SAY "NO."

When hosts of evil thoughts press in—
  Temptation's own decoy—
There is a plan to ward them off
  That all might well employ;
Whether they instigated be
  By self, by friend, or foe,
You have your grand prerogative
  To say the small word, "NO!"

It is the hardest word to say,
  Although it is so short;
But many weak and timid ones
  Have found it as a fort,
Within the which they may retire
  When war doth wage below.
It is your grand prerogative
  To say the small word, "NO!"

It may be said in manly strength,
  And with decision bold,
For tempters oft are deaf to what
  They'd rather not be told;
But yet 'tis not an easy thing
  A firm, bold front to show,
By using your prerogative
  To say the small word, "NO!"

It may be said with falt'ring heart,
  And whispered soft and meek;
No matter, tempters always hear
  When they think you will speak
The very word they wish you'd say
  To make their wrath outflow,
They have excuse to bully now—
  You've said the small word, "NO!"

It may be said in hidden strength
  While weak you do appear;
They then are very much "put out"
  That you stand not in fear
Of them or of their threats, which they
  Hint may become a blow,
Provoked by your audacity
  To say the small word, "NO!"

It may be said in weakness true,
  While they think you are strong;
It even may occur to them
  That they are in the wrong;
And by degrees their arguments
  May weak and weaker grow,
When once you have confounded them
  By stoutly saying, "NO!"

It should be said in strength from God,
  With confidence within,
With prayer to Him that you may know
  'Tis your escape from sin.
But should you fail, as fail you may,
  On no one else then throw
The blame that you are where you are,
  Since you would not say, "NO!"

Oh, what a world of trouble vast
  This tiny word can save!
When life doth like a bubble last
  Which bursts upon a grave,
How often the deceived has cried,
  When all has fled but woe,
"The cause of everything was fear
  To say the small word, 'NO!'"

THE HOME FOR DESTITUTE CHILDREN, 71, Eccles-street, Dublin, was opened two years ago by Miss L. H. Carr, to meet the case of poor children whocould not, from one cause or another, be received into any of the Protestant Homes for poor children already existing in Ireland. One by one children were taken in and cared for, and now the family numbers forty. The report, recently published, outlines the sad experiences of some of the little ones, deserted by their parents, charged upon widowed mothers unable to support them, and so forth. What would have become of these poor girls and boys, if it had not been for this hospitable Home, is a question fraught with very painful possibilities. We are glad to observe that Miss Carr has not appealed in vain to Irish Christians for means wherewith to carry on her work.

REV. ANDREW MURRAY,

Author of "Abide in Christ," &c.

OUR sketch this week has for its subject a truly honoured servant of the Lord. A few years ago only a very few people were at all familiar with his work. Save by those who had friends in South Africa, or were otherwise interested in the work of the Gospel there, he had hardly been heard of. Nor was much interest aroused when one of our London publishing firms announced a little volume entitled, "Abide in Christ," by a minister resident at the Cape. The sale was not first such as to warrant the hope of extensive popularity. But very quickly some of the thoughtful spirits that gather around the Mildmay Conference discovered that there was a blessing in the volume, and joyfully proclaimed the fact. This led to many more procuring it. Five other volumes appeared in annual succession, and so welcome have they been to readers of Christian literature, that at this hour there are few names which are more familiar than that of their beloved author.

(From Photograph by Mr. J. Gribble.)

As his name suggests, ANDREW MURRAY is of Scottish extraction. Nearly seventy years ago the Governor of Cape Colony sent an urgent request to Scotland for a number of ministers to come out and work amongst the growing population there. Amongst the ten or twelve who responded was a Rev. Mr. Murray, a licentiate of the Church of Scotland, who was speedily settled at Graaf Reinet. Another brother of the same family became a minister in Scotland, and was soon well known as Dr. John Murray, of the Free North Church, Aberdeen. Mr. Murray had been but a short time in Africa when he made his influence felt. He was eminently a man of prayer. One of his daughters told an intimate friend that he used to spend hours together in his study in supplication for a blessing on the souls under his charge. And before he died he had the joy of seeing very many connected with his flock added to the Lord.

But while thus exercising his gifts as a Christian minister, Mr. Murray had the additional honour and reward of becoming the father of a large family, all the members of which in turn yielded themselves to the Lord under the Spirit of grace. Five of his sons became devoted ministers of the Dutch Reformed Church of South Africa. Four of his daughters became ministers' wives, while another daughter is still the Principal of a large school for girls. One of the sons, born at Graaf Reinet on May 9, 1828, was named Andrew after some of his kindred. And it is this Scoto-African with whom we are now concerned.

The preparation for the work which lay before Mr. Murray is seen even in his boyhood. When his eldest brother was sent to Aberdeen to complete his classical education, Andrew, then only nine years of age, accompanied him. There, while living in the home of their uncle, both brothers became in time students in Marischal College; and they afterwards graduated there at the early age then so common. It was here also that both the lads drank yet more deeply of the missionary and evangelistic spirit that they had already received from their revered father. For while they were carrying on their studies in the Granite City, William Burns, afterwards the noble missionary in China, was frequently preaching there, and both the young men, enjoying the best opportunities of intercourse with him, caught not a little of his heroic fire. After graduation, they went to Holland to complete their theological education at the University of Utrecht.

Diligent in study and earnest in Christian effort, they were soon the centre of a circle of zealous disciples, and both took an active part in the formation of the students' missionary society named the "Ἐλθέτω ἡ Βασιλεία σου" Association ("Thy Kingdom come" Association). When the curriculum at Utrecht was finished, they returned to South Africa, the elder brother to become first a minister, and ultimately a Professor in the Dutch theological seminary of Stellenbosch; the younger, Andrew, to be appointed to what was then the British Sovereignty, and now the Orange Free State.

Mr. Murray was only twenty years of age when he was ordained to this work. And for a long period he was to be the only minister in the wide territory; but he was not dismayed. Fixing his headquarters at Bloemfontein, he entered on his arduous task with untiring energy. When the youthful pastor first appeared on the scene of his labours, not a few of the farmers were somewhat vexed that they should be under the pastoral care of one who looked so immature. But no sooner did they hear his first sermon than they found there was one before them whose youth was not to be despised. And when they afterwards witnessed the amount of riding, preaching, catechising, and family visitation done by the young minister, their surprise gave way to admiration and esteem. He was constantly travelling to all parts of his vast parish, and very frequently passed across the border into the Transvaal, whose scattered population was then without any pastoral oversight. The people gladly gathered in large numbers to worship with him, generally in the open air, sometimes under sails stretched as a protection from the burning sun.

The influence of this activity is felt still in the whole province. As one who knows Mr. Murray's work well has written to us, "It is interesting in travelling through the Free State and the Transvaal to see how many hold him in affectionate remembrance. 'Oh, yes,' they will say, 'I know Rev. Andrew Murray well. There is many a couple he has joined in marriage; there are many whom he has baptized; and many whom he led to Christ; and all will have some story of his coming to their place.'" It was while he was thus engaged that Mr. Murray found a helpmeet for himself in the person of Miss Emma Rutherford, daughter of Mr. Howson S. Rutherford, one of the leading merchants of Cape Town, and well known as a staunch friend and generous supporter of the Lord's work in the whole country. It may be readily believed that it was to no paradisaic locality that the young bride was taken, but for the sake of her husband and the Gospel of his Master, she bravely faced and shared all the hardships of life on the frontier.

That these were often severe enough appears in the fact that after some years Mr. Murray was prostrated by fever, and was long in recovering from the results of the ordeal. His physicians declared that he would never be a strong man again. But, as it proved, this was simply a turning-point in what was to be a yet more extended service. For the young minister shortly afterwards, in 1860, received a call to Worcester, an important inland town of Cape Colony, about eighty miles from Cape Town. He accepted it, and once again found cause to praise God, who followed him in his new sphere with fresh triumphs of His grace. It was at this time that the great wave of revival which, beginning with America and Ireland, and sweeping over the Eastern world, rolled in gladness also over South Africa. There was at Worcester a very marvellous manifestation of the convincing and converting power of the Spirit of Christ. A multitude of souls were gathered into the Kingdom, and the hands of the Lord's servants were full of work. Those who know Mr. Murray intimately speak in the warmest terms of the wise and gracious influence he exercised at that time, in the way of endeavouring to seize and turn to the best account the spiritual earnestness of the time, and yet prevent it from falling into confusion and fanaticism.

It was while pastor at Worcester that Mr. Murray began to present some of his utterances in literary form. Amongst the first of his books was a little volume entitled, "Waarom gelooft gij niet?" ("Why do you not believe?"), and another named, "Het nieuw Leven" ("The New Life"), a series of counsels to young Christians who have lately entered the narrow way. Both of these, and especially the latter, have been much blessed to many, and are still widely circulated at the Cape and in Holland. As we have indicated, they were first written in Dutch. So also were two other volumes which he published at this period, "Abide in Christ" and "Our Children for Christ." After remaining at Worcester for four years, Mr. Murray accepted a call to Capetown, where he remained about the same length of time. The work here was felt by him to be encompassed by many difficulties. There were three Dutch churches in the city, in which, according to the method still pursued in Holland, three ministers preached in turn. The arrangement prevented the growth of that strong pastoral sympathy which Mr. Murray had hitherto found a most valuable element in his work. He asked that he might have a church and a portion of the people as his own congregation. This being declined, he felt free to wait for a door of the Word in another quarter. This at last came in 1871 through a call to Wellington, a pleasant town about thirty miles from Cape Town, on the part of a congregation largely composed of descendants of French Huguenot families who had fled thither in the days of their tribulation, and become associated with the Dutch Reformed Church.

It is in this sphere that Mr. Murray still lives and works with great joy and success. The people have plainly inherited the blessing promised to thousands of them that love the Lord and keep his commandments. And this is seen in the fact that again and again there have been most blessed times of refreshing and large harvests of souls for the Kingdom of the Lord. This, under God, is largely due to the single-hearted resolve of the pastor to know nothing among the people but Christ and Him crucified, and to seek above all things the salvation of souls. There are very few ministers of our day who have a keener mental insight into sacred truth. No one who looks at his spare, bent form, and watches the play of his deeply thoughtful yet kindly face, can doubt that he is a born student. But, as a friend of the present writer who knows him well says: "This power is utterly subordinated to the spiritual purposes of the conversion and quickening of his hearers. I cannot imagine Mr. Murray sitting down to write a good sermon. That could never be his motive. He wants to convert or to build up and consecrate, and everything else is swept out of the way to gain these ends."

It would be a mistake, however, to suppose that, successful as Mr. Murray is as a pastor, he is a pastor and nothing more. He has also done a grand work as a Christian educationist. Even in his first charge he spared no pains to get good teachers for his people. And he has pursued the same aim ever since. This desire has been fulfilled with remarkable success in Wellington. Shortly after his removal thither he became acquainted with the life and work of Mary Lyon, of Mount Holyoke Seminary, in America, and became fired with the resolve to have a similar institution in South Africa, where the conversion and Christian education of girls might be made the chief aim. "This is what I have always wanted," said he. "In sending for teachers to England and Scotland I have no security that they will understand this aim, or enter fully into it. I shall send to America for teachers." He did so, and, being fortunate enough to secure the services of Misses Ferguson and Bliss, from Holyoke, he founded in 1874 the Huguenot Seminary at Wellington, over which these ladies still preside.

There are about two hundred young ladies from all parts of South Africa being educated on the methods of Mount Holyoke and in the same spirit. A minister of the Dutch Reformed Church at Cape Town tells us: "It is difficult to say in a few words what blessings this institution has conferred on South Africa, not only by the education in a Christian spirit of many hundreds of young ladies, but also by a large number of them having become teachers imbued with the spirit of the Huguenot Seminary." "The story of the conversions and revivals at this institution," writes another, "is quite wonderful; and now there are several schools throughout the country which look to the Huguenot Seminary as their mother, and work on the same principles." The most prominent feature in the whole education is the paramount importance attached to Christian missions.

While maintaining this oversight of his flock and the Christian schools of the province, Mr. Murray is as much as ever bent on carrying forward the work of evangelisation. In this direction he has had marvellous blessing. After his work at Wellington became known, no one was in greater request for taking part in special services in other congregations throughout the country. Writes a friend in the Seminary we have alluded to: "Often he has found many souls just waiting to be brought into the Kingdom, and has given the message that led them to Christ." With such plain indications of the finger of God before him, it is little to be wondered at that Mr. Murray should have been led to think that he ought to have the work of an evangelist occupying a larger portion of his time. The way for this was not at first plain. A prolonged illness in 1879, for one thing, interrupted this service. But after granting him a remarkable recovery from it, the Lord was pleased, also, to show his congregation that this line of effort was to bulk very largely in his future work. He came in great power and blessing to the people. There was an ingathering of souls such as they had never experienced before; and then the Church was made willing and ready to allow their pastor to devote at least half his time to evangelistic work. In the prosecution of this service during the last six years Mr. Murray has found the Lord making manifest the savour of his knowledge by him in almost every place he has visited. His tours on special missions have of late extended not only to the eastern province of the Colony, but also to the Free State, the Transvaal, and Natal. And we are informed that there are hardly any congregations in these different States where there are not found those who now look up to him as their spiritual father, and who have been helped by his preaching on their way Zionward.

Mr. Murray has also established at Wellington a training seminary for missionaries to the Kaffirs, and other tribes. Here a much simpler course of study is required than for ordinary pastors. The students are ordained simply as missionaries, but they do a work which could not be carried on by any other agency. Amongst Mr. Murray's own relatives, also, the missionary spirit is still being deeply cherished. It is but recently that one of his nephews, Rev. Andrew C. Murray, has gone to Lake Nyassa as a missionary of the Dutch Church, and is to co-operate with the other Scotch brethren already there.

In connection with his work as an evangelist, Mr. Murray has been led to take a deep interest in the movement now everywhere making such progress towards lifting up professing Christians to a higher plane of spiritual life and service. In this work, also, the Lord has caused his servant to prosper greatly. Singleness of eye for the glory of Christ in souls is the secret of his success. No attempt is made to dazzle by words of wisdom, or by the overstraining of Biblical expressions. Everything that might attract the hearer to the speaker himself is laid aside. And hence some have said about his preaching, what we have noticed some critics saying of his books, that there is a want of zest and brilliance in his style. But, as one of our correspondents says: "I think all will admit that they never hear him without being stirred up from the very foundation, and made to feel as if they were only beginning the Christian life, and had yet to learn what full trust and consecration mean."

It is with this same power that his last four works, "Like Christ," "With Christ," "Holy in Christ," and "The Spirit of Christ," are fraught. All of them were written at Wellington, and only after the topics they deal with had been studied and meditated on, and spoken about at Christian conferences on subjects akin to them. Since one and all of them have been noticed in these columns, we do not describe them in detail. An opportunity of doing this may perhaps occur at another time, when the series is completed by the publication of the promised volume on "Christ in us." Meanwhile, we only add that one of the most remarkable of those already issued has always seemed to us to be that entitled, "With Christ in the School of Prayer." No book of the kind in our time deserves to be studied more. Here, also, Mr. Murray writes out of his own experience. This is true even of his manifest leaning towards faith in the power of prayer as an instrument in the healing of physical diseases. Mr. Murray propounds no dogmatic teaching on this subject. But, like Canon Wilberforce, he has a crisis in his life to look back upon, which constrains him to keep his heart open for growing light on the whole matter. In the illness of 1879 already noticed, he suffered so much from a relaxed throat that he was told he would never be able to use his voice again. And for three years he was actually unable to preach. Subsequently he visited England and consulted physicians who gave him little encouragement. But he was led to reside at Bethshan, and there he opened his heart by faith so fully to the power of the Lord that he was speedily restored; and he returned to Africa to resume not only his ordinary duties but an amount of additional service that has been a marvel to all who know him.

So lives and works, then, this faithful servant of Christ. He has a remarkable power of winning the confidence of men. And we learn without surprise that even in earlier years he was twice appointed a deputy on important missions to England in connection with civil questions in his country. But the Church is his chosen field of work. Moderator of Synod for no less than three times, he is honoured and loved by all his ministerial brethren.

We must also mention that when Mr. W. Spencer Walton went to South Africa last year he found an earnest friend in Mr. Murray, who has joyfully given his influence in favour of the Cape General Mission, of which he is the first President. We trust he will long occupy that post, and continue to be blessed in all his other work for God and his fellow-men.

CEYLON.—A lady who has laboured for fifteen years in Ceylon writes: "A marvellous change has taken place since the winter mission of 1887. Many of the planters, who were considered a very difficult class to influence, have come out grandly on the Lord's side, and now carry on work among their own gangs of coolies. Moreover, the power of God has, of late, been remarkably manifested among the soldiers stationed in Ceylon, and several meetings for prayer are held weekly. So we have very great cause for thankfulness, but we are not satisfied, for much remains to be done. God is graciously sending us again, his servant, Rev. G. C. Grubb, and we are praying for a mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the island."

A USEFUL CARD.—The following texts are copied from both sides of a tinted card they briefly point out the errors of Unitarianism, Popery, Ritualism, and of trusting in mere theory, and show clearly the only way of salvation. The cards are published by Messrs. Partridge & Co., 9, Paternoster-row, E.C. (6d. per 100). "The Lord Jesus Christ. 'There is none other whereby we must be saved' (Acts. iv. 12). The Father, the Son, and the Spirit are one God, one in saving all believers in Christ. No Theory, Church, Minister, 'Priest,' 'Pope,' 'Sacraments,' or 'Good Works,' or all together, can ever save any one soul. Salvation is all of grace. The gift of God, as free as the air we breathe: it is all in Christ. Those only who have Christ have true life (John iii. 16)."—"Have you Christ? His precious blood cleanseth all who truly trust Him. Do you trust Him and obey Him, and none other? Can you say, 'Christ is all, and He is mine'? If so, you have eternal life. Having Christ Himself is hvaing the way. Having Christ Himself is having the Truth. Having Christ Himself is having the Life (John xiv. 6). He is our strength and our perfection (Col. ii. 10). Behold his beauty (Ps. xxvii. 4)."

WHAT ASIA MINOR NEEDS.

Christian education is the great and pressing need of Asia Minor. This is abundantly shown by Rev. Dr. Herrick in an article in the New York Independent. "The one thing," he says, "on which liberal-minded men of all races of Turkey are agreed; the single note always heard in every refrain, on every side, at the present time, is the need of education. It is the cry of the enlightened Moslem; it is the longing of young Armenians and Syrians; it is the goal toward which the Greeks in Turkey are pressing. Bulgaria is taking the largest strides in the direction of general education.

"And the object to be attained by education, the thing consciously desired and earnestly coveted, is material prosperity. Turkey has attempted to borrow Western wealth to enrich herself with, and the attempt has come to grief. Millions of foreign gold have been squandered upon the costly and useless garniture of the State, next to none in developing either the agricultural or mineral resources of the country. When borrowing was no longer possible, and the Turks became aware that their name had an ill odour in Europe, we began to see real effort to do something for themselves. One reform, at least, for which the country has always been in starving need—viz., road-building, has been seriously undertaken and successfully carried on. Turkey is joined to Europe by steam and electricity, by international post, and by diplomacy.

"From Europe Turkey has received the impetus which has already produced a prolific and ephemeral press. What the reputation of this press among the people is may be gathered from a common name for a newspaper, heard everywhere, The Lie (Yalan). 'What news out of The Lie'—or, what false news—to-day? Southern Europe has flooded Western Asia, along the seaboard, with its cheapest, most trashy and corrupting literature. And still the Turk, the Armenian, and the Greek unite, as they do to go out and pray for rain in times of drought, in the cry for education.

"The actual danger is that worthy and true men will throw overboard Church and all religion, in their impatience with those who ought to be leaders in all that is good, but who, with some conspicuous and noble exceptions, are a dead weight on all true progress. Happily, under the influence of the Bible, now very widely circulated among all the Christian nationalities, a reform so widespread and so salutary has commenced within all the Oriental Christian communities, that there is a readiness to appreciate true excellence in education, to copy the models of good schools where such exist, much more widely than even ten years ago.

TWO THINGS SEEM TO BE SETTLED.

"First, the great need of the hour in Turkey is sound Christian education; and second, not merely the impetus but the leadership, must come from abroad. Happily, there is more to be said. An impetus in the right direction has been given. Leadership, at once intelligent and evangelical, is already a recognised power. It is pretty well known how important has been the influence of Robert College upon modern Bulgaria; how marked is the influence of the Syrian Protestant College upon the races of Syria. It is not so widely known that precisely similar institutions have already been established at three widely-separated centres in Asiatic Turkey—viz., at Aintab, in the Aleppo province; at Harpoot, in the province of Diarbekir; and at Marsovan—the Anatolia College—in the province of Sivas. The common language of these colleges is English. They are evangelical Christian institutions, reverent and loyal to revealed truth; the Bible is first on the list of college text-books; but they are not proselytising.

"They have already won the confidence and patronage of the Armenians and the Greeks, and to a considerable extent the confidence, if not yet the patronage, of Turks also. The urgent need of such institutions, the imminence of the danger to all races from infidelity and materialism on the one hand, and from Jesuitism on the other, has led Americans, with long and intimate experience in Asia Minor, to seize the golden opportunity of the hour, while as yet the resources of the colleges—notably in the case of Anatolia College—have consisted in pupils and in the pluck and perseverance of the teachers, both native and American. The certain influence of the colleges upon the advancement of a Christian civilisation in Asia Minor, and upon the development of the rich material and mental resources of the races of Turkey, that have too long lain dormant, will be almost incalculably great."

WORK IN ALGERIA.

"Why did the Lord send you here?" The question was addressed by me to a lady filling the position of a governess in a nobleman's family in my parish. "I cannot tell," she answered; "but no doubt He had some wise purpose, which will be seen in due time. The Lord's purpose was manifested in the following way. Some time after this conversation it was notified to her that as the family was going abroad, and the establishment to be broken up for a time, her services would be no longer needed, and having long had a strong desire to serve the Lord as a missionary—a desire conceived when she was being educated at Annonay (Ardèche)—she offered her services to the China Inland Mission. Having spent some time in their house in London, she was accepted; but having to pass a medical examination, she was found to have a rather weak action of the heart, and in consequence it was feared she would not stand the strain of work in China.

It was, however, finally arranged that she should work with missionaries in the East-end of London until the autumn (some months distant), and if she stood this test she should go out with a number of missionaries who were then to proceed to China. But man proposes, and God disposes. A lady working among the Kabyles in Algeria, and wanting a companion and helper, heard of Mdlle. Brunel, and sought an interview with her in London, the result of which was, that after some days spent in seeking the Lord's guidance, she consented to proceed to Algeria to work among a most interesting people, fast bound by the religion of Mohammed. We see how wisely the Lord has led her, as, being born in France, and therefore a French subject, she would be best fitted to work in a French province.

The inhabitants of Algeria are mostly Berbers (the original race), of which the Kabyles form a part. It is amongst this people that Mdlle. Brunel is now labouring, with a companion likeminded with herself, Miss Collins. After staying with the lady who originally invited her to work in Algeria about a year, she was led in the providence of God, to break ground in another part of the country, where no one had hitherto laboured; and to this purpose (after having been invited by the natives to live with them), they hired a native hut, or gourbi. Here, surrounded by a wild people, and shut out from European intercourse to a great extent, they have laboured faithfully, winning the affections of those around them by kindly offices, dispensing medicines, and teaching the children. These workers are not connected with any Society; they are simply working in faith, and many are the tokens of loving care the Lord has given them.

THE "HOMES OF HOPE."

That the "Homes of Hope," 4, 5, and 6, Regent-square, Gray's Inn-road, W.C., are truly excellent institutions, is widely known; the annual report, recently published, abundantly shows that God's blessing attends the work. We trust Mr. Hornibrook, the secretary, will have many applications for copies, for one cannot read the interesting and touching incidents it records without desiring to help such an effort for the restoration of the fallen and the protection of friendless young women.

The work of these Homes lies among women of the respectable class who have entered upon a downward course; young people who find themselves ruined through misplaced affection rather than depraved character. Where possible, measures are adopted to make fathers jointly responsible with mothers for the maintenance of the illegitimate children; these latter, moreover, are cared for until the mothers are able personally to provide for them. That after they leave the Homes these young women make good servants is the testimony of many heads of households.

Since the Homes were first established, 2956 have been admitted; 1075 of them belonging to the class of young mothers, who were thus saved from falling into deeper and continued sin; 330 were rescued, unfallen, from surroundings of great temptation. In almost every case, the young mothers and those rescued from circumstances of moral danger have turned out well, as also have about 70 per cent. of the others. We sincerely trust that this important work will make more friends as it continually developes, in order to meet a peculiarly sad need.

THE MINISTERIAL "PROFESSION."

Our American correspondent writes:—The ministry of the Gospel is now discussed as a fairly remunerative and not over arduous "profession." The respect, honour, and emoluments of the calling are held out as inducements to students recently graduated from the universities to enter upon a theological course that they might be duly qualified for it. Meantime, hundreds of ordained preachers are loafing about, applying for every vacant pulpit, living on their wits, or on their good-natured friends, too lazy to work, and too respectable (!) for ordinary commercial life. The wide mission fields of the world await labourers, but we hope that none of these time-killers will find a society demoralised enough to receive them.

One writer sets forth what he calls the advantages of the ministry as follows:—

> It is doubtful if any other profession offers the young man a better average promise of comfort and honour than the ministry. At the very beginning of his course he can afford to marry. He can expect a living for himself and his family. He does not need to wait until he has laid up something, or has reached a living income. At the beginning he is invited to a church in the city or the country, where he can, on his wages, live as well as the majority of his people. No one else is more talked about, lives more in the light of publicity, has more local fame, is more warmly welcomed to the best homes in the place of his residence. If there is a public occasion, no one is sooner called to make the speech and do the honours of the day.

Professor Marvin R. Vincent, on the other hand, speaking of the decadence of piety in New England villages, strikes a straight blow at one of the real causes of church declension:—

> You may have the reason if you seek it in good part in an emasculated ministry, which no longer announces and enforces those tremendous truths which mainly constituted the mental and spiritual pabulum on which New England congregations subsisted a century and more ago. We hear of heaven, but not of hell; of self-culture, but not of total depravity; of human ability, but not of human helplessness; of God the compassionate Father, but not of God, the righteous Governor and Judge; of Christ the great Example, but not of Christ the Divine Substitute, the sinner's only hope!

Professor Vincent rightly discriminates between the sham manufactured ministers and real God-given ministry.

A WORK OF FAITH IN ITALY.

Dear Sir,—I have followed with great interest the discussion in your columns respecting the conduct of modern missions. I have been five years working in France and Italy; and while the condition of the heathen world is commanding attention, and the methods of conducting missions for Christ are being revised, we must not forget Gospel work in professedly Christian countries.

In France and Italy the great requirement is not money, but men. How can men at home, who in many instances would be incapable of performing the work themselves, be qualified to direct others, who have the experience of the field, and who may have learned the rudiments of the methods of their work among the masses of New York, Chicago, Glasgow, or London? Given the right men, they should be left unfettered in their operations, and their supplies should come from no tainted source.

Practically, these conditions are hard to attain; but if the missionary be God-sent, trusting Him for whatever money he uses, though, besides persecution, he may suffer hardness (for "the servant is not above his master"), yet his message, however simple, and delivered in whatever weakness, will be with power, and the fruits in due season be manifest.

In France I have learned much among the people. The marked success of the Salvation Army, not only in Paris but the provinces, shows what may be done, in spite of defects, where the people discern, on the part of the workers, a simple loving devotion and anxiety for their welfare. In such circumstances they soon begin to understand the import of the Gospel message. For two years and a half I witnessed blessed results from our work in Lyons. Now, it is the Salvation Army that is garnering not only these fruits but the increase of the field. After being another season in Cannes, with the beginning of some success, I proceeded to Rome, there to study the details of the Italian Gospel problem. But at present, having returned for the summer to the Riviera, I find in all this district, Bordighera, San Remo, Ventimiglia, Porto Maurizio, &c., soil which is almost unbroken, not virgin soil, alas! but ready to receive the good seed, to the displacement of the vile crop of weeds which hold it.

Last summer, when studying Italian in Tuscany, and on a visit to Leghorn, I met Mr. E. C. Newbery, a man who has been a missionary in Italy for nine years, and who for that time has applied to his daily life in the Gospel service the principles so ably urged by Mr. Baldwin, and carried out by him in Morocco during the last season.

Mr. Newbery's example, and Mr. Baldwin's letters, have been a powerful stimulus to me; their experience had been mine! So being where I am, I think I hear the call of God to remain. In this region I perceive the opportunity of work without impediment in every direction.

Mr. Newbery has, meanwhile, five stations, of which three are at Bordighera, San Remo, and Ventimiglia. He has been much strengthened and encouraged through the help and testimony of Christians, who have been on the spot to see and understand the work: and by manifest signs is emboldened to contemplate extension to other places near, from some of which requests have come, and where distribution of tracts and Testaments has already taken place.

After fifteen months' residence in Italy, and personal examination and experience of the various forms of work at present existing, I am happy to give my testimony to the value of the methods carried out by Mr. Newbery; and, in addition, I have resolved to join him in his work, looking to the Lord alone to direct and to provide. He has the valuable faculty of speaking pure Italian. His earliest years were spent in Tuscany; and since his conversion he has had lengthened practice in the evangelistic fields of America and of England. So that in experience, speech, and power of popular illustration, he has great advantages.

There appears to be a willingness at the present moment on the part of many we encounter, not only to hear, but to receive, Gospel truth. In Italy, as elsewhere, success depends on how, and by whom, that truth is presented. We expect that the proximity of the French frontier will be no impediment to our work. As God may prosper us and send us help, possessing both languages, we shall have no difficulty in reaching not only the Italians of all the Riviera, but the French also. We are urgently in need of consecrated lady helpers to reach the women and children. If a personal note may be allowed, I may add that I am about to be married to a French lady, of Lyons, herself the first fruit of my work there. On her coming to Bordighera, we shall hope to extend the work among the women and children all round.

Yours faithfully,
A. S. D. Colquhoun.

LONDON BOYS AT THE SEASIDE.

The seaside camp for London boys, pitched just beyond the town of Deal since June 22, has become larger each week, as fresh detachments of lads have been sent down. A lady visitor writes:—"My daughter and I have been staying in Deal for a short time, and, owing to our friendship with the founder and chaplain, Rev. Sadler Phillips, we have been enabled to see into the working of the camp arrangements. I am constrained to say that it is a splendid piece of philanthropy. To see the boys as they arrive from London, pale and thin, and then to see them a few days later, one finds it difficult to realise that they are the same. The religious and social influences are of a similarly elevating character.

"Mr. Phillips's holiday being over, Mr. Percy Crosse, from London, has come down. Major Urquhart, and the rest of the staff, also live amongst the boys, and are very kind to them, though the discipline is carried out with military precision. There are games, bathing, excursions, and music; the lads have to be neat and clean, well behaved, and respectful in address. Indeed, every arrangement is so successful that I cannot help feeling that the boys can never lose the effect, either spiritually or bodily, of such a pure, healthy, and delightful time."

The camp ought to be better known than it is, in order that the benevolent may have a share in sustaining it. So far Mr. Phillips has carried it on with few helpers, himself getting together most of the needful money from personal friends. We are glad to learn that last week some seventy lads were in camp. It would be easy to give more the benefit of a fortnight's pleasure such as the camp affords, but so far the funds are not proportionate to the undoubted importance of the movement, and the laudable desires of those who have its progress at heart.

GENERAL BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The seventy-third annual report of the General Baptist Missionary Society (secretary, Rev. W. Hill, 60, Wilson-street, Derby) records a large amount of work, both in Orissa and Rome, attended by much encouragement. According to the census of 1881, Orissa has a population of over nine millions, among whom the missionaries and their native helpers make known the Gospel with commendable earnestness. But alas, for the want of sufficient labourers, the large majority of the people must pass into eternity without once hearing the name of Jesus. In Rome much activity is shown, but what are the two workers and their helpers among so many people? "Alas!" says the report. "that in opposing the Vatican, almost the whole of the intelligence of Italy should go in the direction of unbelief! The Bible is almost unknown."

THE FATHER'S HOUSE.

John xiv. 2 (cf. 1 Tim. iii. 15).

Oh, precious words to cheer
Those who are mourners here!
Not distant are those missing from our side,
Only in some far room
Of this same glorious home,
The Father's house in which we, too, abide.

"I leave you not alone,"
Thus Jesus told his own;
"The Comforter will come to be your guest;
And I shall only move
Beyond the sight of love,
To inner courts by God's near presence blest."

The Saviour said, "I go
From you who love Me so
Only to other resting-places fair.
The Father's house is great,
And full of royal state
Are those bright rooms I shall for you prepare."

Within this earthly space,
Lord, help us by thy grace
To live as God's true household in his sight;
That when to us He calls
To leave these outer halls,
We may with joy pass on to fuller light.

THE KOLAR MISSION.

We rejoice to learn that the Lord has sent to the aid of the Kolar Mission a very valuable helper in the person of Mr. L. Garthwaite, an accomplished educationalist. Having served under the Government, this gentleman, when he might have returned to England to spend his days in ease, made up his mind to devote his time and talents to the service of God. In a letter Miss Anstey says: "As an industrial institution we have succeeded well in training our lads and lasses, but in education we have failed, as we did not wish to employ heathen masters. We have done the best we could with our converts, and, receiving no grant in aid, we have not had Government inspection. But now God has sent us a first-class Christian inspector, a most successful teacher, who has a system of his own by which scholars can rapidly acquire the English language. We have brought our grown-up girls into school again, that they may learn English. The object is to elevate, refine, and enlighten them, by giving them the power of reading good and profitable literature. By the system now introduced, five of the working girls, after two months' tuition, are able to read the New Testament intelligently, and are now reading it daily. The younger girls are likely, with God's blessing, to make even quicker progress. The Lord knows our object in teaching the young—it is to enable them to read good books, so that they may advance in the Divine life; and, therefore, He richly blesses the effort put forth.

"Our people were getting into a condition of cold formalism, and day and night we solemnly warned them that the Lord would stretch out his hand in judgment, if they did not humble themselves with confession of sin. Still they did not show contrition. A few weeks ago, the sad news was given us that one of our girls had fallen into a very deep well. We ran to the spot, but she was taken out dead. She was a strong, willing girl, of 16 or 17 years; she went dancing up to the well, and while speaking to a companion, and looking back, she slipped and fell. Though a great favourite among all, and hardworking and obedient, she had not, we fear, yielded her heart to the Lord. It was a terrible sorrow to us, but we all resolved that her death should be the means of life to very many others. And it has been so. Since the evening of Chennie's death, a steady work of grace has been going on, and even in our sadness we rejoice, for souls are daily being added to the church of such as are being saved. Being able to read English, the children will require simple books; and second hand copies of Little Folks, Our Little Dots, &c., which may be sent by any of our friends at home, will be highly valued." Letters addressed to Miss Anstey, care of Mr. Daniel Causer, 48, St. Paul's-square, Birmingham, will be forwarded.

CONFERENCE AT DUFFTOWN.

This annual gathering was held in the Town-hall, Dufftown, Banffshire, N.B., on Wednesday, August 14. The weather being favourable, a large number of friends assembled from the towns and districts around. It was specially pleasing to observe the presence of many of the ministers, both of the Established and Free Churches.

The forenoon meeting was presided over by Rev. J. B. Cumming, and the subject of Bible study was The Life in Christ: its Power; its Directory; its Possibilities; or, the Filling of the Spirit, the Furnishing by the Word, and the Fulfilling of God's Will. This was expounded by the Chairman, who spoke very helpfully on the title, "The Life in Christ"; by Rev. James Smith, who dwelt upon the inspired Scriptures as the Directory of the "Life in Christ," and the furnishing of the man of God unto every good work; by Dr. Elder Cumming, who emphasised our death with Christ, and his life in us, from Gal. ii. 20; and by Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, who spoke with great freshness and lucidity on having the Life, and having it "more abundantly." The testimonies that were volunteered afterwards showed that the God of all grace had granted many blessings, and imparted much help, through the study of the Word.

The afternoon meeting was presided over by Mr. James Mudie, of Montrose. As in former years, this meeting was of a missionary character. Rev. George Smith, from China, told of work, and blessed results from it, during a thirty years' experience in that country. The large gathering was highly interested, and deeply moved by the simple, clear, and earnest narration of the wonderful works of God among the Chinese. Rev. John Douglas also told, with pathos and power, of the work of God in India, especially round Bhandara, where he has laboured for ten years. This was felt to be a most humbling and inspiring meeting.

The evening meeting, as usual mainly evangelistic, was addressed by Rev. E. H. Hopkins on 2 Tim. ii. 1; and by Mr. Samuel McKenzie, evangelist, from Exod. xii. 12, 13. The power of God was signally present, and this, the largest gathering of the day, was manifestly impressed. It could be truly said, at the close of a very happy and profitable season, that the people of God had "light, and joy, and gladness, and a good day."

A well-attended women's meeting, on Thursday, was addressed by Mrs. Stewart, of Logie, and others. God granted much help and blessing at and by this meeting. Mr. McKenzie conducted evangelistic meetings on Thursday, Friday, and Lord's Day evenings, when several souls, it is believed, passed from death unto life.

DRINKING FOUNTAINS AND TROUGHS.—During last year fifteen fountains and twenty-seven troughs for animals were erected under the auspices of the Metropolitan Drinking Fountain and Cattle Trough Association (Office: Victoria House, 117, Victoria-street, Westminster). This brings the number up to 652 fountains and 699 troughs. Every fountain and trough is cleansed two or three times weekly, and efficient workmen are constantly employed repairing injuries, from whatever cause arising. It may truly be said that many millions of human beings and animals are benefited every year by the results of the Society's operations.

IDOL-SMASHING IN CHINA.

Miss M. E. Scott, of the China Inland Mission, describes a visit to Sang'oh, the village of Pastor Chü. She was accompanied by Miss Miles; also by a woman attendant and Elder Chang. The reception was very cordial, the meetings and visitations being alike happy and encouraging. Miss Scott writes:—"In one of the houses to which we were conducted, there lives an old woman about seventy-eight years of age. Both the Pastor and Elder seem to have taken a great interest in her, but though she said she wanted to believe in Jesus, her idols remained undestroyed. However, yesterday, she expressed a willingness that they should be destroyed. The Pastor and Elder smashed up a clay idol which had had its abode in a stone niche outside the door—(price 500 cash). Then came the burning of the idolatrous paper shrines, and last, but not least, two small branches were taken down from the walls inside the house. On these branches were suspended thirty little birds, frogs, serpents, fish, and miniature idols; also some queer-looking things, probably meant for dragons, all very cleverly moulded in dough; we were told these were being offered as food for the gods!

"Visiting the temple where Elder Chang lived while a Buddhist priest, we saw the six great idols of the village—quite hideous things. The place showed signs of much neglect. It was specially interesting to visit it in company with men who were formerly devout worshippers, but who now would not lift a finger to remove the dust with which the figures were thickly covered. We counted seventy idols in the temple, large and small, and observed that the little boys showed their contempt by spitting at them."

The meetings for instruction and worship were well attended, and abundant evidence was afforded of the warmth of affection, of which, in common with other people, Chinese men and women are capable. Since returning to Ta'ning, Miss Scott has written reporting the

BAPTISM OF SOME CONVERTS.

She says:—"There were eleven candidates, seven of whom were accepted, and the rest kept back for further instruction. The examination was deeply interesting. The first candidate, who was named Li, heard the Gospel for the first time three years ago, and about a year later applied for baptism. He was not accepted, as he grew opium; on the sin of this practice being pointed out to him, he ceased to grow the drug, and for more than a year has been very bright and earnest. His wife died a short time before we came here. She was a true Christian, and her death seems to have sealed his faith. The second candidate, Wang-sien-seng, a young scholar, has undergone some petty persecution for the name of Christ. His father is, we believe, sleeping in Jesus; his mother and others in his village are awaiting baptism. We were much interested in hearing Wang say that a Gospel given to him by Mr. Cassels, was the first step towards his conversion. Another candidate, named Yang, was one of our first opium patients; he is now a servant to Mr. Lutley, who has proved him to be a faithful child of God. The baptism over, some addresses were delivered. Pastor Chü spoke very strongly about wine-drinking, tobacco smoking, and foot-binding, as being very unseemly for Christians. One result of these pointed words was that our own woman smashed her pipe, and several promised not to bind their little girls' feet. On the Sunday afternoon, we joined the native Christians in remembering the death of the Lord."

DR. GRIFFITH JOHN, writing from Hankow, reports that on a recent Lord's day fifteen converts were baptized.

A NEW PLAN OF WORK.

Wednesday, the 14th inst., a drawing-room eting was held at the house of Sir Robert ayre, to consider the question of evangelistic rk in the country towns and rural districts, h special reference to a plan brought forward the Misses Perks, of Winchester. Amongst se present were Sir Arthur Blackwood (in chair), Sir R. Phayre, Messrs. C. Barclay, Gurney Sheppard, A. Guinness, and C. Dobbin. Sir Arthur Blackwood, in briefly explaining object for which the meeting had been mmoned, enforced the necessity for increased ergy in the preaching and teaching of the spel, by very startling evidence of the in-ase, throughout the country, of Ritualism, l of Romanism, to which the former points way and opens the door.

Mr. Edwards explained the plan, devised er many years of experience in Gospel work in nchester and the surrounding districts, and wed that it was not brought forward in any rit of rivalry with the Protestant Alliance, Open-Air Mission, the Evangelisation So-ty, or other organisations of like character, entirely in sympathy with and in support each, whilst seeking to supply a want not ctly met by any of them. The proposal, ted briefly, was to employ, as paid agents, a id of working men, believers, every one of m of proved experience in dealing with souls d in preaching the Gospel; these, to the mber of ten or twelve, should together visit ntry towns; and, having obtained, if possible, sympathy and co-operation of the ministers he Gospel in the place, should remain there two or three weeks, seeking by systematic tation from house to house, and by daily aching the Gospel in the open air or in halls, awaken working men and women to anxiety their souls, and, by the help of the Holy rit, to bring such into the kingdom of God. ving delivered their message in every part he town and surrounding villages (and by rsonal dealing with individuals as far as sible), the band would go forth to "regions yond" for like labour in them, in the service Christ.

The speaker then drew attention to the perior fitness in some respects of working n, for carrying the Gospel to working n, who generally listen to them as evan-ists with more readiness than to men of her social position, and he showed that the n contemplated the employment only, as ngelists, of men, who, having gathered ndering sheep into the fold, would leave them the care of regular shepherds, and pass to er districts. He stated that at Winchester y had a number of working men, believers ost of them of many year's standing), whose cessful labours in the Gospel in the past tify the expectation that, if employed in the nner proposed, much blessing may be ex-cted as the result.

Sir Robert Phayre expressed hearty sympa-with the object aimed at, and bore testimony the remarkable blessing which had followed labours of the Misses Perks at Winchester. the course of the discussion which followed, which several gentlemen engaged, everyone whom could speak from personal experience evangelistic labours, all agreed as to the gent and increasing need of such work in ry part of the country, and as to the re-rkable readiness with which the poor listen the Gospel of Jesus Christ, no matter by om it is preached, so long as it is the Gospel. rdial sympathy was expressed with Miss rks in this movement, substantial help was en, and great and glorious results are expected en the plan is fairly launched.

Since the meeting, which was of course a liminary one, letters of sympathy and help ve come to hand. May these labourers soon thrust forth into the great harvest field. Anyone wishing to help in this important work may communicate with General Sir Robert Phayre, K.C.B., 64, St. George's-square, President; or C. Dobbin, Esq., 35, Walbrook, City, Treasurer.

THE EPISTLES OF ST. JOHN.*

This issue of the Expositor's Bible is a most valuable addition to the series. It is the product of a mind well furnished, able, and scholarly, and is pervaded throughout by a devout and reverent spirit. It is bright and inspiring in style. There is a strength and freshness in the author's writing, and a wealth of interesting illustration which makes its reading a refreshment and a delight.

In his preface, the author tells how much he has read in former years upon these Epistles. The result of his reading he thus describes:—"On the whole, I greatly prefer St. John to his commentators. I now seem myself to understand him better without the dissonance of their many voices." The commentators themselves could not desire a better result from the careful study of their works. We mention the fact here to show that the author possesses that deep love for the Epistles which is one indispensable condition for such a work as he has undertaken.

The author adopts a method of his own. We confess that our preference is for a connected exposition dealing with the Epistles verse by verse, or broken up into topical sections. But this is not the method adopted here. In the first four chapters we have the historical surroundings of these Epistles; the connection between them and the Gospel of John; the polemical element in them; and the image of John's soul, as reflected in his Epistles. All this, though not, strictly speaking, exposition of the text, is necessary to a true understanding of the Apostle's meaning. The body of the Epistles is dealt with in a number of discourses, in which the author sometimes gives himself "a wide scope," and applies rather than expounds the text. As a set-off against this lack of connected exposition, the text of the Epistle is given in Greek, Latin, the English A.V. and R.V.; and in a fifth column the author adds a translation of his own. In his opinion "every translation is an additional commentary, every good translation the best of commentaries." In some cases, exegetical notes are added, which are so good that the reader will think it a pity there are not many more. We should have been glad to see each Epistle so dealt with.

From these notes we cull the following reference to 1 John i. 7:—"The Blood of Jesus, his Son poured forth. This word (the blood) denotes more vividly and effectively than any other could do three great realities of the Christian belief—the reality of the manhood of Jesus; the reality of his sufferings; the reality of his sacrifice. It is dogma; but dogma made pictorial, pathetic, almost passionate. It may be noted that much current thought and feeling around us is just at the opposite extreme." Referring to this antagonism to the doctrine of the blood, the author says: "Whilst it need not be denied that there are hymns which are pervaded by an ensanguined materialism, and which are calculated to wound reverence as well as taste; it is clear that much criticism on hymns and sermons, where the 'Blood of Jesus' is at all appealed to, has an ultra refinement which is unscriptural and rationalistic. It is out of touch with St. Paul (Col. i. 14—20), with the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews (ix. 14), with St. Peter (1 Peter i. 19), with St. John in his Epistle, and with the redeemed in heaven (Rev. v. 9)." The following incidental reference to the same passage is important in view of some of the holiness teaching which prevails to-day. Referring to the style of the Apostle, the author describes it as real rather than verbal. "The interpreter must look not only at the words themselves but at that which precedes and follows. The 'root below the stream' can only be traced by our bending over the water until it becomes translucent to us." Then follows an example from 1 John i. 7, 8. The question "which naturally arises from reading ver. 6 is, Must it be said that the sons of light need a constant cleansing by the blood of Jesus, which implies a constant guilt? The answer is supplied by the following verse. ['It is so,' for] 'if we say that we have no sin,' &c." The words we have italicised are the author's answer to the defective interpretation of those who set up a claim for sinlessness.

The author is a bishop of the Episcopal Church in Ireland, so that it is not to be wondered at that the Churchman sometimes appears through the expositor; but as an evangelical exposition, earnest in tone, practical in aim, clear and often sparkling in style, we heartily commend the book.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

DOES GOD ANSWER PRAYER?

Dear Sir,—I had lately a discussion with a friend on the subject of prayer. He maintained that the true object of prayer is to bring us closer to God, and, while he admitted that God answered definite objective prayer in Bible times, he denied that such is his way in dealing with his people now. My friend knows of no case capable of investigation which will support my view that God so answers prayer to-day. Can any of your readers throw any light on this?—Yours, X. Y. Z.

[We recommend our correspondent and his friend to read the annual "Narrative of the Lord's Dealings with George Muller," during the past fifty years. Is there a Christian alive who could not, from his own experience, reply in the affirmative to the question of "X. Y. Z."?—Ed.]

"ADDING UNTO" AND "TAKING FROM."

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me to seek an explanation of Rev. xxii. 18, 19:—

> If any man shall add unto these things, God shall unto him the plagues that are written in this book, and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book.

The prophecy of the book has to do, in some measure, with the heavenly city and the conduct of the redeemed hereafter; and, turning from the language of the Revelation concerning these to many writings, both in poetry and prose, of the present day, it is by no means exceptional to find expressions, apparently those of supposition and imagination, that do go beyond what is written in "the Book." The language of many of our hymns will readily substantiate what I say. I ask, then, could it be said, in the light of the words in Rev. xxii. 18, 19, that the writers of these hymns, &c., and those who, by the use of them, endorse their sentiments, are "adding unto these things"? I acknowledge that if such be the case one is brought into much bondage, and that such an interpretation of the words, although it often distresses my mind, does not certainly commend itself to me.

Or, if this be too narrow a view to take of these words, will some of your readers kindly express their opinion as to their true meaning and application, stating wherein consists this sin of "adding unto" and "taking from," that is denounced with so terrible a warning; also giving, if possible, some examples of its commission?

I would also ask for an explanation of the words: "God shall take away his part out of the book of life." They cannot, of course, in the perfect harmony of God's truth, contradict John x. 27 and other passages of like import, and yet some light is necessary to reconcile them with such statements. —Yours truly, F. W. G.

"VILLA HELVETIA, MENTONE."—This Home is intended for young gentlewomen of limited means, who are suffering from delicate health or in the early stages of consumption. In Mentone they may spend the winter largely out of doors, and recover from chest affections which at home would be very troublesome. Last winter sixteen ladies were in residence, eleven of them English. Members of all Protestant denominations are received on November 1, and recommended to take advantage of the entire six months' stay. The Home is superintended by Miss Armstrong, who is usually assisted by two deaconesses from Berne. Any lady wishing to be received into the Home should apply by letter to Miss Dudgeon, Les Grottes, Mentone, Alpes Maritimes, France, fully stating her circumstances, and enclosing a medical certificate as to the likelihood of recovery being aided by a winter in the South, and a letter from a clergyman, stating that but for the Home the applicant would be unable to bear the expense of acting on the medical opinion.

WANTED—WICKS!

The removal day is drawing to a close. What a busy day it has been! Vans to unload, furniture to carry into the various rooms of a secluded country house, provision baskets to unpack—for meals are taken picnic-fashion on such unsettling occasions. But the last van has departed, straws are blowing about the weedy garden, unsightly wrappers lie heaped in the hall; weary workers will not reduce the chaos to order to-day; it is dusk already, the lamps must be filled and lighted. There they stand, new and handsome, for passage and parlours, kitchen and bedchambers. The gas in town gave less trouble; never mind, there must be some drawbacks to the pleasant quiet of this new country home. Happily, there is an ample supply of oil and plenty of matches. But—but—where are the wicks? Has nobody thought of providing wicks? It seems not, and it is getting rapidly darker—shops miles away, and the dismayed party such strangers to the neighbourhood that no one can suggest where even candles can be borrowed. What is to be done? Such a small oversight, yet so inconvenient to be all in the dark for want of an insignificant thing like a few yards of cotton wick! To be sure there is cotton enough in the lace curtains, in the pretty muslin dresses, in the household sheets, &c., but it is not wick. So much to be accomplished, yet all must be left undone for want of wick; nothing remains but to lock the doors and grope the way to bed before the unaccustomed chambers are wrapped in absolute darkness.

Wanted—wicks! There are dark homes in our towns and villages; and dark lives, purposeless and sad for want of the light of life. The oil of the grace of God is richly poured out; the unction of the Holy Ghost freely promised. Jesus has appeared to be "the Light of the world"; whence, then, the darkness? Wanted—nothing costly, or rare, or beautiful—but wicks; just humble lives, that keep themselves in the love of God, that are "filled with the Holy Ghost," saturated with the inspired Word, and kindled with the love of Jesus. Wanted—Christians, to show Him forth as the Light, the Truth, the Way, the Life; as the Redeemer, Shepherd, Priest, and King; Man and God, "able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God through Him." Wanted—Christians, contented to be themselves forgotten, yea, consumed, so that Christ alone may be glorified, and that poor sinners may rejoice in "the true light, that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world."

Nations and tribes—millions upon millions of men—sit in heathen darkness. Unknown tongues murmur, "Who will show us any good?" Wanted—wicks. There is oil, there is light; wanted, the human medium through which the light appears. Who is willing to be severed from home and friends, contented to be a thread, detached from the woven fabric of elegant society; to be a mere wick for his dear sake, and the sake of perishing men? Only a wick, and yet luminous with the royal glory of Jesus, consuming away, it may be, but even in consumption being transformed into his image?

Wanted—not a life of gentle home virtue; this may be merely a light of earth, a glow-worm's lustre, that guides not, kindles not. No one beholding the shining gem exclaims, "blessed light!" but only "beautiful worm!" Wanted, not even lives of philanthropic activity; not fireflies, splendid with the flashes of their own restless energy; but lives of self-forgetfulness, of unreserved consecration; lives hidden with Christ; lives of communion in his mediatorial yearning over souls perishing in darkness for want of a light-bearer; lives that know "the power of his resurrection," the only power which makes "the fellowship of his sufferings" possible, even to a child of God; lives which death shall only seem to e tinguish, for "they that be teachers shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever" (Dan. xii. 3, margin). "And who, then, is willing to consecrate his service, this day, unto the Lord?"

IRISH SUPERSTITION. — Forty thousands persons visited the celebrated shrine of Knock on Thursday week. Several masses were celebrated, and an imposing procession followed. In the evening, the "benediction" was given to a large number of pilgrims from England, Scotland, and America. One young girl is said to have had the use of her limbs restored, and has left her crutches behind as a memorial of the alleged miracle.

AGRA TRAINING INSTITUTE.—As Rev. Dr. Valentine is visiting various places in England and Scotland, communications relating to the above Institute, of which Dr. Valentine is the Principal, may be addressed to Rev. Dr. Lowe, F.R.C.S.E., secretary and superintendent of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, 56, George-street, Edinburgh; or to R. C. Bell, Esq., W.S., treasurer of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, 1, North Charlotte-street, Edinburgh.

CONFERENCE AT GRANTOWN, N.B.—The annual Conference here on Christian Life and Work was held in the public hall on Wednesday last week. At the morning session, Rev. E. H. Hopkins, of Richmond (who has been spending his vacation at this quiet northern retreat), expounded the Scriptural doctrine of sanctification. Principal Douglas, of Glasgow, advocated work among the young; Rev. J. Cumming Brown, of Gunnersbury; Ex-Bailie Dickson, Glasgow; Rev. W. Grant, of Edinburgh, and Rev. A. Macdiarmid, Grantown, also spoke. In the afternoon, missionary addresses were given by Rev. W. Macgregor, of Amoy, China, and Dr. Kennedy, of London. A well-attended Gospel meeting was held in the evening.

MRS. GINEVER'S HOMES.—There are now more than 150 orphans in the three separate households of this Institution. The principal Home, known as the Kingsdown Orphanage, Pemberton-road, Upper Holloway, shelters 75 boys and girls, who are brought up on the family system, the elder boys going out daily to school, while the girls and younger boys are taught at home. The girls are trained in all kinds of household work, and particularly excel in needlework, earning in school-hours sufficient to provide for one child. Close by this Home is one at 8, Tremlett-grove, for the reception of infants and those who are under seven years of age. It is only those who visit hospitals and infirmaries who have any idea how many homeless, afflicted orphans there are, and such poor little sufferers are happily provided for at Cuthbert House, Broadstairs. The Homes are always open to visitors.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The Council of this Alliance having accepted the cordial invitation addressed to them by Christian ministers and other friends of all evangelical denominations at Cheltenham, the next annual conference will accordingly assemble in that town on October 22, and two succeeding days. The programme will embrace a variety of topics interesting to all the churches; among them may be mentioned: "The Present Danger to Vital Religion from the insidious advances of Ritualism and Romanism." "The Spirit in which Religious Controversy should be conducted." "The Present Necessity for firmly and fully maintaining the Divinity and Atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ." "The Primitive Records of Genesis, attested by the oldest Gentile traditions." "Scriptural Meditation, the antidote for present-day restlessness and superficiality in Christian life." "National Morality and the Opium Traffic." "The Evangelical Alliance in relation to the Evangelisation of the World." The selected speakers and chairmen include Lord Polwarth (President), Revs. Dr. Donald Fraser, Hubert Brooke, F. H. Marling (Montreal), John Hartley (Birmingham), Dr. L. B. White, General Sir Robert Phayre, K.C.B., Revs. J. Hudson Taylor, Talbot Greaves, Dr. Clemance, Dr. Culross, Dr. E. E. Jenkins, Canon Fausset, H. E. Brooke, Geo. Piercy, Canon Ripley, Colmer B. Symes, and Mr. Donald Matheson (Chairman of the Council). Copies of the programme, and all particulars respecting the arrangements for the Conference will be supplied on application to the secretaries of the Evangelical Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London.

ASHBOURNE NIGHT SCHOOLS.—A few ye ago two of God's children began to do someth for the poor people of Ashbourne, Derbyshi many of whom never went to a place of worsh Meetings were held two nights a week, one men and boys, and one for women and girls. T latter have been taught to make themselves su able garments. These schools have been a ve great help to the poor people, many of whom fi it such hard work to get even the common clothing. The one desire in view is to win th souls for Christ, and God has blessed the teachi of his Word to many. The work has so far be carried on free of debt, but this year unavoidal expenses have been incurred in building a room, that which had formerly been lent could no long be had for the meetings. The cost of the roo and necessary fittings is £460, of which £60 h already been given. As the schools cannot be c ried on without expense, they will be closed un the room is paid for. The treasurers will se reports and give information to anyone desiring know more of the work. Mrs. J. Bradley, San Brook, Ashbourne, is treasurer of the school f men and boys, and Mrs. E. Hope Cottage.—Dear Sir,—I have found it answ both for the sake of the children in this little Home a to make room for others, to place them, after a peri of training in the Home with godly cottagers, to brought up for service. An excellent woman, who h successfully trained one of our children and got her o into a good situation, is willing to take another. T only difficulty is the payment required, 5s. a wee which the general fund of the Home cannot affo My hope is that one of your readers will be inclined remove this obstacle. The child is about ten years o so the help would only be required for four or fi years. All communications should be addressed to M Andrew Johnston, Hope Cottage, Woodford-gree Essex.—Yours truly, Charlotte Johnston.

The rev. gentleman is a popular eacher and lecturer, and he will be greatly missed y his congregation and those who have been accus-med to listen to his eloquent and learned dis-urses in various localities in the North of Eng-nd.

Father Allen.—Abraham Allen, known com-only as Father Allen, has died at Ballarat at the e of seventy-four years. He was born at Tavi-ock, and was brought up as a blacksmith. At e age of twenty-five, under the preaching of quire Brooke, he was converted. He was led most at once to exhort men everywhere to repent, d many people, at home and in the colonies, gard him as their spiritual father.

Mr. Francis Ormond.—The Presbyterian urch of Australia is mourning over the loss of a an whose life has been fruitful in good works. riginally a Scottish boy in pastoral life, Francis rmond went to Australia at an early age, and rough much toil and not a few difficulties he ached great wealth. He gave to the Presby-rians £40,000 to found a college, which they lled, after the founder, Ormond College. Dr. Thain Davidson, writing on "The Wil-rness of Doubt," in The Young Man for Sep-mber, says he has himself "trembled on the verge Atheism." "I have doubted, and doubted, d I thought I must give up Christianity; every ht above has gone out, and the heaven has been thout a star. I have drifted on waves of agnos-speculation, till the land was almost out of ght, nearly every long-cherished belief being allowed up in an ocean of hopeless mystery." ut he adds, "It is long since my dark doubts nished; and in the religion of Jesus I find, what an find nowhere else, a strength on which I can e, and a hope on which I can die."

Messrs. Moody and Sankey.—The Convention Northfield being over, these brethren, so long d blessedly associated in Christian effort, are ving plans for their work during the autumn. r. Sankey has been associated with Dr. Pierson Northfield, during the latter part of the month August, in his expositions of the books of the ble. He will conduct the praise at a Convention mmoned by Mr. Moody in Chicago for ten days om September 20. The story that has been going e rounds of the American and English press as Mr. Sankey having acquired an estate on Long and, N.Y., is without foundation; neither is it ue that he is "settling down," as the phrase goes. s gifts and energies are still at the service of the ristian churches.

Obituary.

DR. SAMUEL OSBORNE HABERSHON.

We deeply regret to announce the death of the eminent physician, Dr. Habershon, of Brook-street, W. His health, which had been under-mined by a serious illness in November last, sustained a further shock by the death of his beloved wife in April. This led to a return of the malady, some six weeks ago, to which he finally succumbed on Thursday night. Sur-rounded by his son and daughters, he gently fell asleep—another well-tried labourer gone to his rest. His death will leave a wide-felt void and will prove a heavy loss, which will not only be profoundly felt by the public and the pro-fession of which he was so bright an ornament, but also by a large circle of sorrowing friends, by the Christians meeting at St. George's Hall, by the poor of Gray's-yard and his own neigh-bourhood, and by friends in many other centres of Christian labour. Some details of the life of this faithful servant of Christ will be given in our issue of September 13, together with a portrait.

REV. NEIL TAYLOR, DORNOCH.

This highly esteemed minister of the Free Church of Scotland recently died at the age of fifty-nine. He held pastorates successively in Ross-shire, Glasgow, Dundee, and at Dornoch in the county of Sutherland. He was a cultured and incisive preacher and a courageous defender of orthodox doctrine. At the same time he was active in pro-moting all good social movements and reforms.

REV. S. W. CHRISTOPHERS, LIVERPOOL.

On the 14th inst., Rev. Samuel Woolcock Chris-tophers died at his residence, Formby, Liverpool, after having for some time suffered from paralysis. A devoted Wesleyan minister of the Gospel, he was held in high esteem. Among his published works were: "Hymn Writers and their Hymns," "Poets of Methodism," "Homes of Old English Writers," and "From out of the Deep." Mr. Christophers was seventy-nine years of age, having been in the ministry since 1836.

MRS. W. J. LEWIS.

We regret to announce the death at Ryde, I. W., on Friday morning last, of the wife of Mr. W. J. Lewis, at the age of fifty-eight. She rests in Jesus after much grievous suffering extending from last October. The Lord dealt graciously with her; the divine calm of her peaceful repose in the Lord and the joy of his presence were never once clouded or dimmed. Mr. Lewis feels much worn by the long-continued strain; he asks prayer for himself and for his motherless daughter.

MR. MARK GUY PEARSE, SANDOWN.

This gentleman, the father of the well-known Wesleyan Methodist minister, passed to rest peace-fully on the 12th inst. For several months his health had been the source of anxiety to his friends, the once robust and active frame gradually suc-cumbing to the infirmities of age. Residing at Sandown, Isle of Wight, Mr. Pearse was widely loved by rich and poor. He delighted in the joy of others, and gloried in God and the progress of the Gospel. He was a generous supporter of mis-sions and evangelical effort in general. One who was privileged with his acquaintance writes: "He formed an independent judgment of men and things in general. No one could help respecting his honesty, and brave, hearty love of truth. To his strength of character was added considerable refinement, and a just appreciation of that which is lovely." On the occasion of the funeral there were services in the Sandown parish church as well as the Wesleyan chapel, the vicar, Rev. W. T. Storrs, officiating at the one, and in a kindly spirit attending the other.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the annual camp meetings at Pontypool, on Sept. 1 and 2, in connection with Mr. T. M. Wintle's work at Pontymoile, Mon.—For blessing on two weeks' meetings in the Soldiers' Home, Gibraltar, commencing on Sept. 3, to be conducted by Mr. M. E. Steedman.

THY WILL.

"Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

How do the angels do thy will, dear Lord?
Is it with falt'ring wing and downcast eye,
Or do they hasten gladly at thy word,
Counting it joy at thy behest to fly?

Taught by thyself, our Saviour, Lord, we pray:
"Thy will be done on earth as 'tis in heaven."
So we must do it in the angels' way,
And find our joy in each commandment given.

They do thy will in love, not asking why,
Or ever doubting that thy way is good;
And yet for them the Saviour did not die,
Redeeming love they have not understood.

Then surely we, for whom God gave his Son,
Should never doubt his purposes of grace,
Or find it hard to say "Thy will be done,"
E'en though his meaning yet we cannot trace.

For by-and-by his love will make it plain,
And we shall know that all that we have borne
Was wisely worked to teach us how to say, [done."
With cheerful hearts, "My God, thy will be

MUSIC-HALL LICENCES are renewable on October 2 next. We would point out to our readers that any objections to their renewal must be lodged with the London County Council a clear fortnight prior to that date, accompanied by evidence in sup-port of such opposition.

CHURCH ARMY.—The Archbishop of Can-terbury has just inspected the Training Homes of the Church Army in the Edgware-road. This is the only college of any size where working people are trained for mission work in the Church of England. His Grace expressed himself deeply interested in what he saw. Thirty men and fifteen women were in course of training. This Society, which now, also, accepts ladies as its mission nurses, is hoping, in October, to send some of its agents to the Leper Settlements, in India.

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CONGRESS, to be held in Birmingham, will extend from October 22 to 25. On the preceding Sunday special sermons will be preached in the churches and chapels, and on the Monday the Mayor will receive the members of the Congress at the Council House. The morning sessions will be devoted to a con-sideration of temperance from the scientific, educational, social, industrial, and commercial aspects. The question of legislative remedies for intemperance will also be discussed. The papers will be by men who may well be regarded as ex-perts in their special spheres. The afternoons will be devoted to conferences on woman's work for temperance, the native races and the drink traffic, and temperance work among the young. At the evening meetings addresses will be delivered by teetotal mayors, medical abstainers, and teetotal members of the House of Commons. Programmes and particulars as to membership of the Congress, may be had from Mr. Robert Rae, secretary of the National Temperance League, 33, Paternoster-row, E.C.

MADAGASCAR.—During last year, good, steady work for Christ was done in the district of Ambatomkanga, under the supervision of Rev. T. T. Matthews, of the London Missionary Society. In the report we read, "The Malagasy, as a people, were not converted to God at the burning of the idols in 1869; their rulers and they simply took up a new mental and professional attitude towards Christianity, and it became no longer a crime to worship God. The work, during the past twenty years, has been mainly that of instructing heathen congregations in 'the first principles of the Gospel of Christ,' and there is still a vast amount of that kind of work to be done. Our great want is native evangelists—enthusiastic men, whose hearts have been touched by the Spirit of God, and who have a burning desire for the salvation of their fellow countrymen." Under the circumstances, the sustained endeavours of the missionary are more far-reaching than apparent results indicate; in churches and schools the population is gradually being brought under the influence of the Gospel. During last year there were numerous cheering additions to church membership. The Malagasy sadly need to learn the heinousness of sin and the holiness of God, and to feel their personal need of a Saviour.

Letters to the Editor.

THE FREE LIBRARY MOVEMENT.

Sir,—The members of literary and other societies associated with our churches will shortly be arranging their plans for the coming winter. May I be permitted to suggest that in districts where free libraries do not exist—and their number is legion—good service might be rendered by some member introducing the subject in a paper, and so creating discussion. I shall be happy to send a copy of "Free Public Libraries," and some other literature on the question, to anyone willing to carry out this suggestion.—Yours truly,

Thomas Greenwood.

20, Lordship-park, Stoke Newington, London, N.

KESWICK CONVENTION.

Sir,—I have read Mr. Baldey's letter with much interest, and doubt not that his brotherly suggestion will bear fruit that will gladden and enrich many lives. There is another important question to be considered—how to provide for additional visitors at Keswick. This year the place was over full, and many friends had to be disappointed. Now, one thing struck all who attended the Convention—the large number of young men present; and earnest, hearty, athletic young fellows many of them seemed to be. Why not have a Young Men's Camp, as at Mr. Moody's Northfield Conventions? Since the meetings are in a tent, why should not a considerable number live in tents or wooden huts, just for the Convention week? I have no doubt some practical military man could soon suggest a plan, and I daresay some American friend could fill in the details. This would certainly relieve the already overcrowded lodging-houses, and enable many more to find accommodation, while it might enhance the pleasure of not a few ardent spirits who come to Keswick, not for temporal comforts, but spiritual invigoration and power.

I venture to throw out the hint; perhaps you will allow some of your readers to exchange thoughts on the matter.—Yours very sincerely,

Walter J. Mayers.

Singapore, Wallington, Surrey.

CHAPLAINS AND ARMY SCRIPTURE READERS.

Sir,—Some weeks back you published an appeal on behalf of the Army Scripture-Readers' Society for funds to clear off a debt of £1500.

It seems to me that the Society should first of all justify its claim to the support of the Christian churches. At the present time, though nominally nonsectarian, it is really under the "direction and control" (to quote the chaplain-general, Dr. Edghill) of the chaplains of the various garrisons. It is a well-known fact that very many, if not most, of them are Ritualists, teaching doctrines contrary to the Word of God. We have an instance in the chaplain of this garrison, who holds that the "One Body" of Eph. iv. 4 is the Church of England, and that all who are members of other denominations are "heretics" and schismatics; also that there is no salvation outside "the Church."

Now, Sir, reading the appeal in your columns, I wrote to the secretary pointing out the facts, and urging that the Society should be free from clerical control. He replied, saying that "we have to work in harmony with the constituted authorities," and that there are "many pious and devout" men among the chaplains. To say this seems to admit that there are others who are not pious; but I was not discussing the personal characters of the chaplains, but their teaching.

A man may be "pious and devout," but if he teaches unscriptural doctrine he is not fit to have control of the Scripture-readers. Take a case in point. The 4th Hussars recently left Cork for the Curragh Camp, and of course the Scripture-reader attached to the regiment (Mr. George Cummings) went with them; but, on reporting himself to the senior chaplain, he was forbidden to work on the camp: I suppose because so many got converted. I have not heard the outcome of this matter, but perhaps Mr. Cummings can say something about it.

At all events, I hope it won't be allowed to drop; but that all who are interested in the Lord's work amongst our soldiers will use their influence in the matter, and say once for all that the Army Scripture readers shall not in the future be subject to the chaplains, but be allowed full liberty to carry the simple Gospel to our soldiers, unfettered by clerical interference.—I am, Sir, very truly yours,

Cecil Smith.

Soldiers' Christian Association, Bristol.

The Book World.

Light and Help to Cheer and Gladden. By G. S. 6d. George Stoneman, 67, Paternoster-row. Chapters in bold type for the sick and aged, also selections from Holy Scripture, under the title of "Words from Heaven."

The Prince of Peace, containing a series of Gospel stories for the young, has reached a fourth edition. The work of a Christian lady, it gives in simple language, and generally with accuracy and clearness, the outstanding facts and incidents of the life and work of Christ. Rev. E. Bickersteth, rector of Watton, Herts, supplies a preface. 6d. Jarrold & Sons.

Brief Lessons on the Parables and Miracles of our Lord. By William Thynne Lynn. 1s. George Stoneman. Here is much in little, the matter being as truly excellent in quality as it is admirably concise in expression. Mr. Lynn is a thoroughly reliable teacher; moreover, his book is experimental as well as expository, and, therefore, will, we trust, have the wide circulation it deserves.

Health Troubles of City Life. By George Herschell, M.D. Hamilton, Adams & Co. The causes and premonitions of "break-down," on the part of persons who pass their lives in the midst of commercial excitement, are set forth in perspicuous style. The advice given is, generally speaking, self-commendatory. We cannot however, but regard as blemishes on the work, the author's permission of certain patients to take alcoholic drinks at meals, and also to indulge, in some measure, in tobacco-smoking.

Garenganze: or, Seven Years' Pioneer Mission Work in Central Africa, by Fred. S. Arnot, is a work of which we have already spoken in terms of warm commendation. We rejoice to find that it has already reached a third edition, to which Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson supplies a hearty introduction. It gives us pleasure to adopt the words of our Philadelphia friend, when he says: "The book is a revelation of passion for souls...a new exhibition of the evidences of Christianity—in the department, not of Apologetics, but of Energetics." We sincerely trust that this inspiring book will run through many more editions. 3s. 6d. J. E. Hawkins.

Inebriety: Its Etiology, Pathology Treatment, and Jurisprudence. By Norman Kerr, M.D. H. K. Lewis, 136, Gower-street, W.C. This book, which we noticed last year on its first appearance, has now come out in a second edition, revised and enlarged. It has certainly filled a vacant place in medical literature, and is now an acknowledged text-book in its special sphere. During a period of more than a quarter of a century the author has been studying his subject, and patients and their relatives will be enlightened, and medical practitioners assisted, by a perusal of his thoroughly practical, as well as scientific, pages.

The Hansa Towns. By Helen Zimmern. 5s. T. Fisher Unwin. There are few chapters of history more remarkable than that which deals with the trading alliance or association, which flourished with more or less vigour from the fourteenth to the sixteenth centuries, known as the Hanseatic League. This work sketches the story with much fulness and animation, and should be studied by all who would learn the many lessons of history. As is well known, the League was formed by port towns in Germany, against the Scandinavian and other pirates, and for the promotion of trade. Its influence was widespread in its day. The author of this volume has succeeded in bringing together a large amount of very interesting and curious information.

Our Senior Scholars: How to retain them in connection with our Sunday Schools. 1s. Sunday School Union. Two essays, by Frank S. Garnick, of Cheltenham, and J. W. Thomas, of Barnwood, which obtained the first and second prizes respectively in a competition on the subject in 1888. The importance of the question is generally admitted, and we are sure that all who are interested in it will find in these pages much that is very suggestive.

The Questions of the Bible, arranged in the order of the books. Compiled by W. Carnelley. 7s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin. A book of peculiar value to all who study the Bible with diligence. Accustomed for many years to notice the great number and variety of interrogations in the sacred volume, and the force and interest with which they invest almost every page, Mr. Carnelley has collected them, and, in this beautiful book, presents them along with the context in which they are found. The work is dedicated to the memory of the late John Rylands, in token of a friendship of nearly fifty years, and provided with a preface, at once lucid and instructive, by Rev. Dr. S. G. Green. The tables of the occurrence of questions have evidently been compiled with great care. It will astonish some to learn that there are 2274 questions in the Old Testament, and 1024 in the New.

A Handbook of Young People's Guilds. By F. Herbert Stead, M.A. 8d. Congregational Union, Farringdon-street. The question, "How to deal with our young people," is becoming increasingly important, and this book will give considerable help in replying to it. Many of its suggestions are valuable, and, wisely managed, will undoubtedly help to accomplish the object of these guilds—viz., "to win our young people for the church and for Christ." With some of the methods suggested we do not agree. To make "the Church the centre of social fascination to its rising sons and daughters" may prove only a doubtful blessing to the young themselves, and may tell injuriously upon the Church. The craving for amusement is being strengthened by the efforts made to satisfy it. We know the difficulties of the question, and while commending the book, we may surely urge that caution is needed in adopting some of its suggestions.

The All Father. By Rev. H. P. Newnham. 4d. Longmans, Green & Co. This book contains sermons, chiefly on "The Lord's Prayer." The title of the book suggests that its doctrine is that of the Broad school. God is declared to be the "Father of saint and sinner alike," having bidden every child of earth to call Him by the name of "Our Father." The doctrine of the new birth is totally ignored. Upon the subject of forgiveness the author says: "Human theology talks of the justice of God in connection with the exaction of punishment. The loved Apostle prefers to see God's justice exercised in fulfilling the one condition of pardon. It is our Father's duty to forgive, provided only that the condition of hearty penitence be forthcoming." The atonement, as taught in Isa. liii. and Rom. iii., iv. and v., has no place in securing for us a righteous pardon. The doctrine of forgiveness, evangelically understood, is thus described: "Don't we want to keep the sin, while we dread its consequences?" "We have invented doctrines which teach us that a man may be forgiven once and for all, then go on sinning, and it will make no difference to him." One is tempted to ask—Did the author really think this a true description? or, did he intentionally caricature a doctrine which he did not like? If the first, then he is to be condemned for his ignorance; if the second, he is to be the more condemned for his unfaithfulness. That there have been some who have so perverted the doctrine of Scripture is not denied, but that a public teacher, thoughtful and able as this author was, should represent this perversion as the doctrine itself, is inexcusable. "Edna Lyall," in a preface, commends this book. We are sorry that we are obliged to condemn it. Broad theology, as represented in it, appears to us utterly inadequate to meet the needs of the conscience and the heart, and to be subversive of Old and New Testament teaching.

Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls (the publishers of Dr. Pierson's Missionary Review of the World) have in preparation an Encyclopædia of Missions, which is to be published in two volumes, price £2. Advance subscribers supplied at half-price.

An Arrow Shot at Blasphemy. By James Davis. John Kensit. The author undertakes a task for which he is manifestly unfitted. His style is inflated, pretentious, and obscure. His ideas are as confused as his language. His attempts to expound Scripture are utter failures. Error will not be shattered by a thousand such shots as this.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 1.—Judges XVII.

The incidents related in this book do not follow in strict chronological order. They are fragments of history, strung together to show the confusion and sin which arise in the absence of a properly constituted central authority. Again and again we are reminded that there was no king in Israel, and that every man did as seemed right in his own eyes (xvii. 6, xviii. 1, xix. 1, xxi. 25; compare Deut. xii. 8). This utter lawlessness issued in misery and defeat. And is not this a true picture of that condition of heart, in which men refuse the rightful authority of the true King, and do as they choose? Even redeemed souls have to learn bitter lessons ere they resign themselves to the alone dominion of the King eternal, immortal, and invisible—yield to it, and be really free. It is probable, therefore, that what is here related, and to the close of this book, took place before Samson's time (xx. 28).

(1) Idol-making (1—5).—A miserable home was this. The mother hoarding (1 Tim. vi. 9); the son robbing. It is best not to do evil; but it is next best, when it is done, to undo it, so far as may be, by confession and restitution. This is what Micah did. They turned their money into a god; but it was the mother's god before and after, for she gave less to the images than she had vowed. Thus money is worshipped still by thousands, though not in the form of the molten image. Teraphim were carved images in human form. The whole transaction was a violation of the second commandment, and indicated the swift retrogression of the people (Josh. xxiv. 31). It is a fatal mistake, when we conceive of God as such an one as ourselves!

(2) Priest-making (7—13).—This Levite had no right to the priesthood, or Micah to consecrate him. But there is a strong tendency among men to manufacture their own priests, and to suppose that things must go well when they have their presence and blessing. But a religion which man invents will not suffice him in the sight of God, and will some day desert him, as we shall see. He alone is the true Priest of souls who has been set apart to the work by the hand of God Himself (Heb. ii. 17).

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 2.—Judges XVIII.

Sin is sporadic. It spreads from an individual to a household, and from a household to a tribe. This is taught us here. This incident is also referred to in the Book of Joshua (xix. 47). There was no harm in seeking an enlarged territory, but there was much sin in carrying idolatry into that distant settlement. How necessary is it that our emigrants and colonists should take true religion with them! It was in Dan, then, Jeroboam was easily able to erect one of his calves (1 Kings xii. 29).

(1) The Danite scouts (1—10).—There is in all hearts a longing desire to have a consciousness of God's good speed. The Italian bandit seeks a blessing on some proposed crime. And so it was with these five men. But in this case, what was right in intention was wrongly executed (Hos. iv. 12). Are we not too prone to ask whether our way shall prosper, after we have decided upon it? It would be better to do so before starting. And often enough, as here, God answers us according to our own heart's lusts (1 Kings xxii. 15). When we have already settled our course, we are permitted to take it. The warning voice speaks in the conscience, but, being unheeded, waxes dumb. These men of Laish belonged to the Canaanites, and seem to have been more vile and depraved than most (7).

(2) Micah's spoliation (11—26).—What folly on the part of the Danites to suppose that they could be helped by gods, who could not keep themselves from being stolen, or protect the house of their proprietor (Ps. cxv. 8)! The priest had come to Micah for pelf, and left him at the first opportunity of preferment. How careful should Christians be to guard against the first intrusion of gain or ambition into their service for God. Let us leave this to the hirelings (John x. 13).

(3) The capture of Laish (27—31).—We cannot but turn with a sense of horror at these acts of wholesale extermination. The conscience which is trained in the school of Christ becomes very tender and sensitive, and rightly so. But the considerations which weigh with us could not have been appreciated in those rude times. More elementary lessons needed teaching and enforcement. Impurity had to be stamped out; the worship of the one God established; though the means by which these results were accomplished were more in keeping with the customs of those days than with our Christian sensibilities. Remember that God did not legislate too far in advance of the people's condition; and that the Book of Judges is a long way behind in the education of the world. The reference to the captivity of the land (30) was probably inserted by Ezra, or some other reviser of the sacred text in Ezra's days.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3.—Judges XIX.

This and the following chapters are very terrible, and fill us with horror. Yet God the Holy Spirit has permitted them to be inserted in this book for some wise purpose; and this in a book which has done more than any other to instil purity into the hearts of men. The revulsion which we feel in reading these records is itself the result of centuries of teaching from the very book which contains them. God knew that the great ends which He had in view would be best served by tearing the veil from off the heart of man, and permitting its vileness and corruptness to be fully known.

Let every reader of these awful details know that each of us carries in the inner nature the seed germs of the very same abominations, which would break into similar manifestation, if it were not for the restraining grace of God. The Bible thus holds the mirror up before human nature, showing us what is in our heart, before it reveals in our Saviour that image to the likeness of which we are to be conformed (Rom. viii. 29).

If you are standing near Christ, with your hand locked in his, it will not harm you to look over the beetling precipice into these seething depths. But if it be not so with you, pass over this record until your soul has become pure with a purity which turns from sin to Christ, with the shame that filled his holy soul in the days of his flesh, and made Him stoop to the ground (John viii. 6).

Many interesting lessons are taught of the manners of the times. Unhappily, drunkenness was already invading the homes of the people (5—9). The surprise at the withholding of hospitality shows how general it was to entertain strangers in those simple old-world days (11—15). The conversation with the old man reminds us how often the most generous feelings reveal themselves in the most unlikely quarters (16—21). We are reminded of a similar scene at the gates of Sodom; but there were no angels here to stay the deeds of violence. Alas! that the redeemed people of the Lord had sunk to so low a depth (1 Cor. vi. 9, 10, 11).

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 4.—Judges XX.

The Levite's appeal to Israel had an immediate effect. We are reminded of Saul's appeal (1 Sam. xi. 7), and of the Fiery Cross in more recent times. Mizpeh had become the sacred rallying-place of the people, in consequence of its commanding elevation and proximity to the Tabernacle (1 Sam. vii. 5—17).

(1) A judicial inquiry was instituted (3—7), which issued in the unanimous determination to avenge the tragedy which had filled all hearts with horror. It is a solemn spectacle to behold a people animated with righteous indignation against sin; but how much easier is it to assume the judicial functions toward others than to be critical of ourselves, and to remove all complicity with evil from our own skirts (Matt vii. 1—5).

(2) Benjamin refused the opportunity of disavowing the perpetrators of the crime (12—14).—This made the whole tribe accessory to the deed, and therefore liable to the punishment.

(3) The double defeat (17, &c.).—It is at first difficult to understand why, in so good a cause, Israel met with repeated failure; but it is to be explained by remembering that the people were very confident in their own goodness and numbers, precipitate in their action, and more ready to act as judges than as fellow penitents for their own sins, and for this. Do we not often fail, though our cause be good, and though we may have made it a matter of prayer, because we are not free from those same evils from which we propose to save others? In ver. 26 we have the true attitude which precedes success.

(4) The terrible victory (30, &c.).—This was a fearful act of vengeance; for though there is reason to believe that many errors have crept into the transcription of numbers in the sacred text, yet the next chapter shows that Benjamin was practically exterminated. This incident is spoken of afterwards as the beginning of Israel's corruption, and a pattern of much after sin (Hos. ix. 9, x. 9).

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 5.—Judges XXI.

Here is another chapter of tragedy and violence. How little had Israel learnt of the character of God! What a vast chasm between this and the Sermon on the Mount! Here, surely, is a picture of man, when in his own energy he tries to be religious, and fails egregiously. We have to guard as much against our good selves, as against our bad selves. Human passion is as much to be feared, when enlisted in the cause of God, as when pledged against it. These acts were not the result of God's teachings, but in spite of them. They did not emanate from his Spirit, but from the lack of it, though they sought to throw the responsibility on Him (15).

(1) Israel's lamentation for Benjamin (1—7). Those that act in haste repent at leisure. What a mistake it is to bind ourselves by a rash vow. It would have been better to violate the vow, than to keep it by a resort to such terrible acts as the massacre at Jabesh-Gilead, and the absurd artifice of the closing verses. Poor human nature! Who shall dare to vaunt its superior virtues?

(2) The sack of Jabesh-Gilead (9—14). It would have been better to turn their attention to the Canaanites still in the land (xix. 11, 12). But we are all more disposed to fall on our brethren, than to join forces with them against a common foe.

(3) The artifice of the dances at Shiloh (15—23). What an indescribable admixture there is here of a recognised religious worship, and its profanation, keeping a vow in outward form, whilst violating its tenour and spirit. Bishop Hall remarks that ambushes of evil spirits carry away many a soul from dances to a fearful desolation.

There was an air of satisfaction in the return of the people to their homes (24). But we need to correct our self-estimate by the balances of eternity. And there could not be settled prosperity or peace till the true king came.

THE BOOK OF RUTH.

This short book forms an appendix to the Book of Judges, with which it is obviously connected by the Hebrew word translated "Now." It also serves as an introduction to much which follows, in showing how Ruth, the Moabitess, became the wife of Boaz, and an ancestor of David and of our Lord.

Perhaps it was written by Samuel; and it is a pleasant contrast to the more stormy and terrible episodes which we have been considering. It is like a smiling dale enclosed in gaunt and forbidding hills; or an idyll amid the storm of a tragedy. Amid all the deeds of violence and crime, of foreign inroads and domestic broils, which kept the nation in a constant condition of unrest between the days of Joshua and those of Samuel, it is evident that there were many devout souls like Boaz, who maintained the loftiest traditions of patriarchal piety; and many homes, hidden in smiling pastoral valleys, where faith, endurance, humility, industry, and love, dwelt in exquisite and unsullied beauty.

There is also interesting dispensational truth in these chapters, which foreshadow how the Gentile Church may enter into that union with the true Bridegroom of souls; and how the purposes of God reach over the limits of the chosen people to bless and enrich all individual souls that truly love and seek Him.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 6.—Ruth I.

These names tell a story: Elimelech, my God is King; Naomi, pleasant or comely. They tell of a religious life, and of the beauty of the young bride led to her new village home. Mahlon, pining; Chilion, consumption. They attest the inroad of want and famine, with the natural result of weakly constitutions and broken health. This famine was probably caused by sin (Lev. xxvi. 19, 20).

(1) The emigration (1—5).—Surely this was through want of faith. Elimelech belied his name. When parents move into worldly circles, away from the ordinances of God's house, with an eye to worldly gain. they must not be surprised if their children make worldly alliances. The expedition ended in disaster. The death from which they fled overtook them in the land of their adoption. The Chaldee intimates that their days were shortened, because they had transgressed the law in marrying strange wives.

(2) The return (6, &c.).—Naomi's sorrows had broken the ties which held her to Moab. Such is the explanation of many of those calamities which befall the children of God. They are away from home, and must be driven back. Orpah and Ruth

(the rose) clung to her and accompanied her; the one from motives of mere natural affection, the other from evident religious principle (16).

(3) The separation (14, &c.).—Born in the same village, betrothed and married on the same day, bound up in the same family life, companions on the road to Bethlehem; there their fellowship ceased. The one went back to her gods and obscurity; the other forward to Jehovah's worship and an honourable connection with Jewish story (Luke xvii. 33). Ah, what partings there are at the cross-roads of life!

(4) The welcome back (14, &c.).—Nothing can so support us in sorrow as human love and sympathy, and the consciousness that under all secondary causes there is the purpose and hand of the Almighty Himself, dealing with us (John xviii. 11). Barley harvest began in April.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 7.—Ruth II.

Boaz signifies "strength," and he was a man of wealth.

(1) Ruth, the gleaner (1—3).—The noblest natures are noble in the homeliest things. Those who are faithful in least, approve themselves worthy of being promoted to be faithful in much. Imitate Ruth, by doing the next thing that lies to your hand, and you will be probably promoted to a wider sphere. We must die in little acts of self-denial before we can bring forth much fruit. It is not in seeking great things for ourselves, but in doing little acts of service for those near to us, that we commend ourselves for usefulness and blessedness. How often do we begin by working for Christ, before we come to appreciate our marriage union with Him.

(2) Boaz, the master (4—17).—Would that language like this was more frequently heard in harvest-fields and factories! The speech of the employed is generally an echo of that of the employer (4). We should beware, however, of degenerating into a formality which speaks God's name thoughtlessly. How much good might we do, if we were more careful to notice those who serve us, and speak kindly to servant-girls. Little acts and words of kindness do not cost much, but they mean much to a lonely soul (Matt. xxv. 40). Note the significant synonym for trust (12, and Ps. lxiii. 7; Matt. xxiii. 37).

(3) Naomi, the anxious mother (18—23).—How gladdened were those aged eyes with the four pecks of barley, and with the reserves from the mid-day meal. We ought to bring home from every service the reserves of what we have heard (18). Man's kindness will sometimes soften a hard and weary heart, and enable it again to believe in the love of God (20). An over-ruling providence had guided the young stranger to the field of a kinsman, though she knew it not (20). God remembers the prayers of the dead long after they have been offered, and answers them by mysterious providences, which show the eternal permanence and stedfastness of his love (Isa. liv. 8, 9; Rom. xi. 28).

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN, who is still busy lecturing in Australia, recently received from Jerusalem a remarkable letter, thanking her for the services which she has rendered in enlightening Western nations about Oriental life. The letter is signed and sealed by the Greek bishop, and the civil and ecclesiastical judges of Jerusalem, the cadi and chief sheikh of Damascus, several Bedouin chieftains, and others.

SURREY.—We removed to our new "Home of Rest" in March last. Here we find some grand openings of usefulness in surrounding villages. The cottagers, and even the beer-sellers, are exceedingly kind to us, in their gifts of fruit and vegetables. In April we opened as a Mission-room a Baptist chapel that had been closed over two years. It was nicely furnished, and offered unfettered by the freeholder clear of rent and expenses, if visitors to the "Home of Rest" would give their services. In May we commenced an open-air meeting at Knapphill. The good clergyman and others joined us. The Sunday evening united open-air services have been continued from that time, with steady congregations of 250 to 300, and not without some signs of blessing. Knapphill, a mile from us, is the nearest village to the "new Wimbledon." Two thousand soldiers are already encamped on Bushey Common. Farmers are fitting up barns for Gospel work. One had a congregation last Sunday, but no preacher. If we had a horse and cart to carry our portable harmonium, and stock of Bibles, we might carry the light of the Gospel into many a village of West Surrey.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, September 8.

David and Jonathan.—1 Sam. xx. 1—13.

Golden Text: Prov. xviii. 24.

David's victory over Goliath won for him two very opposite things—the envy of Saul, and the friendship of Jonathan. From the first he has already suffered much. As God continued to prosper him Saul's envy increased, and in several ways he has sought David's life (xviii. 10, 11, and xix. 10). But the genuine nature of Jonathan's love has also been revealed. The incident of xviii. 1—4, when the friendship began, and Jonathan's intercession for David in xix. 4—7, have proved him to be a friend indeed. How graciously God mingled consolation with trial! From this time David never ceased to suffer from Saul's envy, until both Saul and Jonathan were slain on Gilboa; but he was constantly sustained and helped by the unchanging friendship of Jonathan. Both had their part in training him for his after-work. Qualities of no mean order would be required in Israel's future king; these could not be developed apart from trial.

It would be wise not to confine this lesson to the verses chosen, but to include all that is recorded of the friendship between these two. Let the subject be—True friendship, as illustrated by David and Jonathan; and let the aim be to lead the scholars to cultivate friendships of a similarly helpful and ennobling character. Our notes upon the verses need only be brief.

Ver. 1—4.—"Naioth"= the house of instruction. Probably "the dwellings of a school of prophets over which Samuel presided." While David had remained here with Samuel, Saul made several futile attempts to take him (xix. 19—24). Distinguish between the Spirit of God as He came upon Saul, and the Spirit in a man for salvation. In the Old Testament the first was often experienced by men who did not know the second. "What have I done?" &c.—David, free from the cruel spirit of envy himself, cannot understand why Saul should wish to kill him. "My father doeth nothing," &c. (2). Incidentally we learn what confidence Saul placed in Jonathan. But David had a truer estimate of his danger. Saul had prudent reasons for concealing his evil purpose from Jonathan. Except God had been David's defence there was "only a step between him and death" (3). "Whatsoever thy soul desireth," &c. (4).—Thus Jonathan expressed his readiness to serve his friend.

Ver. 5—10.—Here David discloses his plan. The feast of the new moon would be held on the following day (Numb. x. 10, xxviii. 11). David would not be present, but would hide himself in the field until the feast was over. Jonathan was to explain his absence by saying that he had gone to the yearly sacrifice at Bethlehem. Probably it was at such a sacrifice that Samuel had anointed David (xvi. 2—5). The way in which Saul received this excuse would show what he intended towards David (7). There is no need to defend this crooked policy. Such pieces of deception seem to have been common in those days. More than once did David save his life by dissembling (xxi. 13—15). Though a man of God, he was evidently not perfect.

Ver. 11—13.—Out in the field Jonathan solemnly binds himself to do as David desires. Note also how he anticipates David's future triumph, and claims from him the kindness of the Lord to his house after he himself is dead. Evidently he had learned that spirit which "in honour prefers" another. The close of the chapter tells the result of David's scheme. Saul, missing him the second day, and hearing Jonathan's excuse, becomes furious, and even seeks his son's life (30—34). The sign agreed upon was given (20—22, with 35—39); but the two friends found an opportunity afterwards to take an affectionate farewell. In deepest grief they parted (41, 42), only to meet once again, when Jonathan, by his words of council and cheer, strengthened the hand of David in a time of sore trial (xxiii. 16—18).

Among the many characteristics of this beautiful friendship note the following:—

(1) It was the friendship of two men of God. The covenant into which they entered at the first (xviii. 3, 4) is called by David "a covenant of the Lord" (xx. 8). Each solemnly invoked the name of God (12, 16, 17). It was not a friendship from which God was excluded. Should not this be the first condition upon which friendships should be formed? Social position; fascinating manners; mere similarity of taste—these are not sufficient. Our friendships should be "in the Lord" (Ps. cxix. 63; 2 Cor. vi. 14—18).

(2) It was unselfish.—This was manifest in Jonathan's readiness to surrender the crown for David, and in enduring his father's displeasure for David's sake. In David's lamentation over Saul and Jonathan (2 Sam. i. 18—27), the same spirit appears. True, he had gained a crown, but he had lost a friend; and his grief for the death of Jonathan was greater than his joy in possessing the crown. Selfishness destroys friendship. Only the love that gives itself away can win and retain true friends.

(3) It was strengthened by mutual service.—Friendship has its obligations. Jonathan discharged his in his frequent efforts to save David; and David was equally faithful in twice sparing the life of Saul, and in showing kindness to Jonathan's house (2 Sam. ix. 1).

(4) It was constant.—David had known false friends (Ps. lv. 12—14), so that he could place a higher value upon one so true. Changes in his circumstances never changed Jonathan's attachment to him.

(5) It was mutually helpful.—How it helped Jonathan! Contrast him with Saul, who is possessed of the spirit of envy and hatred. These cruel passions did more injury to himself than to David. But David's friendship kept Jonathan from entering into his father's purpose against him.

(6) It furnished a beautiful illustration of the friendship existing between Christ and his people.—His love to us is even more wonderful than Jonathan's to David. We were less worthy of it; He endured more—far more, on our behalf; we more frequently tried his love, yet it remains unchangeable.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Col. Byrd, of Virginia, fell into the hands of the Cherokees, and was condemned to death. In the tribe was a man that had before been his friend. At the moment of the executioners, he threw himself upon the intended victim and said, "This is my friend; before you can get at him you must kill me." Thus he saved him. See John xv. 13.

When President Edwards came to die, his last words, after bidding his relations good-bye, were, "Now, where is Jesus of Nazareth, my true and never failing Friend?" So saying, he fell asleep. See John xiii. 1.

"A MINISTER'S REQUEST."—More friends have kindly offered to send their copies of The Christian, after reading it, than we have, so far, been able to supply names for. We shall, therefore, be glad to receive the names of Christian workers who, being unable to obtain the paper themselves, would like to have a copy sent regularly to them a few days after publication.

SELF-DENIAL.—General Booth has appointed the week beginning September 29, and ending October 5, as a week of self-denial among members of the Salvation Army all over the world, in order that the savings which result from this term of self-abnegation may be devoted to the work of the Army. In a letter addressed to Salvationists and their supporters, he remarks, "Last year's self-denial campaign was a triumph beyond all question," and claims amongst the givers "publicans, roughs, rowdies, and the police." "Henceforth," he says, "we shall have a yearly self-denial week. We are led up to this by sheer necessity. With the extension of our battlefield the need for special financial support becomes greater every day."

FUNERAL REFORM.—Rev. F. Lawrence, of Westow Vicarage, York, hon. secretary of the Church of England Burial Reform Association, writing with reference to the overcrowding of many of our cemeteries, says:—"Once let it be known that proper respect for the dead, and due regard for the living, require that the natural process of decomposition be aided and developed, rather than hindered, as at present, and the battle of reform is won. Instead of keeping the body as long as possible, and then storing it up in a durable coffin, the interment will take place as soon as signs of dissolution appear, in a coffin of readily-perishable compressed pulp, or the like; and if the presence of infectious germs be suspected, some chemical compound will be placed in the coffin, and properly-prepared earth in the grave. In burials on the earth-to-earth principle, with nothing unduly to retard dissolution, the body is resolved and re-distributed inoffensively in a few years, leaving the earth ready to perform its friendly action again. Moreover, such burial is that which can alone materially lessen funeral expenses."

Rev. W. F. Harris, of Derby, preaching at Woodberry Down Chapel, N., on Sunday week, said that after working in a town teeming with working men, and being brought into close contact with them, he could testify that comparatively few among those who are ordinarily absent from public worship are atheists. On the other hand, among professing Christians there are too many who show themselves atheists in life and practice.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Dr. Cuyler says that Presbyterianism has never been as strong in London as now.

Rev. John McNeill preached on Sunday last at the Presbyterian Church, Hastings; he has been spending a part of his vacation at that favourite seaside resort.

An eight days' mission has been held at the Presbyterian Church, Lewes, Sussex. The services—both in and out of doors—during the week were very successful, and on nearly every occasion the congregations were good. The services were conducted by Mr. Robert Stark. Amongst the subjects Mr. Stark spoke on were —"The four great Beholds," "What think ye of Christ?" "Who is on the Lord's side?" "Confessing Christ," and "Why am I an abstainer?"

A correspondent of The Ross-shire Journal writes respecting the summer communion at Creich, N.B. The ceremony to southern eyes was a most impressive one, and the spot selected for the meeting beautifully situated. At the foot of a heather-clad hillside stood the pulpit, and in front a rising amphitheatre crowded with country people whose conduct was decorous and fitting the solemn celebration. No gathering in the Highlands—funerals excepted—so strongly impresses a stranger as this outdoor meeting—the "men" of dignified and solemn mien, the spotlessly white tablecloth surrounded by officers of the Free Church—all good men and true—celebrating an event which to them is of the highest importance.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Successful Gospel services were held last week in High-street Methodist Church, Lurgan, by Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell, of America.

Rev. Dr. Potts, of Canada, well known as an able preacher, is at present in Ireland, and has been addressing meetings in Dublin and elsewhere.

A largely attended and very excellent Convention has just been held in the Methodist Church, Manorhamilton, at which helpful addresses on "Holiness," "Sunday-schools," "Soul Saving," and "Temperance," were delivered.

The weather during the past fortnight has been most unfavourable for tent work, the great storms of wind and rain not only interfering with the attendance, but proving very injurious to the tents themselves. The tent at Derryall, near Portadown, was blown down twice, and several of the other Gospel tents were more or less injured.

There is just now considerable stir and effort in Methodist circles preparing for the winter's campaign. Rev. Thomas Cook, British Conference evangelist, is to hold an eight days' mission in Newry early in September; Rev. Thomas Waugh, British Conference evangelist, and Rev. S. F. Collier, of the Manchester Mission, are to take part in the public inauguration of the Belfast City Mission on October 9; a two days' convention is to be held at Clones the first week in December; the question of colportage is being earnestly taken up; and arrangements are being made for holding a series of evangelistic services in every circuit in the kingdom during the next few months.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Rev. C. A. Salmond, of Rothesay, has declined the call from the South Morningside Free Church, Edinburgh.

Rev. James Durran, of London, in a powerful address at Bower, near Wick, the other day, rebuked the silent Christianity of our day; it must be ascribed, he said, to the fact of there being so many cold and empty-hearted Christians.

Wellington U.P. Church, Glasgow, carries on extensive mission work in Cranston-hill—a needy portion of the town. Owing to alleged noisiness on the part of the children, the workers received notice to leave. No other suitable premises were to be had. The superintendent and his worthy assistants were sore-hearted and despairing. But to their relief came Mr. Alexander Allan, the philanthropic owner of the Allan Line of Steamships. He is now erecting for them a plain but commodious and well-planned building, to cost £6500.

A memoir of Miss Helen Chalmers (daughter of the late Dr. Thomas Chalmers), who died in October, 1887, has been published by the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland, Edinburgh. Miss Chalmers was for many years a very active evangelistic worker among the poor of Edinburgh, by whom she is affectionately remembered.

Last Friday week the body of Rev. Anthony Yeoman was found in the old Whitshells Wood, about a mile from Langholm. Deceased, who was about seventy years of age, had gone out for a walk in the forenoon, and, not returning, an alarm was raised, and searchers sent out. He had apparently fallen down ill, and been suffocated. He was a minister of the Free Church, and was for many years a missionary in the Falkland Islands.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Munterconnaught, Rev. Joseph King, an earnest minister of the Irish Protestant Episcopal Church.—Rev. Samuel Beal, D.C.L., the distinguished Oriental scholar, and Professor of Chinese in the London University.—On August 13, Mr. W. W. Morley, one of the two surviving brothers of the late Mr. Samuel Morley, at Eastbourne, in his eighty-first year.—Rev. Jarvis D. Valentine, of Shou-hing, Fuh-Kien province, since 1863 a missionary of the C.M.S. in China.—Mrs. Rebsch, wife of Rev. Wm. Rebsch, for many years an honoured missionary of the C.M.S. at Kotgarh, in the Punjaub.—Rev. H. W. Sanders, curate of St. Nicholas, Nottingham.—Rev. B. Slight, an aged retired Congregational minister, residing at Forest-row, Sussex.—Mrs. Paterson, wife of Rev. C. A. Paterson, Church of Scotland missionary at Madras, India.—Mr. John Tod, an elder in Buccleuch-street U.P. Church, Edinburgh.—Rev. J. M. Houston, late pastor of the London-street Baptist Church, Southport.—Mr. R. A. Williamson, a devoted Christian worker at Calcutta, the third of the five sons of Rev. James Williamson, a missionary who laboured for forty-one years at Soory, Beerbohm, Bengal.—Rev. T. Briarly Browne, rector of East Acklam, Yorkshire.—Rev. Alex. M'Whannel, late parish minister of Sauchie, N.B.—Miss S. A. Jones, for some years an active Christian worker connected with King-street Baptist Church, Oldham.—Rev. James Povey Sunderland, formerly a missionary in Samoa, and for the last twenty years Sydney agent of the London Missionary Society.—Mr. James Watson Windshaw, senior elder of the Presbyterian Church, Pendleton, Lancashire.—Mrs. Rudisill, wife of Rev. A. W. Rudisill, D.D., missionary of the American Methodist Episcopal Church at Madras.—Rev. Moses Philpin, who formerly held the pastorate of the Baptist Church at Alcester, Warwickshire, for several years.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

BERLIN.—Churches are fewer in proportion to population than perhaps in any other city. There are not more than seventy in all Berlin of every denomination. The present Emperor is said, like his father, greatly to favour the building of fresh churches.

DENMARK.—A novel method has been adopted by the Danish police with a view to putting an end to drunkenness. Every time a man is found in a state of intoxication in the streets or in a public place, he is, at the instance of the police, put into a carriage and taken home. In case a man is not able to give information as to residence, he is kept at the police station until sober. Then the publican who is convicted of supplying such a man with his final glass of drink is charged with the expenses of transport, which are sometimes very considerable.

BELGIUM.—The Belgian Christian Missionary Church has 27 churches and stations, with 50 places regularly evangelised, 38 Sunday-schools, and 17 mission schools, 22 pastors, 4 evangelists, 7 Scripture-readers, and 5 colporteurs. During last year 7850 meetings were held, and 215,500 tracts distributed. The membership shows a steady increase alike in the towns and villages. These latter are penetrated by the colporteurs, who prepare the way for the evangelists, as the latter, in turn, are instrumental in bringing into requisition pastors to care for the spiritual needs of rising young churches.

CALCUTTA swarms with a vast population of foreigners of all nations. A good Christian layman—Mr. E. S. Wenger—son of a famous missionary, has planned a polyglot mission to these foreign peoples. Right in the heart of the most miserable dens in the city he managed to secure an old opium den. He turned it into a mission-room for the Chinese, of whom quite a colony exists in the neighbourhood. Already sixteen Chinamen have been baptized, and as many more are candidates for baptism. Burmese, Arabs, Bagdad Jews, Hindustanis, and Bengalis, and many other nationalities are also reached by Mr. Wenger's Mission.

BOHEMIA.—The "Young Czechs" (the Radical party in Bohemia) have made up their minds to erect a monument in memory of John Huss. Some Catholics, admirers of the national hero, have endeavoured to secure from the Roman Curia a modification of the law as to heresy laid down by the Council of Constance; but, as might be expected, the Pope has refused to make any relaxation. All the same, the illustrious precursor of the Reformation will have his monument at Prachstitz. Already his memory is perpetuated at Constance by a stone set up on the spot where he was burned on July 6, 1415. His statue is also, with that of Wycliff, Valdo, and Savonarolo, on the large monument at Worms.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The Hospital warns sea-goers who wish to avoid seasickness to beware of "the parting glass."

Mrs. Leavitt has addressed a series of meetings in Scotland under the auspices of the Women's Temperance Prayer Union.

Joyful News publishes capital cartoons showing the evils of drink. "The Stinging Adder" in a recent number is a good specimen.

The sixteenth annual report of the London Temperance Hospital (1889) gives further most conclusive evidence that alcohol is not necessary in the treatment of disease.

Mr. J. Matson has been engaged as agent for the Leicester Temperance Society, of which Mr. Thomas Cook, the veteran teetotaler and tourist caterer, is president.

Dr. Dawson Burns urges the wide distribution of Dr. Burrough's paper in The Lancet on "A Substitute for Alcohol in Cases of Emergency." It is published at 1d., National Temperance Publication Depôt, 33, Paternoster-row, London.

Dr. Meacham, in his annual report of the Manchester Medical Mission, gives terrible illustrations of the evils of drink. Some of his friends, he says, think him "rather hard upon this matter," but he replies, "God is my judge, not my friends." Seeing what he does, he is compelled to speak out.

The British Women's Temperance Association, Glasgow, during the Fair entertained to tea about three hundred travelling showmen and their families. The gathering was picturesque, and had many points of interest. Mrs. Archibald Campbell sang a solo, and earnest Gospel addresses followed.

"Uneasy lies the head" just now that owns many shares in the big brewery limiteds. Allsopp's promised a probable 15 cent. The hard fact is at present only 5 per cent. Worse still—that is for the shareholders—it is said on good authority that the firm cannot get orders enough for full work. When breweries fail, the working man will have begun to see better times.—Methodist Recorder.

A correspondent, describing a recent visit to Ireland, says:—"In one little town we stopped at, with about 3500 inhabitants, the station-master told us there were 73 shops where whisky was sold, not all public-houses, but grocers' shops, &c. How can a country get on like this? Last year all the rents paid for rural lands put together amounted to £12,500,000, and Ireland's drink bill for the same year was £11,250,000. Poor Ireland!"

FOREIGN.

In Kansas three years ago fifty newspapers opposed prohibition; now all are in favour of it.

Mrs. Leavitt denies a statement made by The Echo that Germany is responsible for the liquor trade in Madagascar. She asserts that the blame rests with England and France.

The New Zealand Education Department having sanctioned the use of Dr. Richardson's temperance lesson book in schools, the adoption of the book was made a test question by the Auckland Board at the annual election of school committees. In every case but two the result was in favour of the friends of temperance.

M. Cauderlier, General Secretary Belgian League against Alcoholism, does not admit that the decrease of drink-shops will decrease intemperance. At the International Congress on Alcohol just held at Paris he cited Holland, where, in spite of a considerable reduction in drink-shops, the total consumption of drink remained the same.

The Melbourne Grand Hotel, which, when a liquor-shop, was a losing concern, has been paying a fair dividend as a coffee-palace. The Prahran Home and Coffee-palace Company has just declared a dividend of 12½ per cent. All the new enterprises of this nature in Melbourne appear, says the Melbourne Spectator, to be doing well.

Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

VINEGAR should be VINEGAR.

MOORE'S MALTINE VINEGAR

FOR FAMILY USE.

In FIVE-GALLON SEALED BARRELS DIRECT from the BREWERY.

SPECIALLY PREPARED FOR PICKLING, SALADS, AND THE TABLE.

The Public are respectfully requested to see that the Barrels are delivered to them with the Seals intact.

MOORE'S MALTINE VINEGAR is guaranteed free from all Adulterants, and to be the highest class of True Grain Vinegar, of full strength, in its natural purity, untampered with. It is brewed in the same manner as beer, the whole of the sugar and alcohol in the grain being transformed into the finest vegetable acid, producing the purest form of Vinegar known. After maturing for upwards of twelve months in enormous vats, of 80,000 gallons each, it is sent out in Sealed Barrels, which are filled fresh from the vats the same day as ordered.

MOORE'S MALTINE VINEGAR improves the longer it is kept. There is therefore a great economy in buying even so small a quantity as a 5-gallon barrel. The ordinary Vinegars of commerce will not keep, and where adulteration exists, they speedily become putrid.

Barrels of MOORE'S MALTINE VINEGAR can be ordered through any Grocer, or Italian Warehouseman, and will be delivered Free, Sealed, direct from the Brewery. Price, including Barrel and Patent Tap, Half-a-Guinea. Empty Barrels are re-filled at the Brewery and re-sealed for 8s. 6d.

If any difficulty is experienced in obtaining MOORE'S MALTINE VINEGAR (which is supplied only in Sealed Barrels), a Post-card to the MANAGER of the MIDLAND VINEGAR COMPANY, ASTON CROSS, BIRMINGHAM, will bring the name of the nearest Retailer by return, or if preferred a Sample Barrel will be sent direct from the Brewery, CARRIAGE PAID, for 10s. 6d.

A New Invention. Changes Colour and Develops Ozone in Water.

Patent Rights protected throughout the World.

SALT REGAL

SALT REGAL is quite distinct from, and superior to, all other effervescing Salines, and occasional use does not lead to habitual requirement. It is a new preparation, and purifies the system without violently purging. It does not irritate the mucous membrane, nor cause any unpleasant after effects. It assists nature to restore the bodily functions to their normal healthy condition, and, unlike most other salines, it contains no injurious ingredient whatever, while the highest medical authorities approve of its use.

A Sample Bottle will be sent, Free of Cost, to any Medical Practitioner on receipt of his professional address.

Extract from Professor NORMAN TATE'S Report:—

"There is an element in this compound not found in other compounded effervescent Salines that I have examined. The ingredients used are free from impurities and injurious substances."

Dr. GLENCROSS says:—

"Pleasant and easily retained. I think it will prove a great favourite."

Dr. SODEN says:—

"It is particularly adaptable in the cases of children."

SALT REGAL is sold in large bottles (hermetically sealed), price 2s. 9d., and in half-size bottles, 1s. 6d. It cannot be imitated, and stands alone. Be careful to observe, Salt Regal is a delicate white powder, but it turns the water to a beautiful Rose Pink; unless it does this it is not genuine, and its sale should be at once reported to the Secretary of the Salt Regal Co. A real Royal Patent—Not a Patent Medicine. Patent Rights Protected in every civilised country. All London and Provincial Wholesale Houses regularly stock it.

PULVERMACHER'S WORLD-FAMED GALVANIC BELTS, for the cure of NERVOUS DISEASES, have received Testimonials from three Physicians to Her Majesty the Queen and the leading Physicians of Nine London Hospitals, including Forty Members of the Royal College of Physicians of London.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, Loss of MUSCULAR POWER, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, PARALYSIS, EPILEPSY, &c., are speedily removed by means of Pulvermacher's World-famed Galvanic Belts, which convey the electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of premature waste and decay.

Dr. C. HANDFIELD JONES, F.R.C.P., F.R.S., Physician to St. Mary's Hospital, says: "I am satisfied that Mr. PULVERMACHER is an honest and earnest labourer in the field of science, and I think he deserves to meet with every encouragement from the profession and scientific men."

Dr. H. A. ALLBUTT, M.R.C.P., 24, Park Square, Leeds, writes, October, 1888: "I always recommend with confidence Mr. PULVERMACHER'S BELTS. Ladies recovering from illness incidental to their sex will find these BELTS of vast assistance in restoring lost nerve power."

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE PRONOUNCED INCURABLE.—
LETTER from MR. HARTNOLL, NEWQUAY, CORNWALL.

This patient, who is proprietor of the "Newquay Guardian," and well known in the town, applied to me first in '85, when his case had been given up as hopeless. He continued under my treatment all through 1886, and to the spring of the following year. After that time he resumed business, having realised a perfect cure.

[I mention this case because I have recently received the following letter from him, and because it is one of the many evidences of that Permanence of Cure which is the general result of my treatment when recovery takes place and the patient wisely continues the treatment so long as to make sure (humanly speaking) that he is all right.]

This patient has just written me (March 7th), saying—"I am thankful to be able to bear testimony to the great efficacy of your treatment. It was 3½ years ago I put myself under you, having been given up as incurable by our local doctors, and I am now as well as ever, and can take my full share of work again."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Miss Sarah Robinson, Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth,

is now completing her Scheme for the benefit of Soldiers, Sailors, their Families, Widows, and Orphans, and the poor of Portsmouth, by the erection of a large Gospel Hall and Coffee Palace (with 170 beds), opposite the Portsmouth Town Railway Station, at a cost of £30,000, including site. This is her fifth, and last, House; will be self-supporting; and, like the others, will be vested in Trustees.

Having no family claims and few personal wants, Miss Robinson has always freely spent her own money on these Institutions, besides collecting the needful funds. She is now making a great effort, at the cost of much personal suffering, to obtain help for the new building. After being confined to the house for eight years, she is undertaking a three-months' tour, by road, in an invalid's coach, built for the purpose, intending (D.V.) to travel a thousand miles, and address meetings in fifty towns, after which she will publish a full account of her journey and its results. She travels at her own expense, accompanied by one helper.

Small 8vo., 16 pages. Suitable for either Giving or Lending.

The same pointed style of speech, the same "hard hitting," the same directness of appeal, will be found in these Tracts, as were so manifest in MR. MOODY'S Platform Addresses. There are very many passages in these Tractates that will make the ears tingle, and force conviction to the conscience as powerfully and as effectually as the most stirring utterances from pulpit or from platform.

CHRIST ALL IN ALL.

PLAIN WORDS ON CONVERSION

"There is a class who are afraid that they won't hold out. God can do what He has done before. He kept Joseph in Egypt; Moses before Pharaoh; and Daniel in Babylon. They were men of like passions to ourselves; it was God who made them so great. What man wants to do is to look to God."—Extract.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Dr. S. O. Habershon.

In our next issue we purpose giving the first of a series of expository papers on the First Epistle of Peter, by Rev. F. B. Meyer.

A reader of the Autobiography of "John G. Paton, Missionary," has generously forwarded to Rev. Jas. Paton, of Glasgow, the editor, the sum of £100, to be sent to his brother, to be expended on missions as the missionary may think best.

The appeal on a subsequent page, by that whole-souled friend of the deep sea fishermen, Mr. E. J. Mather, is one that well deserves to be generously responded to. Common gratitude to these men for their "brave daring" in reaping for us landsmen the harvest of the stormy sea, ought of itself to secure the desired end. In view of the high moral and spiritual service he has rendered to the fishermen, Mr. Mather has an additional claim on the sympathy of his fellow Christians in this laudable effort.

We had hoped in this issue to chronicle the termination of the strike among the London riverside labourers, but at the moment of writing the quarrel remains unadjusted. The strike has now lasted three weeks. It must be admitted that the workless and wageless men have shown great patience and self-control in the face of terrible difficulty, with want staring them in the face. This has resulted, no doubt, from a conviction of the justice of their cause, and from the wide-spread public sympathy that has been accorded to them in the unequal struggle. Press and people, at home and abroad, have proclaimed with great unanimity that this battle for bread is a righteous one, and that the moderate demands of the toilers ought to be conceded by their employers.

The shipowners and wharfingers have largely recognised this, and the Dock Directors seem to be alone in the refusal to come to terms. The selfish callousness they have shown has deprived them of public approval, and their unbending attitude makes the prospect of a speedy settlement more distant. We cannot but think, however, that they will have to yield to the pressure of circumstances, and the sooner they do so the better for all concerned. Meanwhile great suffering prevails among the many families affected by the strike, and if it were not for the gifts of the charitable public, the results would be of the most serious kind. Elsewhere we report something of the endeavours that are being made to feed the hungry and destitute; these efforts we commend to the consideration of every Christian heart.

We hope that one result of this social upheaval will be to strangle the sweating system, that grinds the faces of our city poor so terribly. The labouring classes are beginning to feel the power they possess when banded together in their own defence, and if due consideration is not shown to their claim of a fair day's wage for a fair day's work, it is not to be expected that they will tamely endure oppression in order that the pockets of heartless capitalists may be swollen with gain.

The programme of proceedings of the Evangelical Alliance this autumn at Cheltenham (October 22—24) is eminently timely. Such subjects as the Dangers to Vital Religion from advances of Ritualism and Romanism; the necessity of maintaining the Divinity and the Atonement of Christ; the early Records of Genesis and Gentile Traditions; Present-day Restlessness, and Superficiality in Christian Life, and some questions of National Morality, point to a present testimony which is strongly demanded. We trust that adequate wisdom and firmness may be given to the speakers who introduce these important topics.

No doubt the relations of England with the East are delicate, and reports may be overstated, yet it is the duty of practical Christians to support Mr. Gladstone's plea that the alleged atrocities of a cruel and violent Kurdish chief in Armenia should be probed to the bottom. It is no new thing for the "Christians" there to suffer horrible outrages at the hands of fierce Mohammedans, or for the responsible rulers to be culpably silent about these things. But if Armenian Christians are the victims of crimes almost too dreadful to write about, and if, as has recently been done, English journals which contain information respecting them are prohibited entrance to the Turkish dominions, our Government ought to exhaust every possible diplomatic method of inducing the Porte to protect its own subjects.

In relation to betting and gambling, we were scarcely prepared for what we are told by a writer in a Manchester paper, and by the Vicar of Sydenham, in The Guardian. Mere boys, who have to travel a few miles by train to school, are seen playing at "nap" for pennies. It is the custom of young men who attend private houses, professedly to obtain orders for tradesmen, to initiate young servants into the merits of race-horses, to introduce sporting papers into the kitchen, and to make half-crown bets for bookmakers. The evil is not likely to end with the first steps, and the attention of those who have at heart the welfare of the young is invited to these new snares that are being spread for them.

A striking and terrible proof of the effects of a fashionable city life upon the marriage relation is shown in the facts which have come out respecting divorces in France. The statement is made that in the Department of the Seine—including Paris and its suburbs—there are 68·8 divorces to every thousand marriages, or more than one in twenty. In two provincial departments the divorces are not much more than one in a thousand. This is a shocking revelation of the corruption and misery of a modern city.

Two of the September magazines contain very noteworthy articles upon subjects of great interest to the Bible student. The paper in The Century on "The Pharaoh of the Exodus and his Son" deserves careful study, and is an exceedingly valuable contribution to the literature with reference to the period of the Captivity. It points to historical proof that the threat made by Moses of the death of the firstborn was, indeed, carried out in the palace as in the hovel; five monuments have been found with pictures of the son and last heir of the Pharaoh of the Exodus, and with lamentations over his early death.

The other paper appears in Harper's Monthly, under the heading of "The Oldest and Smallest Sect in the World;" it is an account by Rev. Dr. Hurst of a visit to the Samaritans at Mount Gerizim. The sect now numbers only about one hundred and fifty persons, and is rapidly dying out, after having for three thousand years managed to exist in spite of poverty, war, and oppression.

The Commissioners of Lunacy have just issued a report from which it appears that during the ten years ended in 1887 no fewer than 18,000 cases of insanity in public and private asylums in England and Wales were verified by the medical officers of the institutions as being directly traceable to intemperance. Unfortunately, there has been a large increase in the number of admissions, the ratio for the entire population having risen from 28·87 to 29·07 per 10,000. It may fairly be assumed that at least a portion of this is due to the drink curse.

Any indications of a more healthy state of social opinion in India are to be welcomed. A mass meeting of educated Mohammedans of Lucknow is stated to have been lately held at Kaiserbagh, at which it was resolved that the re-marriage of widows should be revived and encouraged as far as possible. It was urged in support of this reform that the Koran (which, however, be it remembered, is full of inconsistencies) showed that such a custom formerly prevailed, and had been sanctioned by the Prophet himself. An Indian paper also records the marriage of a Hindoo widow last month at Bombay, notwithstanding all the efforts of her caste-fellows, who threatened revenge.

On this subject it may be noted that as long as twenty-five years ago one of the most learned Brahmins of the century published two tracts which startled Hindoo society by contending that the marriage of widows, so far from being forbidden by the "Shasters," or sacred books, was actually enjoined: these tracts led to the passing of the Act of 1865, removing all obstacles to such marriages. But although such unions have been not uncommon among the poorer classes, the iron laws of caste have prevented them amongst the higher grades of Hindoos, who dare not face the consequent social ostracism and religious excommunication. Notwithstanding the strict seclusion that prevails, feminine opinion is all-powerful in Indian family life; it is from the ignorance, narrow-mindedness and superstition prevailing in the zenanas that the caste system derives its chief nourishment. Hence the paramount importance of the work that is being done so nobly by Englishwomen amongst these "sitters behind a curtain."

In connection with this burning subject of child-marriage in India the following, from the telegraphic news of Monday, in The Times, will be read with interest:—

A new Rukhmabai case is exciting great interest among the natives in the Western Presidency. A girl aged 14 has been sent to gaol for refusing to join her husband.

The recent report of the Select Committee on Emigration and Immigration contains much useful information on what is becoming an important social question. It appears that during the last twenty years the number of Germans, Russians, Poles, Austrians, and Hungarians of the poorest class in London has increased 138 per cent., in Whitechapel especially the Poles having increased no less than 425 per cent. Manchester, Bradford, and Leeds have large colonies of these poor foreigners, the last-named town containing quite six thousand, and their number being on the increase. In the tailoring trade of St. George's-in-the-East more than eighty per cent. of the workers are foreigners; twenty-five per cent. of the "hands" in the shoemaking trade are foreign. It is a sad fact that lack of diligence on the part of large numbers of English men and women opens a market for the labour of foreigners who are disposed to work hard, during long hours, for wages which are quite inadequate to providing any of the comforts of civilised life.

A more ghastly story it would be impossible to conceive than that told by a writer in this month's Blackwood, in describing the condition of the leper colony at Robben Island, near Cape Town. Of course it is requisite, in the interests of society at large, that these miserably afflicted people should be placed in a position of comparative isolation. But surely the dictates of common humanity would suggest that their unhappy lot be made endurable as far as possible by all the ameliorations that kindness and care could bestow upon them. A very different picture is presented by the author of this article, as to whose veracity the editor pledges his word. The writer roundly accuses the Cape authorities of a degree of parsimony and neglect in the treatment of these lepers that seems to us to be criminal.

Even the best of the leper wards, he says, are devoid of all enlivenment, and no effort is made to provide minor comforts for the sufferers. Here is his description of the worst:—

Human ingenuity could surely scarcely contrive anything more vile and discreditable. Decrepit outside, ruinous within, deficient in the commonest furniture and fittings, fourteen beds are crowded into a totally insufficient space; the miserable rickety bedsteads were masses of foul rags, and fouler matresses, on which are stretched patients in the most advanced helpless stages of the disease, unprovided, so far as I could discover, with ordinary hospital appliances....There is a kind of gipsy fireplace, in which a few sticks crackle, and over which some of the lepers are crouching. The very ground is destitute of boards, and consists of bare earth trampled into hollows, over which, as the doctor stated, numbers of large loathsome snakes crawl at night in search of mice.

Such a recital ought to awaken the indignant protests of all Christian and kindly people at the Cape, so that this "inhuman and disgraceful state of things," as the editor of Blackwood properly terms it, may be remedied without delay. The writer of the paper says that a second Father Damien is wanted; but no minister, however devoted and humane, could do justice to these afflicted fellow-creatures until the conditions of their life are brought into consonance with the elements of civilised existence, to say nothing of Christian principle and practice.

The choosing of the Lord's Day as a day for travelling, in which our princes set an evil example, is one of the most common forms of Sabbath-breaking now prevalent. They are not the really busiest men, but those whose chief pursuit is pleasure, who set the example of this encroachment on the Day of Rest. Apart from the higher question of obedience to the command, "Hallow my Sabbaths," which is as binding now as when first uttered, the homely proverb, "Where there's a will there's a way" may apply in this case: were the worldly man really willing, he could easily find time for travelling on other days.

Parliamentary Blue Books and papers, although often containing much valuable information, collected and arranged at great trouble and expense, are not attractive, and are practically sealed books to the general public. One of the most recent of these publications, however, contains in a popular and easily understood form some information which should be widely circulated. In it the Chancellor of the Exchequer, by means of diagrams, shows at a glance the population of the country at successive dates during the last thirty-two years, and the changes in the consumption of alcoholic and non-alcoholic liquids and of tobacco in the same period. The increase of the population from twenty-seven millions to thirty-eight millions suggests the necessity for some large and well-considered scheme of emigration. The consumption of non-alcoholic beverages per head is double what it was thirty years ago, indicating the growth of a healthier public taste. The consumption of beer, wine, and spirits, fluctuates considerably, a greater quantity being drunk now than in 1856. As showing the unhappy alliance between high wages and drinking, it is discouraging to note that during the prosperous period from 1873—6 there was a great rise in the consumption of alcohol. It would be well if such useful and sadly instructive tables could be circulated and widely digested, instead of lying hidden in a Blue Book.

The Secretary of the United Kingdom Alliance has lately drawn timely attention to the misleading nature of certain statistics contained in a Canadian Blue Book with regard to the drink traffic in that country, where local option prevails. The alleged increase in the consumption of alcohol, especially of spirits, has been much insisted upon by the English opponents of local option. It now appears, however, that the original figures were incorrect, and the real fact is that for the years 1886-7-8 the average annual rate of consumption of spirits per head of the population of Ontario was less than one-half of that for the ten years preceding the Scott Act. In the Dominion as a whole, in the ten years under the Act, there has been a decrease of one-third as compared with the ten years before the Act. Further, a comparison between our own country and Canada tells heavily against us, for, on the basis of Mr. Goschen's diagrams referred to above, the United Kingdom consumes three times as much alcohol per head of the population. But is this to be wondered at so long as there is a public-house almost at every street corner?

It was fitting that on the day when the Bill for the Prevention of Cruelty to and Protection of Children received the Royal assent, the executive committee of the Society that has taken up this needed work should meet and formally thank Rev. B. Waugh for his invaluable services in the cause of the suffering children. We are sure that friends throughout the country cannot thank Mr. Waugh better than by co-operating with him in the sustained endeavour to have the provisions of the Act apply, whenever there is the unhappy necessity for it. On another page we summarise the main provisions of the new Act.

It has been said that onlookers frequently see most of the game. This is scarcely true of the game of politics, with its hidden currents and its pulling of secret strings. Sooner or later, however, these things have to come to the light. Few outside the charmed circle of the House of Commons can have been prepared for the announcement made last week that the Government are meditating the endowment of a new university in Ireland, for the higher education of Roman Catholics. One great objection that has been entertained by many of the true friends of Ireland to the concession of "Home Rule," has been the possibility of such a change being made subservient to the aims of the Papacy to the detriment of Protestant and evangelical religion. But now it would seem as though the very Government that has opposed the political claims of the Irish party is about to yield to their demands in another form. It is a very perplexing state of matters.

If the Cabinet perseveres in this design, its path will not be made smoother than heretofore. One of its staunchest supporters in the press, The Record, raises a strenuous protest against the subsidising of Roman Catholicism within this realm. In the interests of spiritual religion, as well as in the interests of the Reformed faith, we trust that the country will be able successfully to resist and defeat this insidious proposal.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—In view of the need of increased support to the Society, the directors have decided to hold in the autumn a series of missionary services in the large centres of population.

ALLAHABAD.—A special commissioner of The Bombay Guardian describes the revolting sights he saw in drink and opium dens in this city, and adds:—"Two thoughts preponderated in my mind during my visits to these places. The first was that terrible judgments are impending over a Government that fills its exchequer from such unholy sources; and secondly, that amongst the multitudes who frequent these dens, belonging to all castes from the highest to the lowest, there are a very large proportion who are galled by the chains that bind them. They know that they are sinners, and they know that they are lost. They have already reached the first step towards salvation. A vast harvest of souls is to be reaped from amongst them by any Christians, Native or European, who will go amongst them like Jesus Christ, as a friend of publicans and sinners. Will you go?"

The Journey of a Day.

BY DR. THEODORE CUYLER.

On Lord's Day morning, August 18, Dr. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, preached in the United Presbyterian Church, Dunoon, N.B., to a crowded congregation that came from far and near, attracted by the fame of the eloquent and warm hearted Brooklyn pastor. His text was Gen. xxiv. 12: "I pray Thee send me good speed this day." A correspondent sends to us copious notes of the sermon, of which we give the following portions:—

ALMOST everything in life depends on the start. If we lose the morning hours by long sleep, indolence, or aimlessness, we commonly lose the day. One hour in the morning is worth two or three at the sunset. The best, the sweetest hour for study, for thought, for devotion, is when we rise refreshed from slumber. Every day ought to be commenced with God, on the knees. That man begins the day unwisely who leaves his chamber without a conference with Jesus Christ, the "Friend that sticketh closer than a brother." The true Christian goes to his closet for his armour, that he may be equipped for the conflict of the day. In the morning the soul rises, like the lark on the mountain side, soaring up to the very gates of heaven, and chanting its song of gratitude and praise. Every Christian ought to have a window open towards God at sunrising: when the sunlight of his love pours in, it should touch our lips to a song of praise.

When we have had communion with God, the day goes cheerfully; the load is made lighter. If a man leave his home with a scowl on his brow, a snap at his wife, and a pert word to the children, he is not apt to be very pleasant company through the day; and he will likely come home at night with the sweetness of a vinegar cruet.

Having made a right start, we must resolve that the day shall not be aimless. It is well to have a plan for every day: some definite idea of what we are to set about. Then seek Divine direction as Eliezer sought it. He said to God: "Send me good speed this day." We find further on that Eliezer said: "I being in the way, the Lord led me." If we are in God's way, God's hand will always lead us. The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord—every one of them. Study that beautiful history of the lad Joseph. He must needs go into the pit in order to reach the prison; he must needs go into the prison, too, before he can become the Premier of Egypt. When we get home to heaven we shall look back upon our lives, and see how God led us and his right hand upheld us, even when we did not recognise his special care. Many an event that seemed dark will then be seen to be bright and luminous.

Do not begin the day overloaded with too many things. The man who tries to do everything will seldom do anything. Take one step at a time; do the duty of the moment and leave the rest with God. Some Christian people commit the mistake of laying duties on their own shoulders. God never built a Christian character for to-day's duties and to-morrow's anxieties. If you would walk lightly, therefore, learn to commit your footsteps to the Lord.

There are a great many overloads, not only on my side of the water, but on this side also. There is a sad overload of covetousness with a great many people. It is right to seek honestly to be successful in business, whatever it may be, and to use our earnings for the glory of Christ. But covetousness is that terrible sin that daily drags many a soul to perdition. It means wear and worry, and brings no solid joy in the spiritual life. No wise man travels without his map or guide-book, or embarks on a voyage without a chart. God has provided a guide-book for every day of the journey. In the Bible there is a precept for every step through life. Let not one be troubled about the Bible. Let any man take it, and practice it from Monday to Saturday; let him take Christ as his righteousness, and the Bible as his guide, and he cannot lay his head on his pillow on Saturday night an infidel.

Our Christianity ought to run through every day's experience. Some people keep their religion for Sundays, and for prayer-meetings. There are some who use their religion as they do their umbrellas, only for a certain state of the weather; or as they use their overcoats, at a time when it is extremely cold. They keep their religion to fall back upon when the doctor is sought, when the pastor is sent for, when the pulse is low, and eternity near. Keep the lamp always burning, for the night may come when we least think of it. In the journey of life we know not what a day may bring forth. We never know what temptations are to meet us by the way. Satan never sends word ahead when he wants to assail you and me; any more than a burglar sends word to you that he will be at your house to-morrow morning for the purpose of relieving you of your silver plate.

There are hard lines in life, special crosses and perplexities. For such conflicts we shall need the upholding, environing strength of God. And when strong temptations assail us, what a blessed thing to be on the Rock, built on the everlasting foundation, where we can bid defiance to the gale. There are some days when our eyes get blinded with tears; days when we leave the house in the morning, and sickness is under the roof. Everyone has what are called "dark days;" when we come back from a voyage, a journey, or daily work, to find the house shrouded in sorrow; when sudden troubles come, and sorrows, and God leaves us for a season in the dark. Your Scottish mountains are often shrouded in mist, but you never doubt they are there! when the mist is swept away by the lances of the morning they stand out in all their beauty, So, beneath the mystery of bereavement, there lies the everlasting love of God, and the assurance of his omnipotent grace.

What are the happiest hours of the day—those in which we make most money, or have most of some kind of amusement? No; they are those spent in the service of Christ, in performing deeds of love and kindness to our fellow creatures; in helpful efforts to reform an inebriate, to guide a young man in the right course, to teach Jesus to a dying soul, or perform some act of true, Christlike self-denial. We should be ever on the alert for opportunities to do good. We never know what will result from a single act we do for the Master; nor can we measure its power and far-reaching influence.

Every day has its evening. The way in which people spend their evenings generally determines their religious character. During the day they may be busy with their secular calling, and their mind is fully occupied. But when they are at leisure, then Satan spreads his toils and his snares; he would make them hours of temptation, frivolity, dissipation, and destruction. In our cities Satan sets his pitfalls every evening for the unwary footsteps of young and old. He lines the streets with the dram shop, the gaming haunts, and other places, that are only gateways of hell; and many go in thereat. It is the duty of Christian parents to provide healthy pleasures in the evening for their children, otherwise Satan will provide for them. When a young man's work is over, he is in danger of forgetting his religious duties. So, after the labours of the day should come the wholesome recreation of the evening hour, the fireside joys, or the instructive and soul-saving hours of devotion in the house of God. We find in America that the church prayer-meeting during the evening is often the thermometer that determines the spiritual warmth and life of the people.

In summer your days in Scotland are exceedingly long, yet each one of them has its night. McCheyne, of Dundee, in whose pulpit I was permitted to stand last Sabbath, used to seal his letters with this motto: "The night cometh." It is a solemn night to everybody. Let us work in the day, for the night cometh, as surely as yonder sun shall set behind the hills. To some it may be an unending night; the long, sunless, rayless, hopeless night of his self-banishment from God. There is no night in heaven, "For the glory of God lightens it and the Lamb is the light thereof."

A good day's work for Christ and your fellow-creatures is the best preparation for eternity. Do not trouble yourself about dying. Bend you thoughts upon living; then dying will simply be the winding up, and the going home.

"Tell Jesus."

"HAVE you ever read a book called 'Tell Jesus'?" inquired a woman in my district some years ago. On being answered in the negative, she said, "Thank God I have; my husband is a cabinet-maker, and I do not think he ever drives in a nail without 'telling Jesus.'" How blessed thus to live, working and talking with Jesus.

A lady lately felt much "cumbered" about a Christian work in which she was engaged; she wrote to a friend, telling her fears and troubles, and shortly after received this reply: "Have you read a little book called, 'Tell Jesus'?" In a few days the answer to this letter came: "Thank you for mentioning 'Tell Jesus.' I have the book; I am ashamed to say I began to read it several years ago, but did not finish it; in fact, I did not believe it. However, on receipt of your letter I found the book, and I cannot tell you the comfort it has been to me; I never enjoyed reading anything more in my life. I find it difficult to live the Christian life in the midst of much that is opposed to religion; but now I feel I can 'tell Jesus' all about it, and I know He does hear and answer prayer."

SEAMEN AT FLUSHING.—Efforts are being made to raise a Seamen's Home and Institute at Flushing. Thousands of seamen of various nations are constantly coming and going to port, and they have no proper place in which to spend their leisure time. The result is disastrous in many ways. This effort is receiving the sympathy and support of many in the Netherlands, including the Queen. Already nearly £300 have been received towards its erection. Other £200 will be required. Tracts and religious books will be gratefully received by Rev. A. W. Frater, minister of Presbyterian Church, Flushing, Holland.

THE SCAPEGOAT.

BY DAVID BARON.

WHAT do the two goats signify, and who is Azazel? That both together give us a full view of atonement none will dispute; but how? Some say that the one slain represents Christ dying for our sins, while the other, being sent away alive, symbolises Christ risen; but that seems to me an impossible interpretation. For (1) it does not harmonise with the work of Christ. The sin of Israel was laid on the live goat after its fellow had been slain; our sins were laid, not upon the risen Christ, but on Him before, and in, his death. (2) From Lev. xvi. 26, it is seen that the live goat was accounted as unclean and defiling, as if, having come in contact with death, the man who led it could not return into the camp without purification. (3) According to the universal belief of ancient Jews, the goat used to be thrust down from a high mountain in the wilderness, and dashed to pieces. Some Hebrew scholars translate ve-shillach (rendered "and he shall let go," in ver. 22) by "and he shall thrust" (i.e., destroy) the goat in the wilderness. Now, how could an unclean animal, covered with sin and led forth to destruction be a type of the risen Jesus, who, having put away sin, lives to die no more?

There seems to me no alternative but to suppose Azazel a person. The manner in which in ver. 8 (see margin) "for Azazel" is contrasted with "for Jehovah" necessarily requires that Azazel should denote a personal existence. The almost universal ancient Jewish view was that it signified Satan. It is agreed by most of the cabalistic writers that Satan before his apostasy was called Az, "mighty" (the mighty angel), and that after his rebellion his name was changed to Az-Azel ("Az gone astray"). The Septuagint have rendered Azazel by a word meaning "the cast off." It is remarkable that the devil was called Azizos by the Phœnicians, and so, in Luke xi. 21, he is called the "strong man."

Some trace the first syllable of Azazel to Aiz, meaning "goat," and interpret Azazel as "the goat which went astray." Now, undoubtedly, devils are called "goats" elsewhere in Scripture (Lev. xvii. 7; 2 Chron. xi. 15). Azazel figures here as the prince of the wilderness, for thither the goat was sent to him; and it may be remarked that the wilderness and dry places of the desert are often described as the devil's habitation (Matt. iv. 1, xii. 43).

The only objection to this interpretation, viz., that Satan seems here to be set over against Jehovah, and as if entitled to an offering, is based on pure invention. Where in the account does it even hint that the goat was sent as an offering to Azazel? Both are presented to Jehovah (7), while the very casting of lots, which was in itself a solemn appeal to God, showed that Jehovah claimed the power of disposal. That it was not an offering is also seen from ver. 21, where it is stated that any one (the words translated "a fit man" simply mean "a man who is opportunely there," or "a man at hand") could take it into the wilderness to destroy it, whereas, if it were an offering, it would require a priest.

Take a comprehensive glance at this ceremony. Atonement for himself and house finished, Aaron proceeds with the people's sin offering. The two goats are presented before Jehovah, and the fate of each is determined by lot in the following manner: The priest, placing one on his right, the other on his left, took his station by the altar, and cast into an urn two pieces of gold exactly similar, inscribed, one "For Jehovah," and one "For Azazel." Having well shaken them together, he put both his hands into the urn, and took up a lot in each. That in his right hand he put on the head of the goat on his right, that in his left hand on the head of the one on his left. The one on which fell "For Jehovah" was immediately taken to the place of slaughter, and slain, and the priest, taking up the blood in a golden bowl, re-entered within the veil—imperfect type of the adorable Great High Priest, who, with his own blood, entered into the holy place not made with hands. From vv. 15—19 we have the account of the "atonement," "reconciliation," and "cleansing" effected by the blood of the goat of the sin offering. The atonement and cleansing of the altar was accomplished with the mixed blood of the bullock (the priests' sin offering) and of the goat (18), teaching that the offerings of the people and the services of the priests were alike faulty in Jehovah's sight, and that, instead of these offerings and services making the comers thereunto perfect, they themselves needed cleansing, and could only be acceptable and efficacious on the ground of yet other blood — the blood of the Great Offering, the Lamb of God, of which the universal, all-embracing (as far as Israel is concerned) sin offering of the Day of Atonement was a specially striking type.

Then, when atonement was completed, when the sin of Israel had been purged and forgiven through the blood of the sin-offering anticipatively pointing to the precious blood of Christ; then, when it could no longer have anything to do with atonement, the live goat is brought to have transferred to his head all the iniquities, transgressions, and sins of the children of Israel (21), as if atonement had not been made at all. What did it signify? Why this, that sin, though pardoned, is yet hateful in the sight of God. It cannot dwell in his presence, but must be utterly and perpetually banished into a land not inhabited. On this there will be perfect agreement, and commentators are unanimous in their interpretation, that the goat of sin offering set forth atonement, while in the other we have presented to us the utter removal of sin from the believer.

But the question still remains, "What is the ultimate destiny of these sins, and to whom, or where, were they sent?" Personally, I much incline to the Jewish belief which also was the view in the early Church, that they were sent to Satan the first cause of sin, and the first seducer of man. The sins of God's people are taken off them, and rolled back on him who is their prime author and instigator. Though the penalty of sin is remitted to us in the infinite mercy of God, on the ground of the shed blood; it is not remitted to him who brought us into apostasy and ruin. According to a Jewish tradition, the sins of Israel were put on the head of Azazel's goat in the following manner:—The confession was written on parchment by the high priest, and ended thus, "As Jehovah our God has graciously pardoned our sins by the blood of the sin offering, He has ordered us to send these sins unto thee, Azazel, who art the author of them, by having seduced our first parents and their children to sin. All their sins must now fall on thy head." The parchment was fastened to the horns of the goat and thus sent away. This, they say, is the meaning of the words "And he shall put them upon the head of the goat" (21).

There will be fulfilment of this mysterious ceremony. Christ having accomplished atonement for his own family (the Church which with Him is "a royal priesthood") may now be regarded in relation to the whole congregation of Israel nationally, as having re-entered within the veil with his own precious blood, instead of with the blood of the goat. When He comes forth a second time, all the work of atonement in its universal, all-embracing sense, prefigured by the Day of Atonement, will be accomplished. The true Great High Priest will re-appear from the presence of Jehovah especially to his own nation, and with outstretched hands pronounce on them Jehovah's benediction of peace. Then "in Him shall all Israel be justified and shall glory." But just as when atonement was fully accomplished, Azazel's goat was brought and had transferred to him all the iniquity of Israel, and was led forth to destruction, so, in Rev. xix., xx., the re-appearance of Christ is followed by an angel (answering to the "fit man") coming forth with the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand, and "laying old of the dragon that old serpent (originator of sin) which is the devil and Satan," and, like the goat which was dashed down the precipice, so he is dashed down into the bottomless pit.

This mysterious ceremony may also teach us a truth in connection with the original promise in Eden (Gen. iii. 15). The sin offering may be viewed as a type of Christ, and Azazel's goat as a type of Satan. Is this the reason why in this only instance lots were cast? As if Jehovah Himself must choose which shall typify his spotless Lamb and which the Great Apostate. In all other cases, as, for instance, in choosing which shall be sin offering, which burnt offering, it was entirely left to the priest to decide. Now, it was directly Satan who was the cause of the death of the Son of God ("thou shalt bruise his heel"), though instrumentally it was man. This suffering and death of Christ were prefigured by the sacrificing of the sin-offering. But while the sin offering bled and died, and while the priest was inside the veil, until his re-appearance Azazel's goat remained alive. So with the Great Sacrifice. Jesus suffered and died, He poured out his soul unto death, but Satan remained alive as if triumphant. The blessed Great High Priest, after showing Himself to his own, has like Aaron re-entered within the veil, but all this time it doth not appear as if Satan's head was crushed: "our adversary the devil still walketh about (sufficient sign of life) like a roaring lion." But, as assuredly as Azazel's goat was led forth to destruction on the re-appearance of Aaron, so will Satan be finally crushed under our feet at the re-appearing of Jesus.

Mr. Spurgeon on Tithes.

THE tithe-collecting difficulty perplexes Parliament, and no one can tell how to dispose of it Suppose there were no tithes to collect, would not religion be relieved of a scandal, national peace be promoted, and Churchmen be benefited by having the privilege of supporting their own ministers? No evil-disposed person could invent another cause of dissension and strife so productive of ill-will among Christian people as is the compulsory support of a church by people who differ from it. All lovers of true religion should unite in seeking a speedy end of the present grievous state of things. The land will not pay the tithe now that its produce fetches so little money; and, therefore, apart from the question of right or wrong, something will have to be done.—Sword and Trowel.

The Good Tidings of the Reign of God.

VII.—"THE MYSTERIES OF THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN."

THERE are two great mysteries—the mystery of iniquity and the mystery of God. Both are connected with the Kingdom. The mystery of iniquity is concentrated in "the Man of Sin, the Son of Perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God and that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God" (2 Thess. ii. 3, 4). This is exactly what is testified concerning Satan in Isa. xiv. 12—15: "I will ascend above the heights of the clouds, I will be like the Most High" (see Nos. I. and V. of these papers). The mystery of iniquity is the working out of the ambitious design of Satan to exalt his throne above the stars of God—to show himself to be as God, the Great King.

The "mystery, Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth," is a part of the mystery of iniquity. The woman represents that great city, that polity, which reigneth over the kings of the earth (Rev. xvii. 5, 18). So far it would seem that Satan had gained his end, that he had originated and organised a set of principles which had obtained a commanding, a reigning influence over those who rule the earth.

The mystery of God, on the other hand, is "the mystery of the Kingdom of God," of the Reign of God. It includes many mysteries, and therefore the first Evangelist gives it in the plural, "the mysteries of the Kingdom of heaven," while the second describes it in its entirety as "the mystery" (Matt. xiii. 11; Mark iv. 11).

Paul speaks of "the wisdom of God in a mystery, the hidden wisdom which God ordained before the world unto our glory: which none of the princes of this world knew, for had they known it they would not have crucified the Lord of the glory" (1 Cor. ii. 7, 8). They did not know that Jesus was the Son of God—still less did they know that He was God the Son. Even John the Baptist, his cousin after the flesh, his forerunner and herald in the preaching of the Gospel of the Kingdom, "knew Him not," until it was revealed to him by the voice of the Father and the Spirit descending and abiding upon Him. The Prince of this world and the princes of this world, would not have crucified Him had they known, what his dear disciples only knew by revelation of the Father, that He was THE CHRIST, the Son of the Living God.

> He the Hook that hid awhile
> Pierced Leviathan with guile;
> He the Child that laid his hand
> On the Cockatrice's den,
> That the ancient lord of men
> Might avoid the ransomed land.

Thus, in the wisdom of God in a mystery, the hidden wisdom, God defeated the rebel usurper, and set his Son upon his holy hill of Zion. For "God raised Him from the dead," and said unto Him: "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee."

The same Apostle closes his Epistle to the Romans with this doxology:—

"Now to Him that is of power to stablish you according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began, but now is made manifest, and by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith; to God only wise, be glory through Jesus Christ for ever. Amen" (Rom. xvi. 25—27).

What was Paul's Gospel? It was "the Gospel [of the Reign] of God" (i. 1). Stated in its briefest formula it was "Jesus and the Resurrection." "His Son Jesus Christ our Lord, made the Son of David, according to the flesh, and declared the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead" (i. 3, 4).

That which Paul called "my Gospel and the preaching of Jesus Christ," included our death to sin and our resurrection in Him—baptized into his death, raised to newness of life. It included the indwelling of the Spirit in our body as his temple, that sin in the flesh having been damnatorily judged in the Son of God, sent by the Father in the likeness of sinful flesh, the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit (vi., viii.).

It included the grafting of the Gentiles into the good olive tree of Jewish privilege; because not only was Jesus crucified as the King of the Jews, according to Pilate's superscription; but as the Son of Man He was lifted up, as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, that He might draw all unto Him, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life. "For if by one man's offence death reigned by one, much more they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life by one Jesus Christ."

Another of the mysteries of the Kingdom is that not only is the middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile broken down, and the enmity abolished to make in Himself of twain one new man, and reconciling both unto God in one body by the cross; but this new creature is his bride, his body, "for we are members of his body.... This mystery is great—Christ and his Church" (Eph. iii., v.).

Paul shows us another mystery: that we shall not all sleep, but shall all be changed, in the twinkling of an eye; and when this mortal shall have put on immortality, death will be swallowed up in victory—the victory which Jesus won when, through death, He annulled him that had the power of death, that is the devil (1 Cor. xv. 51—57; Heb. ii. 14).

All these mysteries relate to the overthrow of the usurper, and the reign of God by Christ as his Vicegerent, and of the saints with Christ, for He has redeemed them to reign with Him in the everlasting Kingdom of Christ and of God.

Therefore the mystery of God is finished when the Kingdom is delivered from Satan and his incarnation in the Anti-CHRIST. For the Angel lifts up his hand to heaven and swears by the Eternal Creator that there shall be delay no longer, but in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God shall be finished (Rev. x.). In the next chapter (xi. 15) the seventh angel sounds, and great voices in heaven acclaim, "The kingdoms of this world are become the Kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever."

The mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven are all parts of the one and only Everlasting Gospel of the Reign of God. M.

Deep Sea Fishermen.

"MATHER FUND" OF £50,000.

SIR,—I am at last enabled to take up a matter which has long occupied my thoughts—viz., the securing, upon a rational basis of self-help, of some adequate relief for the dependent relatives of those fishermen whose lives may be sacrificed in the pursuit of their hazardous calling, together with a provision which I hope it will be found possible to make in due course for the men who by reason of age or infirmity are incapacitated from further labour.

While abroad last winter, I read in The Times a letter from Sir Edward Birkbeck, chairman of the "Royal Fund for the Relief of Orphans of Sea Fishermen" (formed at the suggestion of the Prince of Wales, by investing the £18,000 surplus of the Fisheries Exhibition) urgently appealing for help to meet claims resulting from the disastrous gale of February 9. I at once wrote, offering to raise from the public a reserve of £50,000 conditionally upon the scope and application of the fund being extended, and arrangements being made whereby fishermen themselves might become subscribing members. To this, Sir Edward replied: "Your scheme is not only a grand one, but is on the lines of the Prince of Wales's original proposal." Subsequently, with the warm approval of Her Majesty, and of H.R.H. the President, the Committee decided to close the purely charitable fund, and the new scheme was launched under the appropriate title of "The Royal Provident Fund for Sea Fishermen."

My friends warn me that so large a sum as £50,000 is not easily obtained; but, encouraged by former successes, I face the task, cheered by the hope of a liberal response, and confident that the fisher folk of the British Isles will secure great and permanent advantage from this mingling of their hard-earned pence with the gold subscribed by those fish-eaters ashore who benefit by their dangerous toil.

It goes without saying that the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen naturally retains my heartiest sympathy, and I trust no one will divert to a new object a single penny intended for that most excellent Society; rather let the efforts made on its behalf be redoubled. Personally, however, I desire to dedicate to the cause of the widow and the fatherless such strength as remains to me after a long and painful illness; and, labouring in a purely honorary capacity, I do not hesitate to beg your hearty co-operation in this much-needed undertaking.

During the past five years alone 1328 fishermen have been lost at sea, while the list of accidents resulting in death or total disablement was terribly long. Let us, therefore, hasten to do all that lies in our power, whether by personal subscription or by influencing others, to place this fund on a secure footing, before another winter's gales burst upon the fleet.—Yours very faithfully, E. J. MATHER.

HOMELESS POOR IN BERLIN.—Last week's Queen gives a most interesting account, from a German paper, of a noteworthy institution in Berlin known as the "City Shelter." Accommodation is provided for the temporary housing of families ejected from the homes through poverty, and they are cared for while in search of a new rooftree, or of employment. Homeless individuals are also taken in for a time, and helped in many ways. As many as 1600 persons sleep in the Shelter in one night, as guests of the city authorities. Provision is made for the sick, and the institution as a whole is a very praiseworthy one.

XXIV.—THE RELIGIOUS LETTER.

USING my voice as much as I do outside of a train, I do not care to talk when I am travelling; but when I am travelling with one person alone, and he or she speaks to me, I generally put away my writing or other occupation, and engage in conversation.

I was journeying once with a gentleman, who looked at me for a long time, as if taking stock; at length he spoke. I found that he knew me, though I had not the pleasure of his acquaintance.

"There are quite a number of people getting serious now, are there not?" asked my companion.

"In what way are they getting serious?" I asked.

"Oh," he said, "I mean religiously serious, of course."

"Yes," I replied, "I think there are. In these stirring times a great many persons are, without doubt, becoming religious and earnest, and I hope they will not stop there, but go on until they are happy."

"Exactly so," said the gentleman. "Look here, my sister has just taken one of these serious fits, you know, and has written me a long letter. The very idea of writing me a religious letter, you know—as if I was sick, or going to die!"

"May I ask," I said, "has the lady only become religious, or is she happy?"

"Why, sir, you know better than I do what has happened to her. She says it is through your preaching that all this change has come upon her."

"Then I should say, she is not merely serious, or religious, but happy. There was a time," I continued, "when I was very serious, and religious too. I was under a slavish fear of God, but after that I became happy, and was more perfectly changed. I came under the power of the love of God. Now I do all I can to make people as happy as I am myself. I am thankful if God has used me in any way for your sister's benefit."

"Ah," he said, "that is the question; these enthusiasts die, or go out of their minds, you know. They tell me that the asylums are full of such people."

"Are they?" I said. "I do not know about your sister's letter, or what she says. It may be she is very happy, and wishes you to be the same. It is a blessed thing for brothers and sisters to be united for eternity, and going on their way to heaven together."

"That is the very thing," replied the gentleman; "she says she wants me to go to heaven with her; and what is that but wishing me dead, you know; don't you see?"

"Oh, no, no," I answered; "she wishes you to be dead to the world, and to be alive unto God. Our heaven must begin in this world; it cannot begin at death. Death cannot do more than clench your state of life, whatever that state may be. As the tree falls, so it lies. If a man lives in his sins and for the world, death opens the gate of hell to him; and if he lives in forgiveness of sins, death opens the gate of heaven to him."

"But how can a man tell which way the tree will fall?" asked my friend, as if that were an unanswerable question.

I said, "That is very easily answered. A tree will fall the way it leans. If a man's soul leans towards the world, it cannot go to God; and if it leans towards God, it cannot fall the other way."

"Well," he said, "be that as it may, I am neither sick nor sorry; and I have written to my sister, to ask her what she means by writing me a religious letter. I am not going to die just yet!"

I saw it was useless to speak to this gentleman about spiritual matters, so I told him a story. I said, "As I was passing a house one day, a lady tapped at the window, and beckoned me to enter. I did so, and, sitting down, she said, 'I have a story here for you, just after your own mind; I will read it.'"

In substance, the story was as follows:—A gentleman and his three sons, worldly people, went out to America to make money. They worked seven days a week, and said they could not afford to keep Sundays. The minister of the place tried in vain to induce them to attend church.

One day there came one of the sons named William to his house in a great hurry. The poor boy was quite out of breath with running.

"How goes the work?" asked the minister.

"Oh," answered the boy, "father says: Will you come at once and see him? he is in great trouble."

"Certainly," was the reply; and, putting on his hat, the minister returned with the boy.

On the way, he asked, "What is the matter?"

"Oh," said the boy, "my brother Richard has been bitten by a rattlesnake."

"But what is the use of sending for me then?" said the minister. "I cannot cure that."

"Oh, but do come," cried the boy; "father is very anxious to see you."

On arriving at the house, the minister said, "I am very sorry to hear of this dreadful accident; but what can I do for you?"

"Oh," said the distracted father, "do come and pray with us."

"Pray with you," exclaimed the minister; "certainly I will. Let us pray."

The father and his two sons knelt down, while the suffering boy remained on the sofa. The minister commenced his prayer by thanking God for making rattlesnakes, and particularly for that one which bit Richard. "Now, Lord, send another for John, and one for William, and a big one for the father, for nothing but rattlesnakes brings them to their knees."

"That was a humorous man," said the gentleman, laughing.

"Yes," I said, "and he had some depth in his humour too. It seems to me that a rattlesnake, or cholera, or an earthquake, it may be, are necessary to bring some people to their knees. These, or any of them, would be better for many people than the health and prosperity they have. When God cannot touch people with happiness, He sends them sorrow, or fear."

"You, sir," I added, "seem to take your health and happiness as a matter of course, as if God had not sent them; and you think that, when He sends you sickness and death, it will be time enough for you to repent."

"To tell the truth," said the gentleman, "I have never been in the way of these things. We were all brought up for the world—my sister too."

I said, "You ought to be trained and educated to do your duty and work in the world, to be sure; but you will admit that it is very short-sighted policy not to make provision for eternity as well."

"This world," said the gentleman, rather sadly, "is not worth living for!"

"Certainly not," I replied. "A little girl once came home from school, and said, 'O mamma, what do you think? The world is hollow, and we live upon a kind of crust, like the peel of an orange.'"

"'Yes, my child,' said the widowed mother, 'I found out long ago that the world is hollow, and, what is more, there is fire in the middle of it.'"

"You have a queer lot of stories," said the gentleman.

"Yes," I replied; "I find them like arrows which strike and stick better than arguments."

"Dear me," said the gentleman, starting up, "I have come to my journey's end. How quickly the time has passed. I promise you that I will think of your stories about the rattlesnake and the little girl. Good bye."

There was not time for prayer, and perhaps the season was not come for it yet. However, I prayed for him as I proceeded on my way.

Some weeks afterwards, I received a letter from a lady unknown to me, thanking God and thanking me for speaking to her brother in a railway carriage. She also took the same opportunity to thank God and thank me for the blessing she herself had received from my teaching.

Her letter was well and intelligently written. Considering that this lady was only a worldling just brought to God, it was surprising how fully and clearly she had grasped the truth, and had been grasped by it. I doubt not her "religious" letter to her brother was most convincing, and perhaps our little talk in the railway carriage may have helped to confirm her testimony.

Worldly people, who are perfectly innocent of the Gospel, are more likely to be taken with its simplicity and directness than persons who have been accustomed to hear evangelical teaching from their youth. Not that this truth should be overlooked; but it should be put in the way of a command from God rather than as a matter of instruction.

Believing in the Lord Jesus Christ is not an optional matter, but a positive command, under direct penalty. There is nothing more convincing than the Gospel, and nothing more hardening if its conditions are not carried out.

I wrote to acknowledge the lady's kind letter, and to rejoice with her for her own and her brother's conversion. I told her I should much like to hear from her brother, or see him again. This request was granted, and I had the pleasure of shaking hands with both of them in London some time later, encouraging them to press forward in the new and wonderful path in which they had set out.

HELPING THE PRISONERS.

MR. W. WHEATLEY, secretary of the St. Giles's Christian Mission, describing a day's work in the London prisons, says:—"We have an iron room adjoining Holloway Gaol, and thither we invite newly-discharged prisoners. After they have partaken of breakfast, a short, practical address is given them. A great deal depends upon the right word being said, for a man who has just regained liberty is a very tender subject to deal with. After the address, I inquire into the circumstances of those desiring a helping hand, previous to sending them to headquarters, in Brooke-street, Holborn. This work over, I visit the cells, and urge reformation of life, at the same time offering assistance on release to prisoners who need and will accept it.

"Leaving the gaol one day recently, I went to the county of London Sessions House to see how many boys were awaiting trial. Having come up from the cells, I had to consider a sad case. A man and woman were both charged with serious offences, and what was to become of their children? The circumstances were very painful; and when the husband had been sentenced to five years' penal servitude, and the wife to eighteen months' imprisonment, I had to do something for six children. Could not friends help them? The police records furnished a significant reply, for the father of the female was enduring penal servitude, and her mother was in custody awaiting trial. Moreover, her sister was "wanted" by the police at Bow-street, and her brother was in custody at Manchester. With relatives of this description, what might have been the fate of these worse than orphaned little ones? I traced them with some difficulty to the house of a poor woman with whom they had been placed, and who had treated them very kindly. Without delay, I had them placed in the hands of a good woman living in one of our districts, until steps could be taken for their future protection and bringing up."

CHILDREN AT THE SEASIDE.

A FORTNIGHT'S stay at Ilfracombe has opened my eyes to the extent and value of the Children's Special Service Mission, as no amount of reading reports or hearing speeches could have done. In a leading article in The Daily Telegraph, the other day, in reference to the action of the Eastbourne Town Council, seaside preachers were described as "the gloomy Jeremiahs of the sands"—another added to the many elegant titles which adorn the literature relating to open-air preaching. But if those Town Councillors to whom this kind of ministry is so offensive, and that newspaper writer had been here, they might have altered their opinions. "Happy gatherings on Wildersmouth Beach" is the term employed on the bills, and happiness is their chief characteristic.

Does anyone need to be told where Ilfracombe is? It is a town on the rocky coast of North Devon, now open to the outer world by rail, but till recently only reached by coach. Its highly picturesque surroundings justly give it a first position among watering places. Its Capstone Hill alone would make many a seaside resort famous. Add to this its famous Tors, its Hillsborough Head, its irregular coast, with an endless succession of fantastic rocks, its proximity to Lynton and Lynmouth, the Welsh Coast in sight across the Channel, and Lundy Island, the home of the sea-birds, little more than twenty miles away, and nothing more need be said to account for its popularity.

But as the Gulf-stream, though so far away as to its origin, affects the climate of Ilfracombe, so a stream of religious influence has altered the character of the annual influx of visitors. Mr. Moore declared the other evening, at the Town Hall, that there are hundreds of families who come to the town because there are children's services, who would not come if they were discontinued. The share that Christian men have in making new neighbourhoods is not sufficiently recognised. When the sainted William Pennefather became incumbent of St. Jude's, Mildmay Park, the builders suddenly found a demand for new houses, because so many people went to reside in the parish.

Seldom have I witnessed a more picturesque sight than the daily gathering of these dear children and their friends. There is very little beach here, properly so called, but rocks innumerable; and, at the junction of the promenade, and the broad, Swiss-like path leading up Capstone Hill, there is a kind of table-rock, sloping towards the land. In front of this is a piece of level, stony shore, just reached at high water, and surrounded on two sides by the promenade. Pioneers build an eminence each morning on this level, round which a text is worked in pebbles and seaweed, and crowned by a flat stone, which serves for the preacher. Near this is placed a banner, with "Children's Special Service Mission" on it. As the hour approaches, the people begin to assemble (for the service is so popular that the adults usually outnumber the juveniles), and before long the rock is covered with pretty colours, like a flower bed, and so is the level in front, and the promenade. The busy hands of the boys distribute the hymn-sheets, and the meeting is as methodical and orderly as if it were indoors.

A young London barrister, Mr. W. R. Moore, whose paternal home is in Devonshire, has had charge of the Mission here for five seasons, and admirably he manages it. He gives prominence to the Word of God by having it read at every meeting, and introduces five or more hymns at each service. His helpers vary. When I arrived, Dr. Carless, of King's College Hospital, was speaking; and since then Mr. Bardsley, of Caius College, Cambridge, and son of the vicar of Finchley, has been the most prominent preacher. A lantern service one evening a week lends an extraordinary charm to the gathering, and brings a large crowd together. A flower service one afternoon was another pleasant variation. The address on this occasion was by Rev. W. G. Mallett, rector of St. Mary Major, Exeter; large quantities of choice fruit and flowers were collected, and afterwards sent to London and country hospitals.

The Sunday evening meetings after church time are as impressive as any I have ever seen. One Sunday evening the audience was estimated at more than 1000, and as still as death. One of the speakers was Rev. Canon Lyon, vicar of Sherborne, Dorset.

Mr. Moore tells me he has been privileged to lead many youthful feet into the way of peace. He is deservedly popular with the young people, and I pray that he may be long spared to minister to them the Word of Life.

When it is remembered that these bright, happy services practically girdle our island each summer, and that a flourishing Bible-reading Union is connected with the Mission, it is a most hopeful sign of the times, and one for which we ought to thank God with all our hearts.

STRANGERS ENTERTAINED.

AT all the important races there is now a number of extra railway police employed at the railway stations. These men are brought into the midst of evil surroundings and temptations, with none of the safeguards of home life to neutralise the moral danger. A friend of mine, who has dedicated time and property to the service of railway-men, and who has become, "by constant watching, wise" to discern their various needs, devised a plan of showing a friendly welcome to the railway strangers whom the races in her town had brought there.

She invited the inspector in charge to bring his contingent to her house to tea, promising to provide it at any hour that would be most convenient. After some hesitation and surprise at the unexpected kindness, he and all his band came at half-past three o'clock, and found the tables amply spread with eatables, and gay and fragrant with lovely flowers. A Christian magistrate had been invited to meet them, and say a few kind welcoming words, and their hostess and a like-minded friend had the teapots filled, ready to pour out for them the moment they were seated.

Only half-an-hour could be spared for the brief season of social enjoyment, but in that time they had been refreshed alike by this seasonable repast, and by intelligent Christian conversation, in which, forgetting all their shyness, they heartily joined, and had received an impression of the practical religion that is mindful to entertain strangers, which will make them in future slow to believe Hood's scathing reproach:—

Oh! for the rarity
Of Christian charity
Under the sun.

Thank God, Christian charity is not rare; and, that others may copy this simple instance of its exercise, I have told it here.

The men, as they left, received a hearty hand-shake, and a small floral Scripture text, along with the promise of a similar invitation at the next races, if the life of their hostess be preserved, which we pray may be the case.

"SHALOM" HOUSE, 134, Upper Parliament-street, Liverpool.—A training school or simple missionary college has been opened for any who desire to fit themselves for usefulness in the service of God, either as foreign missionaries or home workers. A council of gentlemen, composed of ministers and others, have undertaken to give lectures on Bible subjects, mission work, and various other branches of general knowledge. Classes are now being formed. Any young persons willing to avail themselves of this opportunity, are invited to communicate with the superintendent.

Evangelistic Notes.

Isle of Man.—Mr. and Mrs. Powers, evangelists, have conducted successful meetings at various places in this island.

Children's Service Band.—Mr. Newton Jones, secretary of this Band, has been much encouraged by his visits to Yarmouth and Redcar during July and August. He hopes in September to visit Broadstairs, Westgate, and Epsom.

South Norwood.—The Gospel tent services in connection with the London City Mission continue to be blessed. The tent will soon be removed, and the meetings continued in the new Mission-hall, which is to be opened about the close of the month. J. J. BROWNE.

Aberdeenshire.—The Gordon Evangelistic Mission has had four tents in various parts of the country during the summer months. In most places ministers and other Christian workers heartily co-operated in the work, and much blessing has resulted from the services. Mr. John Anderson, Aberdeen, is superintendent.

Eglish, co. Antrim.—This district has been greatly aroused, and the people much blest, through a five weeks' mission, which terminated on Sabbath week. The Gospel, as preached by Messrs. Thompson and West, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, attracted large crowds of earnest hearers, and a goodly number are happy in salvation sought and found at these services. J. T.

Mr. Sampson, the Cornish evangelist, commenced a mission at the Old Mahogany Bar, on Sunday last. He has been "over the ground" during the last week or two, and is much impressed with the necessity of an organised evangelistic attack upon the neighbourhood of Wellclose-square just now. Every house in one of the streets leading into that square is, he says, a house of ill-fame.

The Polytechnic.—In a letter to Mr. Spurgeon, with reference to recent services at the Polytechnic, by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, Mr. J. E. K. Studd says: "We are holding meetings for the converts every Wednesday evening, and these have been steadily increasing in numbers, until last Wednesday, the converts, together with one or two Christian workers, must have numbered over a hundred."

Northumberland.—Belford, in Northumberland, is being favoured with evangelistic addresses given by Lady Tankerville, Miss Elout, and two other ladies from America. Those who listened to the earnest Gospel addresses given by Miss Elout at the same place two or three years ago, and also saw the active part taken by her ladyship in the services, are not only attending the present services, but are also bringing others with them. It is to be hoped that the meetings will be productive of much spiritual good in what is, to a large extent, a spiritual wilderness.—Methodist Recorder.

Liverpool.—Rice-lane is one of the principal thoroughfares in the north end of the city. In the lane stands a Police Station, which has been disused for several years. It is the centre of a large working-class population, who need the Gospel in all forms of its merciful ministrations. The Station has been taken for religious, social, and philanthropic work. It is desired to meet the wants of the young especially, with the Gospel, Sabbath-school, temperance, reading-room, lending library, young people's guilds, &c.

LEWIS WEAVER.

18, Hampton-street, Walton, Liverpool.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, and most of our other evangelists, have been resting during the past month. They are now all resuming work for the autumn and winter. During September, Messrs. Fullerton and Smith will probably conduct services in Paris, Mr. Burnham will be in the hop-gardens in Kent, Mr. Harmer will be at Stonebroom and Burton-on-Trent, and Mr. Harrison at Mr. Charrington's Hall, Mile End-road.—Sword and Trowel.

AN EFFORT IS BEING MADE to raise a memorial fund to the memory of the late Mrs. Ryle, wife of the Bishop of Liverpool. If about £600 can be collected it is proposed to found an annuity fund for aged Bible-women employed by the Ladies' Bible and Domestic Mission, a society of which Mrs. Ryle was president, and in which she took deep interest. Many of the Bible-women have been working with much devotion during the best part of their lives in the crowded and squalid districts of Liverpool. About £400 have already been raised.

The Late Dr. Habershon.

The funeral of Dr. S. O. Habershon on Tuesday last week was no occasion for grief, except for the great loss which the living have sustained. The remains were interred in West Hampstead Cemetery, close by the spot where those of Mr. J. Denham Smith were laid to rest a few months ago.

A short preliminary service at the residence of the deceased, 70, Brook-street, Grosvenor-square, was conducted by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, who, in kindly words, pointed some of the lessons of such visitations. He said that God means the loss of friends to be a gain to us—a call to Him, a warning, a beckoning us away from the world. A trial is not of itself a blessing, but it can be rendered so by the Divine chemistry of infinite wisdom. After prayer, Mr. Spurgeon read Ps. xc.—"A Prayer of Moses, the man of God." Written in the wilderness, in view of the fact that a whole generation of Israelites was doomed to die, this Psalm contains some statements which the enlightened Christian can rise far above. Contrasting it with the song of those whose sins have been borne by Christ, who has likewise robbed death of its sting, Mr. Spurgeon brought out many beautiful and timely thoughts. We do not go down to our graves by way of curse, as was the case with the children of Israel, but we go up to heaven. A blessing attends the departure of God's saints, and it is not death to die. Though it is true that "we spend our years as a tale that is told," yet we as certainly grip eternal things, and lay hold upon the substance of things hoped for. We live in God, and daily rejoice in Christ, who has become the food of our spirits.

Having also read Rev. vii. 9—17, Mr. Spurgeon spoke of Dr. Habershon's confidence in Christ. Taking to pieces his life and character, we may say that he was in whom was no guile. He was a true believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, with clear, bright, definite views as to the way of salvation. He not only knew he was saved, but how it was done, and could tell others of that wondrous system of Divine grace, which is at once the most scientific thing under heaven and the most simple thing a child can learn. Our friend was not only familiar with those deep truths on which our faith is based, but he grasped as well the truths of the outlook, for he looked for the coming, and the glorious appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. He was not as some, who think that doctrine trivial, and leave it in the background; the Lord's appearing was to him the bright hope that gilded the gloom of the present. We know how willing he was to serve his Lord and Master. If he were here, he would not, I am sure, have permitted me to say so much as I have about him. Dr. Habershon's hope rested upon the work of Christ completed ages ago. Now, instead of mourning, let us praise the Lord. Oh, what a mercy to say: "The battle is fought, and the victory is won—for ever."

IT IS ALL JOY WITH HIM,

and if he could have a wish, it would be that we should begin to joy with him even now. To some here his decease is a supreme loss, but to him it is a great gain. I think we may let any sorrow felt to-day be swallowed up in the congratulations which our faith would wave up to him—crowned, and, in his humble gratitude, uncrowning himself; singing, yet not to his own joy, but entering into the joy of his Lord: beholding the glory, but scarcely caring for it, but for Him who is the crown of the glory, and the centre of it all! On earth Christ is with us, in heaven we are with Christ; here we serve Him, there we "serve Him day and night in his temple"; here we joy in Him sometimes until we cannot tell whether we are "in the body or out of the body," there they know they are out of the body, but wait until the body shall be re-united to the perfect soul.

Our friend has a start of us somewhat. He has charged some of us to follow Him. There is no sure hope but in Christ. Our heaven is hereafter, but yet there is something in true godliness here. May we pledge him now that we will follow him. After prayer, some stanzas of the hymn "For ever with the Lord" were sung.

At the grave several passages from God's Word, expressing the ground of confidence and precious hope of the believer, were read by Mr. Shuldham Henry, and prayer offered by Mr. C. Russell Hurditch. A large number of friends attended, the cortège being made up of about twenty-five carriages. Next week we hope to give a portrait of Dr. Habershon, with a sketch of his very useful life.

A Visit to Earlswood.

The passenger by rail from the South Coast to London, when nearing Redhill Junction, cannot fail to be attracted by the stately block of buildings which a conspicuous board informs him is "the Earlswood Asylum for Idiots." Often had the notice met our eye, and evoked a tender pity for the suffering inmates; it was not, however, until an opportunity offered for a personal visit that the pathetic interest associated with this Institution and work of Christian charity could be fully realised.

Passing through the front gates, a carriage-drive conducts to a broad flight of steps leading to the entrance-hall. Within this part of the building are ranged works of art, manufactured entirely by the patients, whose ingenuity in certain directions is the more remarkable, when it is remembered that, in many instances, the mind is in every other respect inert, or only active to mislead. Perhaps the most noticeable object in the hall is a beautiful ship, constructed by a man whose only knowledge of shipbuilding was acquired by wandering off to the docks, and intently watching from day to day the various craft. He has a brother, also a patient, whose talent is displayed in crayon drawings of which an art student might well be proud.

After seeing the inmates at dinner, we proceeded to inspect the dormitories. About 600 are accommodated, the majority being elected by votes, and received free of charge; a few are private patients, and enjoy their own well-furnished apartments, and separate personal attendants, for which they pay as much as £250 per annum. The ordinary dormitories are everything that can be desired for the class of patients for whom they are provided. The rooms are large and lofty, with windows affording plenty of light and air, and overlooking a magnificent panorama of wooded slope and vale in whatever direction the eye may turn.

Later in the day, while walking in the lovely grounds surrounding the Asylum, we joined a group of girls sitting under the shade of some beautiful trees, being anxious to come into communication with the little ones, and ascertain how much intercourse they were capable of holding with the outside world. We were chiefly struck with the absence of fear; strange faces seemed to attract rather than repel—a sure proof that the training received was based on confidence and love. One painful feature was the great difficulty, and in some cases utter inability, to articulate intelligibly. But all were pleased to be touched, even if not spoken to; and we were told many possessed most affectionate natures, that would treasure for the rest of the day the remembrance of a pressure of the hand, or kind touch laid on the head.

At the time of our visit the girls were having a week's holiday; but at 2.30 p.m. afternoon school commenced for the boys (amongst whom, be it known, were bearded men), and also work at the various handicrafts. We were first ushered into the tailors' department, and were at once called upon to inspect a cloth coat, which, in our feminine judgment, was equal to the work turned out by any first-class establishment for the adornment of mankind. The clever workman was a really handsome man, with fine dark eyes and beard, good forehead, and intelligent features, which bore no outward sign of the sad want within. When first admitted, it was with the greatest difficulty that he could achieve a simple seam; but it was very encouraging to hear how in this and numerous other cases patient effort on the part of the kind instructors succeeds in bringing out into activity any latent talent which these poor afflicted ones possess. A fatherly interest was shown in the progress of the workers by their teacher, who seemed full of sympathy with them in their attempts, which at times were pitiful enough.

In other workrooms, mat, brush and basket making, carpentering and shoemaking, were all represented.

On entering the schools we were first introduced to the most advanced pupils. In this class were seated some dozen men and boys engaged in writing; some on slates, copying short sentences from a blackboard, others transcribing from printed books, while two were writing letters home. In the next class the scholars were less forward, but the master singled out one lad, who was a musical genius, and could play any air on the piano after hearing it once. It was touching to see a small man, with whiskers and moustache, come confidingly up to the teacher, and nestle his head against him, as one sees a little shy child do with its mother when shrinking from strangers. In the third class nothing could be taught but the simple discipline of sitting still; ranged all round the room were scholars of various ages, from children to grey-haired men, in attitudes of dull repose.

The schoolmaster, in kindly voice, summoned "Charles," and a man of middle age, with a full grey beard and really good-looking countenance, came forward. He recited, reverently and correctly, the opening verses of St. John's Gospel, and afterwards, without hesitation, repeated the same passage in the original Greek. He retains a smattering of several languages, all that remains to him of his earlier intelligence; for this man was not imbecile from his birth, but became this wreck of his former self from an attack of brain fever.

Truly it is a Christian task, which is fulfilled from day to day, in teaching and training these poor afflicted souls; bringing out every feeble, half-developed faculty—comforting them in their sorrows, allaying their groundless fears, leading them as little children, bearing their burdens, and so fulfilling the law of Christ.

THE PACIFIC GARDEN MISSION, 100E, Van Buren-street, has for twelve years been greatly blessed to the poor and outcast classes of Chicago. The report for the six months ending March 15 last states that during that period 301 meetings were held, with a total attendance of 55,000 persons. The spiritual interest has been deeper than ever before, over 3000 persons having professed to seek salvation. These were of both sexes and many nationalities, a large proportion of them being drinking men. Mr. George R. and Mrs. Clarke, the founders of the Mission, continue to throw heart and soul into the work; but they have been compelled to state that unless financial support is forthcoming the Mission cannot be carried on as hitherto. Mrs. Clarke continues to visit the county gaol; five evangelists work in harmony with the various churches; and many families have been made glad by reformed lives, while the angels of God have rejoiced over repentant sinners. We trust our American friends will see that this excellent Mission is carried on with increased vigour, rather than be allowed to languish through want of support.

For the Young.

THE PINK CONVOLVULUS.

BY EVA TRAVERS EVERED POOLE.

'WELL, I always gave the gardener credit for more wisdom!" cried a small plant, as it found itself carefully rooted out of its nursery pot, and, after being held between the finger and thumb of the gardener for full five minutes, planted down at the foot of an ugly brick wall.

The little plant gave a great gasp of despair as it lifted its head and took its first glance at its new surroundings. High above it towered the brick wall; some straggling holly bushes and laurels were its nearest neighbours—nowhere could it discover a single friendly face, or one of the little group of baby seedlings that had lived so long with it in the great pot that served them for a nursery.

Now, this little plant was a pink convolvulus, and a most graceful, beautiful flower. Although its rose-coloured blossoms have no fragrance, yet you children will agree with me that few flowers are more elegant in form or delicate in tint. Very often when autumn draws near, you and I have gathered the great white bindweed, and smaller rose-coloured species, from the hedges or the meadows. We thought how beautiful the large marble-like vases of the white convolvulus looked as they hung among the brown and yellow nut leaves and oak branches, and how fairy-like the tinier pink flowers seemed as they crept under the palings or amongst the golden dandelions gleaming in the grass by the wayside.

But our little friend was a garden species, although nearly allied to her commoner sisterhood.

A day or two passed by, and the pink convolvulus remained drooping and despairing. Well, it was not much use trying to live, for circumstances were so much against it. "Indeed," argued the despairing plant, "how could anyone grow in such a position?"

But after a most refreshing shower of rain, and a gentle kiss or two from a warm-lipped sunbeam, a strange feeling crept over the pink convolvulus. In its heart God had put a remarkable instinct of vegetation, peculiar to every climbing plant. It felt a desire to push outwards and upwards; delicate, little tendrils like filament fingers sprouted from its stem, and it reached about for something to hold on to.

Nothing but the brick wall met its groping, but there its tendrils fastened themselves firmly, first upon one, then another excrescence of the brickwork, and with a vigorous push the little plant launched itself forwards.

"Not so bad after all," it exclaimed, as it felt the strong support of the wall beneath it. "I shall make the best of it, and try to get on in spite of things being so against me. I'll show the gardener what I can do in the face of difficulties."

So resolved our little flower, and wisely too. It knew very little of its own nature, scarcely anything of its own powers, and I think you will agree with me it could be no judge at all of the gardener's wisdom. After all, he knew more about the plant than it knew about itself! A convolvulus wants difficulties; it really needs an incentive to climb. Try for yourself, if what I say is true. Place a prop within six inches of one of its young shoots, and day by day move it forwards a little. The shoot will reach it—or die; and the question becomes at last, which will tire first, the plant pressing forward, or you moving your stick!

There came a day when in its full beauty of foliage and gay-tinted flower the pink convolvulus hung in graceful festoons upon the ugly brick wall.

It was so firmly attached to the brickwork by hundreds of tiny tendrils that, although the breeze swayed it hither and thither, its hold never loosened for a moment. And in that day, older, wiser grown, the flower spoke out its thoughts.

"How foolish I was ever to complain of the gardener's wisdom and the brick wall! Why, it was the best place for me—the very place that suited my nature and disposition. My difficulties proved to be my stepping-stone upward. Day by day I used them to climb higher and higher, so, instead of hindrances, they became helps. Oh, where should I have been but for the brick wall, and the gardener's forethought? Grovelling down yonder—face to earth—only to be trampled on!" And the plant ceased talking, to open each pink cup wide, and to drink in the drops of pearly dew which had begun to fall. It knew how important the treasuring of each dewdrop was, for when the next day dawned, and the hot sun withered every leaf and blade, it could only be kept fresh and vigorous by the dew that lingered in the large leaf out of which its flower-cups sprang.

Turn from my pink convolvulus to your own heart, and find there all too often the same complaint. Are we not often tempted to doubt our Father's wisdom as He chooses for us our circumstances and place in life? A little child Christian sighs despairingly—

"Oh, I can't be good at school. There is so much to try me. Anywhere else I might grow in grace, and become like Jesus; but not here!"

A dear lad writes:—

"If you only knew my difficulties, you wouldn't be so hard on a fellow. Surely God doesn't expect one to confess Him, and to be out and out here!"

A young lady in a worldly home circle; a daughter hampered by a parent's wishes, and the duty of obedience to them; an invalid fretting against the prison walls of a sick-room; a mother with the incessant calls of young children upon her time, patience, and love; each echoes the cry of the convolvulus, each feels crushed and despairing and hopeless at times. They wonder why the circumstances are not changed, why the "brick wall" towers above and before them. They wonder if God has not made some little mistake in out-planning their life, and if they could not serve Him better elsewhere.

O! for the day when all of us, young and old, will give God credit for being infinitely wise, and loving, and kind; when we shall own that He has always done the very best for us!

If you have difficulties, use them. They are not meant to crush you, but to stimulate you. Let them be stepping-stones, and daily climb higher by means of them.

Throw out tendrils of faith, courage, patience, trust in Jesus, and grasp your difficulties. Don't stand looking at them. Determine, by God's help, that you won't let them crush all the life out of your soul; but mount on them heavenwards. Let your schoolfellows' mockery and taunts drive you closer to Jesus; let the worldly surroundings of your daily life, which might otherwise wither every leaf and blade of your spiritual growth, lead you to treasure more carefully the dewdrops of God's grace; let the prison walls of your sick-room be ladders up to heaven. Determine to make the best of things. Some day you will look back over life's way, and will say, like my pretty pink flower, when older, wiser grown:—

"How foolish I was ever to complain of my heavenly Father's wisdom, and the circumstances in which He placed me. Why, after all, it was the very best place for me. My difficulties really strengthened me, and nerved me to effort. God sent them to help, not to hinder me. Day by day I made use of them as stepping-stones heavenward. Oh, where should I have been but for my Father's love and forethought?"

I know where you would have been, young Christian. Down, down grovelling earthward, not growing upward. You would never have been "strong in the Lord and the power of his might" as you are now, but weak and feeble in faith and love and desire. Ah, yes! God knows best. God knows all, and we may let Him do just as He likes with us always, certain that He does wisely. So

> I will make of cares and griefs
> Fresh stepping-stones to Thee,
> Until I reach a height from whence
> They all look naught to me.

THE BUTTERFLY.

Seated alone in a mountain glen;
Oh! it seems so long ago!
I watched the water rushing by,
As it broke on the rocks below;

And the current of the past seemed stirred,
And floated out on the tide;
And nearer I crept to the water's brink,
And watched the eddies ride.

And down came the butterflies one by one;
Such a sight I had never seen, [brim,
For they hovered, and sipped at the sparkling
And flirted about on the green!

Till one pretty moth with such radiant wing,
Came nearer than all the rest,
It seemed to float on the swirling foam,
And drink at the bubbling crest.

I cannot tell why, but I felt as I gazed.
It was like some careless soul,
Who was playing about on a precipice,
Regardless of danger's goal!

(It was like myself, long years before,
When life's pleasures sparkled rare;
And my heart grew sad at the retrospect,
Of that wasted springtide fair!)

So I held my breath as it missed its flight,
Sucked in by the current, and toss'd!
Three times it fluttered to reach the shore,
Then a whirl!—it was swallowed!—was lost!

Only a butterfly! Ay, that may be!
Such was I near life's rushing river;
And who can tell what my fate had been,
If Grace had not held me ever—

If the Master who watched in the hidden nook.
Had not stretched his loving arm,
And drawn his child from the fatal brook,
And landed me safe from harm?

There are butterflies still in our daily path,
Who float o'er the vortex strong,
They advance and retreat from the magic maze,
Then list to the siren's song.

So now, as I sit by life's river's brink,
And watch careless souls flit by; [think?
I touch them, and say: "Will you stop and
"Lest you fare like my butterfly!"

YOUNG MEN IN AMOY.—A Y.M.C.A. was established at Amoy in March, 1888. Our membership when we closed our winter session in June last had risen from 55 to 90. Meetings have been held every alternate Tuesday, with an average attendance of 40. Weekly classes in English, medicine, and other subjects have been held for most of the session with a fluctuating attendance. On the whole, all connected with it have much cause for thankfulness to God for the starting and progress of the Institution.

The Question of the Hour:—Foreign Missions.

A LETTER FROM A CHINESE MISSIONARY.

MANY thanks for so kindly continuing to me the copies of your paper—the Lord bless and reward you; especially for the soul-stirring papers therein by "A Missionary," on "The Question of the Hour." I do not see that Mr. Stock's replies have at all affected the main force of Mr. Baldwin's papers, especially as it seems to me that Mr. Stock does not fairly represent Mr. Baldwin's statements in his reply; but at this distance it would not be well to enter into particulars. Some of our hearts have been deeply stirred by Mr. Baldwin's subject, and we are seeking from God that He will search our hearts and lives, and show us how, under present circumstances, we may get out of our old ruts and the traditions of the elders, into a closer following of the example of our Lord—the Apostle (or Missionary) and High Priest of our profession—who, though He was rich, yet for our sakes became poor; and the example of the great Apostle of the Gentiles, who said, "Even unto this hour we both hunger and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling place."

There is a paragraph in your paper of April 5 (p. 22) which is worthy of thought. It states the total number of foreign missionaries in China, including wives and female workers, as 1123; added to these, Chinese native workers, 1440; total number of workers, 2563, besides native unpaid workers. If we take from this 300 for European workers, not yet able to speak the language, it leaves 2263 Chinese and foreign workers; while the increase of converts during the year 1888 is only 2295, or about one convert during the year to each worker! Of course some allowance has to be made for the deficiencies made by deaths and expelled members. Yet surely this awfully small increase calls for searching inquiry, and shows that a mighty change needs to be made somewhere before our work can by any means compare with that of the early Christians. In addition to our number of workers, we must not forget that enormous numbers of books and tracts are distributed yearly (in one instance 9000 books were given away to students in Pekin on a single occasion), which surely have some share in the work. Now, while some workers have reaped many souls, it follows that a large number are probably fruitless.

I write with no desire to find fault, but in order that facts may stir up your hearts to cry to God to put us all right and show us where our hindrances lie. One fact we cannot well shut our eyes to; that is the wealth of the European, as compared with the resources of the native, missionary worker. The income of most European missionaries is usually ten, or even twenty times that of a native worker, who is often a literary man among his people. Hence the position of Paul towards the converts in Corinth (Cor. iv. 8—13) is exactly reversed here: "Already ye are filled, already ye are become rich, ye have reigned without us: yea, and I would that ye did reign, that we might reign with you....we are weak, but ye are strong; ye have glory, but we have dishonour...we toil, working with our hands." The missionary's house is a palace compared with the native ones around, and it is not easy to come down from our lofty pedestal. Our "social position," "national difference," "what we have been used to," are what is put as adequate excuses, while souls are going into eternity at the rate of "a million a month." Thank God for bright exceptions to this state of things. While some of us who have been awakened to it hardly know how to re-commence, let those who follow learn, by what we have largely failed in, to do better. I desire earnest and believing prayer that God may guide us, lest Satan get an advantage.

The work of conversions in this place is going forward, though not at all fast: thirteen baptized in the last three months. Several sick ones have been healed in answer to prayer, with only the means directed by the Lord in Mark xvi. and James v. May the Lord Jesus be glorified. The poverty in this place is very great among the natives.

Yours very gratefully,

CHARLES H. JUDD.

Harvest: An Evening Reverie.

IT is the even of an autumn day;
The golden sun is sinking in the west;
The weary reapers slowly plod their way,
All labour ended, to their peaceful rest;
And as, beside the heavy-laden wain,
With joyful hearts they wend their way along,
Forgetting toil, they greet the golden grain,
And bear it homeward with a joyful song.

Then come the gleaners with their shouts of glee,
Bearing their sheaves along the dusty road;
Pleased, as when homeward flies the merry bee,
Singing with joy beneath its golden load.
And, as the evening's shadows gather round,
The watchful mother from the cottage near,
Comes to the garden gate to catch the sound
That falls so sweetly on her listening ear.

The hardy labourer, glad his toil is o'er,
Feels thrills of joy within his bosom spring,
To greet his wife beside the cottage door,
And hear within the cheerful kettle sing.
His heart rejoices at the pleasant sound,
When seated snugly in his easy chair,
He sees his children throng the table round,
Whereon is spread their simple, frugal fare.

He laughs and frolics with his bonny boy;
His wife well-pleased her needle plies the while;
And, at each outburst of her darling's joy,
Looks from her work with an approving smile.
But soon the sleepy father nods his head;
The sounds of merriment and laughter cease;
The last fond kiss is given, "good-night" is said,
And all the happy household sleep in peace.

. . . . .

The twilight shadows deepen in the west;
The gleaners' cheery songs have died away;
The faintly tolling bell is hushed to rest
Amid the stillness of the dying day.

Musing, I sit within the fading light,
And sigh to find life's harvest nearly o'er,
Whilst I, who loved so well the sunshine bright,
Have reaped no golden sheaves to fill my store.

I said, as o'er the past my thoughts flew back,
"It ne'er was mine to reap the bounteous fields;
'Twas mine, alas! to mark the reaper's track,
And glean, in fragments, what the harvest yields."
And then I thought of all the years long gone,
Of clouded summers that were all too brief;
Of sunny days that flew too quickly on,
And left me still without one single sheaf.

Where have I reaped? Where have I gleaned to-day?
What have I gained through all my wasted years?
Nothing but worthless flowers that fade away,
And transient smiles to hide my secret tears.
The rosy morn of life was o'er too soon;
Its sunny moments flew so quickly past;
Scarce had I waked before I found it noon,
And evening's sombre shadows coming fast.

Seed time had gone, but nothing had I sown
Save flowering phantasies that please the eye,
That withered quickly ere their bloom was blown,
And when I prized them most began to die.
'Tis now too late to sow, the time is past;
Yet I may labour in the Master's fields;
For he who labours but one hour at last
May share, perchance, the fruits the harvest yields.

Lord, let me use the hours that still remain,
To glean whate'er I can to fill thy store;
To fill thy garner with the golden grain,
Ere night shall come, and gleaning time be o'er.
Accept my offering then, though small it be,
It is not mine I give Thee, but thine own;
And, kneeling low before Thee, urge the plea—
Not of my merit, but thy grace alone.

WILLIAM CARTWRIGHT NEWSAM.

REV. ROBERT LAWS, M.D., F.R.G.S.,

Pioneer of the Livingstonia Mission.

HAPPILY, in these latter days, the "city without walls" grows so fast that it is not possible for readers, however well disposed, to keep themselves informed about every point in the growing and widening circumference of the "wall of fire" (Zech. ii. 4, 5). We will, therefore, before telling our readers something about Dr. Laws, describe in few words the origin of the Mission to which he has devoted his life.

Nyasa is called a lake with geographical propriety, but the name might easily mislead us islanders. It has 14,220 square miles of area, is 350 miles long, and its breadth varies from 16 to 60 miles; so that it is in fact a great inland sea, the ninth in size of the inland seas of the world. Only two lakes in Africa are greater—Bangweolo, not yet touched by missions, and the great Victoria Nyanza, out of which the Nile flows. It is the most southern of the three lakes which form so remarkable a feature of the centre of Africa. Tanganyika begins 260 miles north of it, and stretches to within 200 miles of Victoria. Lake Nyasa is connected with the Indian Ocean by the Shiré, which flows out of its southern end and joins the Zambesi, a circumstance which must always give it special importance as a highway into Central Africa.

David Livingstone discovered the lake about 1859, and, at the first meeting of the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland after his death, it was resolved to found there a Mission that might perpetuate his name and carry forward the noble purpose of his life. Considerable enthusiasm and much prayer accompanied this resolution; and, while large results have already been obtained, the spirit of prayer and genuine devotedness is undiminished. The organising and equipping of the Mission occupied some months; and another of the churches of Scotland, the United Presbyterian, furnished the most prominent member of the pioneer staff which set forth in May, 1875.

(From Photograph by Mr. J. Lamb, 91, Holburn-street, Aberdeen.)

ROBERT LAWS comes of the old Puritan stock which gave Duff and Wilson, Hyslop and Anderson to India; Robert Moffat and David Livingstone to Africa. Nothing is grander in the modern development of the kingdom of Christ, and nothing, we may add, is more profoundly instructive, than the manner in which the deep spiritual life of our country, forced into narrow channels by generations of persecution and social restriction, has proved its connection with "the throne of God and of the Lamb" by flowing at length in life-giving streams to all parts of the desert earth. From his father, who still lives, honoured and useful, in Aberdeen, the future missionary derived thorough knowledge of the Word of God and those intense convictions of his personal relation to the Lord Jesus which form the only reasonable and enduring ground of missionary devotion. He was born May 28, 1851. Self-denial began early. With his mind made up to spend his life in the service of Christ among the heathen, Robert Laws was also resolved to go forth with the full status both of an ordained minister and of a qualified physician. It was in his favour that his home should be in a University city, where he could obtain the secular and theological training required; but, on the other hand, all the cost of his education must be furnished by the labour of his own hands. He wrought at his father's handicraft—the same which Joseph and the Lord Jesus followed at Nazareth—in order to support himself and pay college fees; and he added years to his life by a rigorous system of early rising, two or three hours a day being thus secured for study before the day's manual labour began. The titles which we have printed after his name were thus earned by the sweat of his brow as well as by the faithful use of his brain. And his experience as a carpenter has proved of great value to him in Africa.

Dr. Laws' heart is a grandly single one; full of love to the Saviour and to men for his sake; humble, prayerful, utterly undivided. His friends began to make discovery of this when he was serving, in 1874—5, as a medical missionary in Glasgow. Small-pox became epidemic, and the young physician threw himself readily into the work of the hospital, when others, naturally enough, shrank from the loathsome disease. Thus, when the Free Church resolved on its Livingstonia Mission, the sister Church was ready to take part in the work by furnishing the first missionary, fully equipped and wholly devoted. He was ordained at Aberdeen, April 26, 1875, the venerable Dr. Duff taking part in the solemn services. While the Free Church manages the Mission, and has given to it many workers, the United Presbyterian continues its loving share in it by providing Dr. Laws' salary.

It was on October 12, 1875, that Dr. Laws and his party entered Lake Nyasa. The manner of their entrance was significant. A little steamer of 40-horse power had been carried out in plates and up the Zambesi and Shiré to the Murchison Rapids, where a land portage of sixty-five miles is necessary. Arrived at the northern end of these rapids, the plates were put together, and the Ilala, named after the spot where Livingstone died, was launched on that career of much usefulness from which she has never rested these fourteen years. The pioneers saw, as they moved into the great mysterious sea, mountain ranges on either hand, with peaks rising to 8000 ft. and even 12,000 ft.; populous villages of from 6000 to 10,000 inhabitants at intervals on the shore; smaller villages but more numerous on the hills; shepherds, fishermen, field labourers, and some blacksmiths; fifteen tribes or nations, speaking different tongues, inhabiting the wide shores; all without exception in total ignorance of civilisation and of the Gospel.

Of course we cannot attempt to give, even in outline, the history of the Mission during these fourteen eventful years. We can only mention some striking results.

In 1886 we asked the Secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society how many of the languages of Africa had been reduced to writing since Livingstone died in 1873, and were surprised to learn that the number was fourteen. This did not include the Chinyanga language, which Dr. Laws found to be understood along the whole eastern shore of the Lake; for it was the National Bible Society of Scotland which printed an edition of the Chinyanga New Testament (2000 copies) in 1885. The translator came home in that year for the purpose of seeing it and certain catechisms and primers through the press; and in June, 1886, he returned, thankful for the past, resolute and hopeful for the future, a strong man every way, having accomplished much before reaching his thirty-fifth year. The impression he left on the minds of all who saw and heard him was of one who has the elements of true greatness.

Fourteen years is not a long period, and it is scarcely that since the Tidal "burst into that silent sea." The stations formed along its western shore, from Cape Maclear in the south to the Stevenson Road leading up to the Tanganyika plateau on the north, are six in number; there are ten schools with over seven hundred pupils; there are five Scottish missionaries and one (Mr. A. C. Murray) from the Cape Colony, four of whom are doctors as well as ministers; there are three teacher evangelists and three artisan evangelists, all from Scotland; there are four ladies working among the women and girls, wives of European missionaries; seven native Christians are doing mission work; and the contributions of the converts amounted in 1887 to £142 8s. 8d. The very greatest care is used in admitting candidates to baptism, so that the membership is as yet small; but the quality is good, as we shall see, and the progress made in education, along with the reducing of three other languages besides the Chinyanga to writing, furnishes the best hopes of future progress. There is a mission press at Bandawé, and a dictionary of the language has been printed.

In his delightful book, "Tropical Africa," Professor Drummond has made two or three short but emphatic references to what he saw during his visit:—

> The bright spot on Lake Nyassa is Bandawé—Dr. Laws' station—only a lodge or two in a vast wilderness, and the swarthy worshippers flock to the seatless chapel on Mhunga's Day, dressed mostly in bows and arrows. The said chapel, nevertheless, is as great an achievement in its way as Cologne Cathedral, and its worshippers are quite as much interested, and some of them at least to quite as much purpose. In reality no words can be a fit witness here to the impression made by Dr. Laws, Mrs. Laws, and their few helpers, upon this singular and apparently intractable material. A visit to Bandawé is a great moral lesson. And I cherish no more sacred memory of my life than that of a communion service in the little Bandawé chapel, when the sacramental cup was handed to me by the bare black arm of a native communicant—a communicant whose life, tested afterwards in many an hour of mist with me on the Tanganyika plateau, gave him perhaps a better right to be there than any of us.

On a later page Professor Drummond gives another glimpse of this man, Moolu, as "a commonplace black, who did his duty and never told a lie; and who, every night of the march, kept up a religious service with the men, addressing them with hearty earnestness and leading them in prayer." The consistency of his life made these efforts of Moolu respected and effective.

Another witness, Captain Lugard, with whom the writer had a long and interesting talk the other day, mentioned a case very similar—that of David, who had been sent to him as an interpreter by the workers at Blantyre. Like Moolu, David took every opportunity of preaching to his brethren, and his courage, faithfulness, and goodwill supplied a better warrant than ordination. He is, it seems, a stalwart giant, and a man of eager temper, which made a trial to which he was subjected the more severe. During his absence, suspicions arose as to the fidelity of his wife, which were ultimately proved to be not well founded; but the supposed seducer was David's enemy, and taunted him in a way hard to bear. David often came to his friend, Captain Lugard, for counsel about this sore trouble, and on one occasion he said, "You see, I could have killed that man easily"—very easily indeed, the Captain says—"but I am a Christian now, and I cannot do that."

The African Lakes Company followed the Livingstonia Mission in 1878, one purpose of its founders being to supply the missionaries with a means of communication with the world outside. This purpose has been admirably served, and the company has brought up the Charles Janson, a steam vessel, for the Universities Mission on the western shores of Nyassa, and the Good News, for the London Missionary Society to Tanganyika. It has founded eleven trading stations on the route from Quilimane to the Stevenson Road, and begun profitable and lawful trade. But for a year and a half now its agents have been attacked by the Arab slave hunters, who see plainly enough that their cruel and wicked practices cannot be carried on where lawful commerce exists. The position of the missionaries has thus become very painful and critical. They remain strictly non-combatants, and their work prospers; but a terrible uncertainty hangs over both their work and their lives. When Dr. Laws was at home, we asked him whether he came into contact with the slave trade, and his reply was, "One morning I went to the school and found no scholars, although the day before there had been plenty. At length one boy drew near, and I asked the reason. 'Have you not heard of So-and-so?' naming a girl of twelve, bright and comely, who had on the previous afternoon brought her piece of sewing to the teacher neatly folded, bidden her good bye, and gone off, tripping lightly with two companions, to her home only three miles distant. 'No,' I said; 'what of her?' 'Oh, she and her companions were seized on the way home and carried off in an Arab dhow to the other side of the Lake.' No wonder parents were chary of sending their children to school for a while."

The position is now much worse, and the letters that come home are heartrending. Captain Lugard, who had gone out for his health's sake after severe service in Burmah, was at Karonga's when the Arab attack began, and generously gave the Scotchmen and the many natives under their protection the benefit of his professional skill in defending their lives. In this service he was shot through both arms, and he has come home to consult with friends here as to what can be done. We asked his opinion about the missionary work he saw at Blantyre, and Bandawé, and Karonga's, and his answer, given with much emphasis, was, "My opinion is very high; very high indeed. The work is genuine." Then he told us the story of David, and spoke warmly of Dr. Kerr Cross, to whose skill he owes the restored use of his arms, and of the pleasure and profit of weeks spent with the Laws at Bandawé, and with Clement Scott and his companions at Blantyre.

Mrs. Laws—sister of Dr. Gray, of Rome—a whole-hearted and able worker, went out to join her heroic husband in 1879, the first white woman to enter that region of Central Africa. Her influence for good has been very great, and several ladies have taken heart from her example. So that, if once the monstrous Arab element could be eliminated, a very hopeful future lies before the Livingstonia Mission. Captain Lugard joins heartily in the words of Professor Drummond: "I will say of these missionaries, and count it an honour to say it, that they are brave, efficient, single-hearted men, who need our sympathy more than we know, and are equally above our criticism and our praise."

May we hope, and indeed ask, that what we have written may secure for Dr. Laws and his companions—men and women in the prime of life and labouring for Christ in circumstances of special trial—an interest in the prayers of those "that are the Lord's remembrancers" (Isa. lxii. 6, R.V.)? Let them not be forgotten by those who read this little sketch.

Since the foregoing words were written, a letter from Mr. Laws, in Aberdeen, says:—"The last good news from Bandawé was that four young lads, one middle-aged man, and three children, had been baptised. Twenty-two, including three adults and three from the steamer, sat down together at the Lord's Table; and these young men are the first-fruits of various tribes. Tried faith is precious faith."

Still later, a telegram has brought news which does not seem good at first. Rev. R. Bain, another hero, who has been holding the fort in Nyasaland for six years, has died of fever at Bandawé, when on the eve of returning to this country for his health's sake.* He was about to leave when the troubles with the Arab manstealers began, but turned back to help his brethren, white and black, in their time of trial. As Dr. George Smith says, in sending the sad news, "The Lord knows his own work as well as his own people;" and, as good old Mr. Laws says, "Tried faith is precious faith."

* A fuller account of Mr. Bain will be found in The Christian for August 2.

KESWICK.—Amongst the C.M.S. benefactions acknowledged this month is one of £100 "In Memory of the Keswick Convention."

NORTHFIELD CONVENTION.—3.

AMONG those who visit Northfield year after year, and take part in the Conference, is Dr. L. V. Munhall, the evangelist; he is a man of thorough-going views, which he expresses in a very vigorous way. He gave one day a highly stimulating address on "The Second Advent as the Blessed Hope of the Church." Another very interesting utterance was one by Rev. N. S. Gumbart, of Brooklyn, on "How to make an Object Lesson." He desires to reach the heart through the eye, and brings to his aid botany, chemistry, magnetism, &c., illustrating truth by experiments. Take, for instance, a magnet to the desk (he said), and illustrate the attraction of the Cross. It will draw a crooked nail as quickly as one that is straight. Show the children that the magnet will not draw gold—how the Church lost its grip by devotion to the world.

During the closing days of the Convention, Dr. Monro Gibson, of London, was a chief speaker, and proved to be a great favourite. His main theme was the Bible, in its wonderful structure, and the unity of purpose that runs through both Old and New Testaments. His address on this fascinating subject has been given at various times in this country, and was reported by us in some detail when he delivered it to the open-air preachers.

THE CLOSING DAY.

Sunday, August 11, was packed with services. At six in the morning a prayer-meeting was held in Stone Hall. Long before the hour of morning service, the streets were filled with teams driving in from ten miles round, and with guests of the Conference, all wending their way to the new church. That building was packed, many standing through the entire service. It was the universal testimony that Mr. Moody has seldom spoken with more tenderness and power than in his well-known discourse on "Qualifications for Christian Service." The points on which he dilated with marvellous energy were faith, courage, enthusiasm, perseverance, and love; his words came home with all the more force to those who know how pre-eminently he possesses the qualifications he urged on others. Some of his illustrations from personal experience were extremely pathetic. In his closing prayer, it seemed as if God spoke through him, and the listeners were awed as if before the burning bush.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, and missionaries from various fields, representing the great work of consecrated souls, filled up the afternoon and evening, rousing the great audience to a deeper consecration to the work of saving a lost world.

The Conference this year has brought together a larger number of representative men and women of the Christian world than has ever assembled here before. The subjects discussed have had a wider range. Personal responsibility to God for talents, the necessity of living a holy life, have been forcibly presented.

At this Conference, men and women from foreign and home lands, representatives of many important benevolent organisations, are given an opportunity to present their various claims, and to show their great need of help, and receive from Mr. Moody the most hearty public endorsement. Yet, when friends would speak of the imperative need of help for the Schools at Mount Hermon for boys, and the girls' Seminary, not a word of appeal would he allow. Young men and women are clamouring for admission, and hundreds have yearly to be rejected, because there is no room. The tuition and board at each school is but one hundred dollars a year, and it is purposed that this charge shall never be exceeded. Of course the annual expenses exceed the receipts, and the deficiency must be met by gifts of friends. The schools, while doing a grand work with present appliances, demand material help, in order to the greatest efficiency. Mr. Moody should be relieved of all anxiety as to the financial condition of these schools so dear to his heart. They have a right to an endowment which shall place them above all present and prospective need. Already they have sent out young men and women who are doing blessed service.

A correspondent of The New York Evangelist writes a somewhat critical notice of the Conference, in the course of which he says:—"A clergyman from Chicago, who announced as his theme 'Truths for the Times,' astonished the Conference by palpably socialistic utterances. He declared the old Gospel sufficient for the individual, but not for society. He justified strikes indiscriminately, and called on Christian people to sympathise with them. He quoted Henry George with approval. Indeed he plainly intimated publicly what he avowed privately, that he is a Communist. Mr. Moody was urged to repudiate such sentiments, or get some one to do it; but he declined on the ground that it would call out 'cross-fire.' We are able to say positively, however, that he has not the least sympathy with such notions, nor apparently had the Conference: for the speech alluded to fell flat, and a subsequent remark disapproving strikes was greeted with quick applause.

"The bulk of the Conference were, no doubt, engaged in City Missions and other forms of Christian work among the poor and lowly. This probably accounts for the fact that criticism of the churches, and even flings at them, were evidently enjoyed, and such flings were not infrequent. The feeling seemed to be that the churches are actually stumbling-blocks in the way of Christian work, and their pastors doing little or nothing to reach and save men. One heard this view freely expressed in conversation. There was an evident disposition to 'give it to the churches.' We heard one gentleman say that if he could have his way, he would burn up one of the leading churches in New York city (naming it), collect the insurance, and build three or four mission chapels!

"The implication, if not the direct assertion, has been that the Church is indifferent to the 'lapsed masses.' No lesson was more plainly taught by the Conference than that we should cordially recognise each other's work, and co-operate, without jealousy or suspicion, or invidious reflections. The Church could not dispense with its godly and zealous evangelists; nor could the evangelists carry on their work without the churches.

"The spiritual tone of the Conference is always high, and at times rises to a contagious fervour. Mr. Moody emphasised the fact that we were gathered to get an enduement of power for service. He pointed out the way, and the prayers ran steadily in that channel. The last few meetings were marked by much solemnity. There was zeal that a prayer-meeting at six o'clock in the morning could not chill; and it cannot be doubted that hundreds of Christians have had their faith vastly strengthened, and will be more intelligent and efficient servants of Christ for these days at Northfield."

THE ORPHAN HOME FOR LITTLE GIRLS, Burgos House, Sydenham-road, North Croydon, first opened in 1885, has had in all fifty-nine inmates. The histories of these little ones have in a number of cases been very sad, in some cases fatherless, in others motherless. During last year seventeen children were admitted, and six went forth to service; one of these has since been taken charge of by friends, while the rest are doing well in their situations, and giving satisfaction to their employers. Special needs of the Home at the present time are detailed in the annual report, which may be had from Mrs. Smith, the superintendent.

THE GOSPEL IN BRITTANY.

THE reality and importance of the work of Pastor Lecoat and his devoted wife in Brittany, is becoming more patent as the Breton Evangelical Mission steadily expands. For some time past a great need has been a mission-hall at Brest, and at last this has been supplied, the noble contributions of the poor Bretons being supplemented by liberal assistance from kind friends in England. The opening proceedings, a few days ago, were as encouraging as they were truly interesting. The pretty wooden building was crowded with men, women, and children, who listened with breathless attention to the addresses which were delivered.

Mr. Lecoat had a word for everybody—for the English visitors present, for the French people, and also for his much-loved Bretons. He told the story of Gospel work in Brest, and also delightfully discoursed upon the Gospel itself. The friends of the Mission said a hearty "Amen" to his hopes that the room would be blessed to many—that the preaching of the Gospel therein might be the means of the deliverance of large numbers from sin, ignorance, and superstition, and their introduction to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. The simple peasants themselves, who made up a goodly proportion of the audience, seemed quite charmed with the glad message, as it was so powerfully declared to them in their own tongue. Madame Lecoat also made a speech which went straight to the heart, and interpreted a few kindly remarks by Mrs. Alfred Ball, who has put the Mission under heavy obligations.

The attention of the people was marked throughout, but it became real joy on the announcement being made that in a very few weeks they would have the entire Bible in their own language—as now being brought out by the Trinitarian Bible Society. The chairman, M. Bougourd, of Guernsey, delivered an earnest address in French, appealing to the Bretons to give their hearts to God. Some of the children present had learned portions of Scripture for repetition on the occasion, and, although this part of the programme had to be abandoned, the little ones afterwards repeated the several passages in the hearing of friends of the Mission. A lady who was present writes: "Our hearts were very full, and we came away praising our King, who hath done such great things for these poor Romanists, and fully believing that He will incline the hearts of many more to help on this blessed work, which has his glory for its sole end." Communications respecting the work may be addressed to the Hon. Secretary of the London Committee, Rev. Dr. Bullinger, 7, St. Paul's-churchyard.

CAPE GENERAL MISSION.—Mr. Spencer Walton writes from Madeira that his little band of workers have had a fair passage so far. They were hoping to have a season of daily Bible study after leaving Madeira, and also to have opportunities of Gospel work.

THE NUN OF KENMARE AND CONVENTS.—A writer in The Christian Irishman says:—I never reckoned myself among the ardent admirers of the "Nun of Kenmare." After reading her autobiography, my feelings towards Miss Cusack are not a bit warmer. To all those Anglicans who are playing at sisterhoods—to Archdeacon Farrar and the rest—I would unhesitatingly recommend the perusal of this autobiography of the Nun of Kenmare, in which she lays bare a good deal of conventual life. They will there see that within the convent walls—not in one place, but in every place—there is as much of human nature at its worst as there is without them. Narratives of scheming, lying, envying, tyranny, hypocrisy, and insinuations of something far worse than these, make up Miss Cusack's record of conventual life; and it is to be remembered that she had not broken with Rome when this book was written, but was under the special commendations of the Pope. Let him that readeth understand.

An East End Free Library.

THAT the Bethnal Green Free Library is a very useful institution, exercising a highly salutary influence in the East-end of London, has come to be known far and near. A still more gratifying fact is that the reading-room is a centre of Christian instruction, and the lecture-hall a place where men's minds are informed in such a manner as to open them to the reception of spiritual truth. The publicans of the district have lost many customers during the twelve years the Library has been opened, and Christian workers have rejoiced to testify to steady and remarkable improvement in the lives of the people.

An institution which has an open door for the poorest man who may be disposed to consult the newspapers or read wholesome books must be a blessing to the community; popular science lectures, and talks on the many subjects which relate to life and its concerns, cannot but be beneficial to the many thoughtful, stay-at-home poor of an East-end parish. How much more definite, however, is the usefulness of the Free Library, when it is viewed as the college of the little army of resident Christian workers! We are glad to be able thus to include the modest little building which stands near the junction and station on the Great Eastern Railway as an important

CENTRE OF CHRISTIAN INFLUENCE.

Scripture readers and Sunday-school teachers, city missionaries and open-air preachers, Bible-women and other workers in the cause of Christ, are among the thousands who are benefited by the institution. They have the freest access to the commentaries and other theological books, as well as the periodicals which assist and encourage them in their labours. On Friday nights these visitors are generally present in strongest force, and a section of the reading-room is reserved for them, and supplied with writing materials. Here studies are prosecuted which have their fruition in the Sunday sermon, plain talk, or Bible lesson. The assemblage of these earnest workers, bent upon the gathering up of thoughts for the highest of purposes, is something beautiful to think about. Still more impressive is the fact that, in helping the cause of Christ, the Free Library more than justifies its existence as a philanthropic institution. The secretary and librarian, Mr. G. F. Hilcken, who from the first has had the noblest ends well in view, is ever ready to assist this interesting class of "readers," by directing their attention to the right sources of information and thought.

Moreover, the members of local young men's societies know that on whatever subject they may propose debates, knowledge may easily be procured from the Library. Should a discussion on (say) temperance be imminent, no one need tell Mr. Hilcken, for he is made aware of the coming fray of words and opinions by applications for the latest and best books on the subject. Again, some young man undertakes to read a paper on "Smoking: Is it Injurious?" All the books on the topic are at once brought out. The probability is that healthy exchange of thought in the district would be greatly reduced were the Free Library closed.

A SPLENDID BAND OF YOUNG MEN

use the place, greatly to the encouragement of those who have its best interests at heart. They assemble in evening classes for Bible study, New Testament Greek, shorthand, wood-carving, book-keeping, and other purposes. One young man who began to read on Christian evidences at the Library went through a course of theological training, and is now a minister of the Gospel. Others hope to follow him, and are receiving careful attention, while advanced readers are furnished with introductions to the Library of the British Museum. Lads who have nowhere to go during the winter evenings are also welcome, and by attractive books they are made to love reading. They are thus kept from evil courses, and prepared in due time to enter the advanced classes. The decidedly evangelical books and periodicals of the institution are, we are pleased to learn, largely sought after.

From a beginning of 500, the library has grown to 20,000 volumes, publishers and authors having willingly contributed to fill the shelves. With the good Lord Shaftesbury as an early supporter, and Lords Aberdeen and Kinnaird among present active sympathisers, the Library has had influential friends. It is hoped that increasing prosperity is in store, and that the scheme for the erection of a larger building will be pushed forward with all speed. The present lecture-hall and reading-rooms are much too small, and the accommodation for books is quite inadequate. Some substantial promises have been made towards the needed £10,000.

THE WOMEN AND GIRLS

are not overlooked in the admirable arrangements. One of the most successful classes is that in which factory lasses are taught to use the needle. At work in the factory they cannot learn this, and in many of their homes sewing is a neglected art. The sewing class was opened in response to a request from some of the girls themselves, and the only available room could at any time be filled twice over. Some have done very creditable work after six months' instruction. Other young girls, who would be in the way, and perhaps unhappy also, at "home," are gathered in evening classes and taught to read.

Some of the lectures delivered under the auspices of the National Health Society have been a great attraction to the women of the neighbourhood, who have thereby received instruction calculated greatly to benefit their children. Occasional musical evenings have sent all classes home in good spirits, benevolent visitors from the West-end having attended, and sustained the honours of entertainers on several occasions.

The work is good all round, and as successful in operation as it is pure in motive. The institution is philanthropic, not religious; yet philanthropy, begotten of Christianity, helps religion in more ways than we have been able in this short sketch to specify. Though serving all the purposes of a public library, the institution has no subsidy from public sources, but is maintained by voluntary contributions. To cap other acts of generosity, the committee makes grants of books and periodicals to workhouse infirmaries, workmen's clubs, coffee-houses, police-stations, Sunday-schools, small libraries, and other institutions. Of course it could not give unless it first received, and we are happy to find that, from the Queen on the throne to the poorest of the people, presents are occasionally sent. We advise such of our readers as can visit this interesting library to do so by appointment with the courteous librarian, who will unfold to them a tale, and, maybe, show them sights, which will greatly refresh them in the service of Christ.

MISS MITTENDORFF'S ORPHAN HOMES at Epsom are, as is well known, sustained by the loving gifts of those who fear Him who is the Father of the fatherless. At this time of year, when many friends are travelling, the good work is likely to be somewhat overlooked. Miss Macgrath, who manages during the continued illness of Miss Mittendorff, simply trusts the Lord to supply the daily needs, so helpers are not actively looked up. We have, however, been informed that of late the little ones have learned to appreciate the significance of the prayer, "Give us this day our daily bread." The living has, in fact, been "from hand to mouth," and a few days ago no bread could be bought, as there was no money in hand. We are sure that the present want of the fatherless will be supplied as soon as it becomes known to our readers.

LONDON YOUNG WOMEN.

LAST year's report of work in connection wit the London Young Women's Christian Asso ciation describes much earnest endeavou attended by encouragement more real and dee than can be recorded. The operations of th Association are as varied as are the needs girl-life in the Metropolis, and, as fresh develop ments take place, the membership goes o increasing.

The several Homes connected with the Asso ciation are proving very useful. One has bee opened opposite one of the chief entrances t the Paris Exhibition, 40, Avenue Suffren. Her the bar-girls, waitresses, and Exhibition em ployées are gathered for pleasant evenings, an also on Sunday afternoons. The Factory Helpers Union has greatly prospered. On all hand doors are open to ladies who will visit factorie and laundries. The short service, with hym and Gospel address, in the workrooms, week b week, has been used to bring many a careles one to a knowledge of the truth, and the heart welcome given by the employers, as well as b the girls, proves that the influence brought t bear is really bringing forth fruit. The educa tional work is full of interest, and technica instruction is by no means overlooked.

Under the head of protective work, the Asso ciation reckons the Park Mission, Employment Agencies, Travellers' Aid, Restaurant and Public-house Visitation. The park visitors go after the stray girls so often found friendless and homeless in the parks, just dismissed from a situation, or newly arrived from the country, waiting for something to turn up. Invited to meetings, these young women find safe friends, and are guarded from the dangers of city life. The policemen, also, have cards to give girls they come across needing help, and many a one have they befriended by sending them to the Institutes. After reviewing other operations, the report says: "What we desire for every girl who comes into contact with us is that she may see and feel what Christ can do for her. We wish to supply our shops with better assistants, our work-rooms with better work-girls, and our factories with purer factory girls. We wish to remove the reproach often cast at our Christian land, that employers do not care for the employed. As Christians, we do care."

Many members of the Association take an active part in helping on the protective work. Although there are a number of labourers who thus throw heart and soul into endeavours to secure the salvation of London girls, there are certainly none too many. Indeed, the needs of the Association are manifold and various, and those who can help will receive into their own bosom a great blessing for all they do in the name of Christ, and for the good of our daughters. If there are grounds of cheer, there are also causes of discouragement, but the workers do not allow themselves to be daunted by these. Copies of the report and other information may be had from the Secretaries, 16a and 17, Old Cavendish-street, W.

JESUITS IN CANADA.—A very rousing address on this subject was lately given by Rev. John Mackie, of St. Andrew's Church, Kingston, Ontario. Towards the close he said: "Jesuits are no terror to us. We fear them no more than the Prime Minister of Canada fears them. We know them, their oath, their artifices, their morals, their ends. Their history will be repeated. They will be foiled, and beaten, and driven from our midst as the emissaries of Satan; but we are determined that, knowing them, we shall not exemplify the fool, and invest them with power to harass and annoy and hinder us in the diffusion of the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ, the only and all-sufficient Saviour and one Mediator between God and man, and so retard for centuries the true prosperity and glory of the land and the coming of the kingdom of Christ."

Personalia.

Mr. E. J. Mather has resigned his position s Director of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.

The late Sir W. McArthur.—Rev. Thomas I'Cullagh, an ex-President of the Wesleyan Conerence, is busily engaged preparing the biography f the late Alderman Sir William McArthur.

Rev. F. B. Meyer is back at his post at Regent's Park Chapel, looking fresh and well rowned after his Norwegian trip, and a stay among he Ross-shire hills at Strathpeffer. He is one of he speakers at the Carlisle Convention this week.

Misses Leitch have succeeded in raising over 0,000 dollars in Great Britain and the United States for Jaffna College, a school for training ative missionaries in Ceylon. Of this amount 0,000 dollars were given by a personal friend of he ladies in America.

Rev. Dr. Fulton is now on his way to the United States, but hopes to return to this country nd resume his crusade against Romanism. Before eaving he addressed some large and interested atherings at Liverpool. A friend has given him £25 to help in distributing his book, "Why Priests Should Wed."

Dr. Pentecost has arranged to give another ear to Gospel work in Scotland. He hopes to ommence the autumn campaign at Newport-on-Tay about the 20th inst., and his engagements xtend to the close of May next. In another olumn will be found some account of his open-air ervices

Rev. Dr. Doudney, vicar of St. Luke, Bedminster, Bristol, has entered on the jubilee year of his editorial labours in connection with The Gospel Magazine. Dr. Doudney's predecessor, Mr. Walter Row, was editor for forty-three years. Rev. Augustus Montague Toplady (author of the "Rock of Ages") was editor in 1775-76, and wrote wenty-four hymns for its pages. From its commencement in 1766, this magazine has been conducted on Protestant and evangelical principles.

Rev. Dr. Alex. Robb, once a missionary at Old Calabar, West Africa, in connection with the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, and who as for the last twelve years been labouring at Kingston, Jamaica, as pastor of St. John's Church, and principal of the U.P. College, is at present in Scotland, where he has come previous to going to settle in Australia. When he was leaving Jamaica recently, the Kingston Presbytery expressed deep regret at parting with Dr. Robb, and testified to the high esteem in which he was held for his personal worth, his attainments, and his labours in Jamaica and in Africa.

Bishop Sargent, of Tinnevelly, has been more than fifty years a missionary, and, though he is now in great physical weakness, his heart is still aflame with the old passion. Looking back, he says, he has no regret at having spent his life in Indian mission work. He declares that he would gladly give ten thousand lives to the same toil if he had them. A retrospect of fifty years in Tinnevelly reveals enough progress, he thinks, to make all faithful men thank God and take courage. The grand old worker is still "at it," so far as his enfeeblement will allow, and is waiting joyfully that summons from his Master which cannot long delay.—Harvest Field.

Mr. John Kensit, the well-known Protestant bookseller of Paternoster-row, in his crusade against Romanism and Ritualism, has come into conflict with Mr. Labouchere. The editor of Truth declared in a recent issue that Mr. Kensit ought to be prosecuted for publishing a pamphlet called "The High Church Confessional," in the same way as Mr. Vizetelly was prosecuted and sent to prison for publishing translations of Zola's works. Thereupon Mr. Kensit wrote requesting an apology under threat of legal proceedings. In last week's Truth, however, Mr. Labouchere returns to the charge, and in a three-column article declines to apologise, stigmatises the pamphlet, and finally again calls upon the Vigilance Committee to prosecute. The Record points out that the case of Mr. Kensit bears no analogy to that of Mr. Vizetelly. Mr. Kensit in his pamphlet has only quoted a passage here and there—and by no means the worst that could be selected—from "The Priest in Absolution," with the obvious intention of warning the public at large of the polluting character of the Confessional. Meanwhile Mr. Labouchere's attack is giving a strong impetus to the sale of the pamphlet, which is now in its eighth edition.

Dr. Cunningham Geikie, of Norwich, author of the "Life of Christ," is now writing the suggestive Jottings for The Sunday School Times, in place of the late Rev. Dr. Alfred Edersheim.

Mrs. Frederika Nielson, a gifted Norwegian actress, who determined after her conversion to devote her gifts to evangelistic work, is now (says an American paper) evangelising with the Norwegian-Danish church at Oakland, California.

Miss Dow, daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, is an invalid. For years she has been confined to her chair. During this time she has studied and mastered the French, German, Spanish, Russian, and Greek languages, and can read equally well in each.

Dr. Samuel Crowther, the negro bishop of the Niger, West Africa, is expected in England again shortly; the chief object of his visit will be to confer with the committee of the C.M.S. as to proposed changes in the missionary arrangements of his diocese.

The late Rev. G. Wade Robinson.—Mr. Robt. Wilson, Broughton Grange, Carlisle, writes to The Life of Faith:—"I would ask you to state that the family of our late brother, Rev. Wade Robinson, of Brighton, author of some of the sweetest Convention hymns, is in circumstances in which some kind and loving help would be acceptable. Any pecuniary aid sent to me will be duly acknowledged."

Dr. Monro Gibson, says The New York Evangelist, has come among us for a little, by way of a respite from his many and successful labours at home, and in order to revive his pleasant memories of us, when formerly a pastor in Canada, and later of the Second Church of Chicago. He preached to large congregations, considering the season, in the Fifth-avenue Church (Dr. John Hall's). Dr. Gibson will be warmly welcomed wherever he goes, and it may be, will be again invited to take up his home among us.

Rev. J. Jones, late missionary of Maré, Loyalty Islands, is expected soon to return to his family in Sydney. Notwithstanding the inability of the French Government to substantiate the absurd charges laid against him, and the complete clearance of Mr. Jones's character, the French authorities veto his return to his station, from which he had been so unjustly and roughly expelled, and refuse to grant him any compensation for the wrongful act of their representatives at Noumea. They merely promise to make inquiry regarding his property left at Maré.

Dr. Macfadyen, of Chorlton-road Congregational Church, Manchester, is sketched both by pen and pencil in the September Quiver. "His work," says the writer, "is extensive and varied. Judging from the number and diversity of the institutions of the church, and also the number of denominational and ecclesiastical organisations with which he is connected, we should say that Dr. Macfadyen is a most laborious and persistent worker. His power of organisation is very great, and in all his arrangements he is very methodical. In his pastoral work he makes a point of visiting the families of his large congregation of 1400 persons at least once in every year."

Dr. Alex. Maclaren.—Rev. Dr. Cuyler, in a letter to The New York Evangelist, tells of a visit to this Manchester "prince of preachers." He says:—"The Doctor wears no pulpit robes, not even a clerical white necktie. He does not look old for three and sixty; his thin face has become broadened and browned by his trip to Australia. For about forty minutes, without a line of manuscript, he poured forth a bright, pure, clear stream of devout and quickening thought—like one of the crystal rivulets of his own Scotch Highlands. Dr. Maclaren devotes but little time to pastoral duties, gives his whole thought to a single discourse on the Sabbath, and 'strikes twelve' every time he enters his pulpit. One of these days he may be induced to visit his thousands of readers and admirers in America."

Rev. J. D. Kilburn, since leaving St. Petersburg, has been travelling in Esthonia, Livonia, and Finland. He purposes spending the present winter in trying to help scattered workers in the North, and in preaching in neglected places. He lately preached on two Sundays to the little English colony in Tammerfors, where there had been no English service for more than four years. Mr. Kilburn has been seeking in every place to arouse a deeper interest in the spiritual welfare of the young and to promote Christian union.

DR. PENTECOST IN SCOTLAND.

DR. PENTECOST has continued his outdoor addresses to non-churchgoers in Edinburgh and neighbourhood. On Sabbath afternoon, August 24, he took up his position on the beach at Portobello. The people stood on the sands and promenade, and made a very large assemblage. The change of scene from the Queen's Park, in which he preached on previous Sabbaths, had a significance which was discerned by some of his friends, and indicated in his preaching. As the services at the Queen's Park, with its imposing natural surroundings, were suggestive of the Sermon on the Mount, so the meetings on the shore at Portobello, in view of the broad expanse of the waters of the Forth, brought to mind scenes in which the Son of Man was the central figure on the margin of Gennesaret's Lake. The suggestiveness of these movements was further emphasised by the fact that last Lord's Day the Gospel message was delivered in the highways and byways of men, as far as they are represented in the streets of the Canongate.

At Portobello the discourse was based on 1 Cor. xv. 1, "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the Gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand." A deluge of rain compelled a shortening of the address, and precipitated a hasty retreat by preacher and people. At Canongate, Dr. Pentecost spoke from a waggonette at the top of Jeffrey-street, facing the old site of the Netherbow, famous, not only as an old landmark, but as the place where the heads of so many Scottish martyrs were displayed for the public edification and warning. He chose as his subject the story of the Pharisee and the publican, and the discourse was highly appreciated by a large congregation.

COMING CONFERENCES.

THE autumnal provincial Conference of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union will be held at Edinburgh on Saturday, Sept. 21. There will be district meetings in the chief centres of the south and east of Scotland, and on the Lord's Day special sermons will be preached in the leading churches of the city. On the three following days various phases of temperance work among the young will be the subject of discussion at several meetings in the Waverley Hall, Waterloo-place.

The Salisbury Conference will be held on September 23 to 27, in the Maundrel Hall. The subjects for the morning Conference will be: (a) the calling of the saints; (b) the patience of the saints; (c) the inheritance of the saints. The evenings will be devoted to: (a) the believers in Christ—safety; (b) Christ in the believer—power; (c) the believer with Christ—glory.

The Manchester Convention has been fixed for October 29, 30, and 31, in the Conference Hall, Strangeways. The subject chosen is "The Life of Faith;" the first day to be devoted to heart-searching, humiliation, and confession before God as a preparation for the life of faith; the second day to a consideration of the life of faith and its conditions; and the third day to "How this life may be entered upon, and its growth and progress maintained."

The first annual Christian Conference for the deepening of spiritual life will be held in St. Paul's Church room, Dorking, from October 7 to 11. The opening sermon will be on the Monday in St. Paul's Church at 8 p.m.; the praise meeting on the 11th in the Church room. Revs. J. J. Luce, H. G. Thwaites, and others have promised to be present. Circulars of the Conference will be sent to anyone applying to Rev. H. C. Sturdy, The Vicarage, St. Paul's, Dorking.

Final arrangements have been made for the Church Congress at Cardiff, to be held on the first four days of October. The special services will be held at St. John's, St Mary's, and St. Andrew's churches; the preachers being respectively the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Derry, and the Bishop of Lichfield. The notable laymen among the selected speakers are Professor Sir G. Stokes, M.P. (President of the Royal Society), Mr. Lewis Morris, Mr. W. L. Courtney and Mr. Edward Terry. Mrs. Henry Kingsley will speak on "The Church's Care of Children."

THE CLAIMS OF CHILI.

We have received from the Chili Mission of the American Presbyterian Church an appeal for prayer on behalf of that South American Republic which we earnestly commend to our readers. The writer says:—

"We gratefully acknowledge past blessings, and are thankful for the achievements and concessions of a liberal government; for the marked spirit of tolerance recently shown toward the propagation of a pure Christianity among this people; for the preaching of the Gospel many years to the foreign communities on these shores and more recently to the Chilians and to a few Indian tribes; for the many copies of the Scriptures scattered among various classes; for the seed sown by tracts and papers in thousands of human hearts; for the little companies of believers here and there who have not been ashamed to own the name of Him who called them into his own marvelous light, and for those who have been led by the Divine Spirit to consecrate themselves to Christian work in Chili. Yet, we cannot shut our eyes to the pressing needs around us, and we are constrained to ask you to become fellow helpers in prayer with us in the work of the Gospel of Christ in Chili. Romanism has blighted these shores and enthralled this people for centuries. A reaction is taking place; but, excepting in a few instances, it is not toward the religion of the Bible. The great trend is toward infidelity and indifferentism. The natural fruits of both are seen in the confused and sad state of opinion and practice regarding religion and morals.

"The present is a time of opportunity. A beginning has been made, and special indications of Providence have been vouchsafed. The agencies at work in Chili are the following, viz: thirteen Protestant churches among the foreign communities; five boarding and day schools, and three Spanish preaching stations under the Taylor Mission of the American Methodist Church; a seamen's Mission in Valparaiso harbour; the Valparaiso Bible Society, employing several colporteurs; a Mission to the natives of Tierra del Fuego, under the care of the South American Missionary Society of England; and the Evangelical Union or Chili Mission of the American Presbyterian Church, The work of this latter is largely among the Chilians. The demands of the hour may be expressed by two words, Immediate Occupation of the Entire Field, and a Gracious and Mighty Outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Pray that the messengers of Christ may be speedily sent to the large colonies of foreign peoples on these shores, to the dominant Spanish Chilian race, and to the untouched aboriginal tribes. Nor can we pass by the fields north of us, the United States of Colombia and Peru, in which there are very few labourers; also Bolivia, Ecuador, and Venezuela, almost entirely unoccupied. Plead with our God that these neglected fields may immediately hear the Gospel. Pray for the Christians of Protestant Europe and America that they may appreciate their vast responsibilities for money, men, and practica interest; also their wonderful opportunities for now undertaking and carrying out our Lord's great command to disciple all nations."

The appeal is signed by seven members of the Mission, resident in different parts of the country; one of them being our correspondent, Rev. W. B. Boomer, Casilla (P.O. box 19), Concepcion, Chili.

EXETER HALL.—At Exeter Hall, Strand, on Sunday afternoon, Mr. Oscar Owers delivered the first of a series of five discourses on "Christ and Inspiration," arranged for the five Sundays in September. Mr. Owers will also give a series of "Bible Talks" at the daily prayer-meeting at Exeter Hall, during the present month, from one to two p.m.

The "CRUELTY to CHILDREN" ACT.

The Act for the Better Prevention of Cruelty to Children, to which the Royal assent has just been given, introduces small and defenceless children into conditions of life which will be as much to the credit of the country as they will be to the benefit of the children. The substance of the Act is divided into two parts, the first relating to child treatment, the second to child employment. The former has three main points. No longer will it be necessary to prove that the neglect or abandonment of a child has caused it to be chargeable to the rates, the fact of such neglect having caused "unnecessary suffering" will be sufficient. The age of child-protection is to be fourteen for boys, sixteen for girls. Another important point is that "any person" who has the custody, charge, or control of a child is responsible for its proper treatment. If a child is "found wandering," the person whose neglect drove it from home will be imprisoned and fined. One of the most drastic changes in the law is that children may be taken away by order of the Court from those who ill-treat them, and given to the nearest relatives, or to any person able and willing to undertake the custody of them (this includes institutions); the Court may order payment of maintenance by the guilty parent.

With regard to the employment of children, the child-beggar is no longer guilty, but the person who sends it out to beg; local authorities may order prohibited hours for child street-hawking, but it is everywhere forbidden between 10 p.m. and 5 a.m. No child under ten may perform in public for profit, with the exception that particular children may be licensed for theatres if the theatre is placed under the Factory Act inspectors. The rest of the Act deals with procedure. One or two changes may be noted. The police can arrest anyone they see ill-treating a child and exposing it, or in any way inflicting on it unnecessary suffering. Children may be taken out of the custody of their injurers pending inquiry. Search-warrants may be obtained. No child, whether sufferer or witness, will be excluded from Court because it does not understand the nature of an oath. One parent may give evidence against another; and the accused may give evidence for himself. The Act applies to the whole of the United Kingdom, and the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, which prepared it, is now extending its committees for its enforcement to the same area. Its office is, 7, Harpur-street, Bloomsbury, London, W.C.

C.M.S. MISSIONARIES.—There will be a goodly number of missionaries going forth this autumn. As far as we can see at present (says The Church Missionary Intelligencer), there will be about forty, including wives, returning to the mission field, and about fifty going out for the first time. The latter figure includes about twenty-five clergymen and fourteen or fifteen single ladies. Never before has the Society sent forth such a reinforcement at one time. The lady missionaries are for the most part either wholly or partially honorary; it is for the men that we want our missionary boxes filled.

MR. SPURGEON AND THE BANQUET.—An invitation was sent by the Sheffield Master Cutler-elect to Rev. C. H. Spurgeon to attend his forthcoming banquet. Writing in reply from Westwood, Beulah-hill, Upper Norwood, Mr. Spurgeon says:—"You are most kind, and so is the Master Cutler, but I am so taken up with work that I must not leave home. Really I am not a man for a feast, even if I could come. Our Lord Mayor pressed me to meet the Archbishop and bishops at a banquet, but I could not bring my soul to it—the banquet; I had no objection to the bishops. Last week I had tea at the Archbishop's, and luncheon with the Bishop of Rochester; but the banquet was out of my line. I am best at my own work. Still, God bless you and the Master, and all the good folk!"

AMONG ZULU KAFFIRS.

The Mission to Zulu Kaffirs which Mr. an Mrs. E. Clarke have for more than ten yea superintended at Ixopo, Natal, has its chee ing as well as its discouraging features. The are now four stations, which are centres light and peace in the midst of heathen dar ness and cruelty. Copies of the report may had from Mrs. S. Fothergill, Pierremont-cre cent, Darlington.

We are glad to read that the congregation at the mission-rooms have increased of lat and that the schools are flourishing. Th children are taught to read English books, an translate each sentence into Zulu. By thi means their minds are trained and enlarged and they are rendered much more fit than the would otherwise be to work with or for whit people in after life. Many of the scholars sho really good abilities, and the progress made very gratifying. On the other hand, the poo women and girls are severely beaten by the fathers and husbands—in reality their owner —as soon as they show an interest in Divin things. Sympathy with the people in the bodily ailments is an important part of M Clarke's work, and a small hospital, in whic to nurse patients, has become a manifest nee We rejoice to learn that, notwithstanding th indifference of many people, both black an white, there are signs of the Holy Spirit work in the hearts and lives of not a few wh have come under the influence of the Mission

THE HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS.

Having closed its first quarter of a century this excellent Institution has now a history o its own. The founders of the Homes at Far ningham and Swanley were the first to intro duce the cottage system into the administratio of an orphanage, and they have not only ha reason to be gratified at the result, but th pleasure of seeing their example copied in man directions. It was last year reported that tw houses at Farningham were closed for want o funds; these remain closed, though no boy have been refused admission in consequence Some of the other houses have, however, mor than their normal number of inmates, and i would be well if the two houses could be re opened. The secretary is Mr. B. Clarke, Ban Buildings, Ludgate Circus, E.C.

There are 290 boys at Farningham, and 19 at Swanley. A good proportion of them wor all day at trades, and attend evening scho during the winter. The day-school boys ar doing well, passing creditable examinations i subjects beyond the three R's. The superin tendent, Mr. Silas Lee, says in his report "We have had much to try us, and have ofte times been disappointed. It is no easy matte to manage a house of thirty boys properly, an to inculcate those moral and Christian virtue which are essential to a happy and useful life The 'fathers and mothers' of the variou homes are rewarded when they hear of a 'old boy' doing well in life; for, thoug they are encouraged from time to time, sti they are oftentimes tried and perplexed." M John H. Gregory, the head master, says "The industry of the boys in the variou trades enables us to do very much more fo them than could be done if they only attende school, and there is every reason to believe tha the knowledge they gain will be most useful t them in days to come. Every visitor we hav had has expressed strong approval of our work and perfect satisfaction with the look an bearing of the boys."

RHYL, NORTH WALES.—Mr. T. L. Saye of the Children's Special Service Mission, write to commend the Y.W.C.A. Institute in this tow as a holiday home for young ladies needing chang and rest. In Miss Kate Crawford, the secretar he says they will find a kind and considerat friend. The address of the Institute is 19, Wale street, Rhyl.

HUNGER IN EAST LONDON.

HE strike of dock labourers has imposed ressing duties upon Christian workers in East ondon. At the best of times there is much ccasion in that region for the wealthy to ghten the burdens of the poor; but of late, hile thousands of bread-winners have been on rike, and in receipt of no wages at all, the eed has been acute in the extreme. As long s the strike lasts it will be incumbent upon llowers of Christ to exert themselves to feed he hungry and care for the neglected and estitute. To such as would now commend he love of Christ to the men, women, and hildren of East London, the wisdom or otherise of the strike is not a question on which trong economic opinions need be held. Neverheless, the cause of the strikers has the support of men of undoubted intelligence and onour, so the Christian philanthropist may ell throw the utmost vigour into his endeavour o remove the sting of starvation from the nfortunate struggle.

We are glad to announce that the superinendents of various missions have promptly isen to the emergency. Nearly two thousand aily of the wives and children have been fed t the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road, E. Ir. Edwin E. Kerwin writes:—"I am unable, lthough my funds are exhausted, to cease iving these meals. The famished faces of hose who come for a loaf of bread and a mug f cocoa still appeal for more to stave off the ains of hunger. They wait about our gates rom eight o'clock in the morning for this very mall meal. How can I turn a deaf ear to heir cry?" Our readers know that Mr. F. N. Harrington and his helpers will not lose the itting opportunity of pointing those who are hus fed to Him who is the Bread of Life.

The operations of the East London Wesleyan Mission extend over a district in which beween 2000 and 3000 strikers reside. Therefore Mr. John Jameson and his fellow-workers have heir hands very full. The poor men know the superintendent, Rev. Peter Thompson, who is at present in Scotland, is their warm friend, and they have been delighted to find others of ike spirit in St. George's, the Old Mahogany Bar, and Paddy's Goose. Tickets for food have been distributed in large numbers. Mr. Jameson writes:—"We are helping families where here are six, seven, or eight children. We shall give a free breakfast to the men each morning while the strike lasts, and soup for the wives and children. Address replies to John Jameson, 242, Cable-street, E." The Salvation Army, at its Limehouse Shelter, has also supplied many thousands of meals to the poor, at nominal prices. Mr. W. Chorley, of the North-East London Gospel Mission, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N., has been distributing rice and oatmeal among the mothers of the Isle of Dogs.

Notwithstanding the efforts of these workers, many of the needy have to go empty away. A writer in The Times, describing a body of strikers, says:—"Ragged and famished in appearance, they yet behaved extremely well. But behind these sights of wretchedness lay much more of invisible misery and pain. The crowd of hungry human beings was composed entirely of men, but to them belonged women and children innumerable, who were, in all probability, suffering something akin to torture. For them sympathy has done much and will do more, but the call upon the resources of charity has been sudden, and they can hardly be expected to be equal to the emergency."

The fear thus expressed seems only too well-grounded. Yet by prompt giving it is hoped that much suffering will be averted, and treasure in abundance be laid up by Christian people for the time when Royal account will be taken of acts of kindness to such as are hungry, thirsty, and naked. Not only are the strikers and their dependents affected, but also many people in a small way of business. We have been asked to appeal for funds to help the various workers, and we do so right earnestly, and trust the response will be both spontaneous and liberal.

Letters to the Editor.

CHAPLAINS AND ARMY SCRIPTURE READERS.

SIR,—We have in your correspondent of last week "A Daniel come to Judgment!" There is one thing quite clear—that Mr. Cecil Smith is ignorant of the very first principle which prevails in the Army—viz., discipline and obedience to all constituted authority; as also of the fact that no man can enter any garrison or camp except by permission, nor would any man be permitted to enter as a Scripture reader except by the authority of the officer commanding and of the chaplain in charge of the troops. The Army Scripture Readers' Society is the only authorised mission to the soldier inside the barrack gate or camp.

Your correspondent is himself evidently averse to any church discipline or spiritual control of any kind whatever, and would have all the Army Scripture readers follow in the same wake; each man free to do that which is right in his own eyes. I am thankful to say that we have not yet arrived at that state of perfection, or we should very soon learn what disunion meant. His sweeping assertion that "most of the chaplains in the Army are teaching doctrines contrary to the Word of God" needs no comment from me; it is as reliable and truthful as his supposition that Mr. Cummings has been forbidden to work in the Camp "because so many got converted." He cites, to strengthen his assertion, the chaplain of the Bristol garrison, but there is no Army chaplain in the Bristol garrison; the ministerial duties are performed by a civilian clergyman, nor is there a Scripture reader in this garrison. It is a cause for thankfulness that there is a growing confidence between the Chaplains and Readers. The Army would be nothing but an armed mob, were it anything but one great machine, each part fulfilling its own special work, but forming one harmonious whole. So with spiritual work in the Army—the chaplain, the Christian officer, and the Scripture reader have each a distinct and definite work to do, which can be efficacious only so far as, irrespective of doctrines and dogmas, all are actuated by one desire, and strive in united effort "that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ."
—Yours very truly, W. I. EVERED POOLE.

ANTI-ROMANIST LITERATURE.

SIR,—I am deeply interested in the letter of Rev. C. H. Mercer, entitled "A Call to Individual Effort against Romanism." As a constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN I ask permission to say a few words on that subject, not for the sake of showing what I have done as an obscure individual, so much as to show what can be done by those who are willing to work. I earnestly pray many will do so.

Some time ago an aged saint of God gave me a copy of Banks's 5s. edition of Pastor Chiniquy's "Fifty Years in the Church of Rome." I read it, and said to myself, "This book is wanted in priest-ridden Brighton, and it will do its work." I thought and prayed about it, and then went to my bookseller, and inquired whether he had the book in stock; the reply was "No." "Will you get two dozen copies if I undertake to help you to sell them?" He said, "Yes." I thought if we could only sell two dozen I should be thankful, so I went to my Bible-class and told them about the book, and asked if they would like to have one. The reply of several was, "Yes; but we cannot afford it." "Oh, yes, you can; for the bookseller will let me have as many as I want, and allow me to pay when I like. You can each have a book at once, at the usual cash discount, and can pay me 3d. or 6d. every week."

My two dozen books were very soon gone. These friends got other orders. At our Protestant meetings I pushed the sale of the book, and many were sold in the shop. I have the satisfaction of knowing that with my own hands I sold about eighty copies of that work, and have been the direct means of introducing 130 copies into the town. By thus causing a demand, other booksellers have displayed copies in their windows, and how many have been sold in Brighton I am unable to say. The money came in all right, and was paid to the bookseller.

We have sold hundreds of other publications at our meetings. The hundred-thousand edition of "Which Sovereign—Queen Victoria or the Pope?" would have been exhausted in three months, if other towns had served that book the same as we did in Brighton. I cannot tell how many we sold. Protestant effort is telling in Brighton, as Dr. Fulton recently testified, in three grand, enthusiastic meetings, two of which were held in the Dome. A lady from another town told me she never saw such a splendid percentage of men present at such meetings.

I cannot trespass on your space to tell of some of the results known to myself; but I shall bless God if this plan of working is adopted by others. I am contemplating during the coming winter, by the aid of my bookseller and our Protestant meetings, pushing the sale of the three following works:—Mr. Grattan Guinness's "Romanism and the Reformation" (Hodder & Stoughton); Hyslop's "Two Babylons" (Partridge & Co.); and Mr. B. Scott's "Catacombs of Rome" (Morgan & Scott).—Yours faithfully, H. A. MARCHANT.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The C.E.T.S., Liverpool, has established a temperance free library for the use of speakers and workers.

Dr. Dawson Burns' "Temperance History" is to be published in four parts, and the first will be ready shortly.

To-day (Friday) the weekly temperance meeting for the session will commence at the Royal Victoria Hall, Waterloo-road, London.

Mr. Edward T. Smith has been carrying on a temperance crusade at various watering-places during the summer months, and great success has attended the meetings.

Mrs. Leavitt addressed a large audience recently in Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, on various aspects of the temperance question at home and abroad. She was heartily thanked.

The cause of total abstinence (says Dr. Cuyler) has made great progress in Wales, and I observed the welcome word "Temperance" on the signs of inns and groceries in all the towns.

The leading temperance organisations of Manchester are resolved to oppose the granting of a drink licence to a large theatre of varieties now in course of erection in Oxford-street in that city.

Dr. Danford Thomas, coroner for St. Pancras, informs a London correspondent that the Government are considering the advisability of introducing a measure dealing with the compulsory detention of confirmed inebriates.

It is stated that Mr. Alderman Hughes, a prominent member of the Liverpool Licensing Committee, is a solicitor, and the legal adviser of the largest public-house owner in the city. Surely that is an administrative scandal.

The failure of the Wesleyan Conference to appoint a Connexional organising temperance secretary has caused much dissatisfaction. It is hoped that the May district meetings next year will speak on the subject with no uncertain voice.

Rev. W. E. Codling has been elected to fill the vacancy in the Wesleyan Connexional Temperance secretarial caused by the removal of Rev. R. Culley to the Wesleyan Sunday-school Union office. The appointment of Mr. Codling is generally and highly appreciated.

The breakfast to the British Medical Association at Leeds, under the auspices of the National Temperance League, was interesting and successful. The speeches were able and suggestive. We trust the medical profession will, in greatly increasing numbers, come boldly out on the side of total abstinence.

The Temperance Hospital has received £412 from the Sunday Hospital Fund, more than £50 in excess of any former grant. It cannot be too generally known that all suitable cases are received into the Temperance Hospital; and applications for subscribers' letters will always meet with attention if addressed to the Secretary at the Hospital.

FOREIGN.

The Tartar workmen on the Wolga River are famed for sobriety.

Iowa State, under prohibition, has paid the final instalment of its debt, and the taxes are to be reduced 25 per cent.

At Cincinnati over two hundred drink-sellers are stated to have signed a pledge to keep open on Sundays in defiance of the Sunday Closing Act.

Six prohibition tents, well equipped with able speakers, are sturdily marching over the prairies of South Dakota, making many converts to the cause.

The cow-keepers of Benares, the "sacred city" on the Ganges, who number thirty thousand, have decided to expel liquor drinking from their caste; and other smaller castes are following the example. In this way fifty thousand of the hard-working inhabitants have lately become total abstainers.

The Book World.

A Temperance Story.

Mr. Deane Hilton, the eldest son of our friend Mrs. Hilton, of the Stepney Crèche, has written an extremely clever story, with the telling title of A DASH OF BITTER, in which the invidious evils of indulgence in strong drink are vividly portrayed. The scope of the work is unusually comprehensive, showing a remarkable acquaintance on the part of the young author with the different phases of social life in London, as well as illustrating the wide ramifications of this national curse. Without making the moral of his tale too obtrusive, Mr. Hilton has produced a narrative that is most effective from the temperance point of view. In its literary qualities the book is of a high order; seeing that it is Mr. Hilton's first effort at authorship, it is singularly full of promise. We are glad to see his talent placed at the service of such a worthy cause. (3s. 6d. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.)

SEPTEMBER MAGAZINES.

Footsteps of Truth (J. F. Shaw & Co.) reproduces a talk by Dr. Robert Anderson on the Benediction of 2 Cor. xiii. 14. Bible-reading notes are a good feature of the magazine.

China's Millions is a capital number. Mr. F. A. Steven reports the baptism of converts in Bhamô, and Mrs. C. Polhill-Turner contributes a vivacious sketch of a tour in the Tibetan borders. (Morgan & Scott.)

The first place in The Sword and the Trowel is occupied by a sermon, entitled, "Peculiar Power in Prayer," by Mr. Spurgeon. It is needless to say that the discourse is a mine of spiritual wealth. (Passmore & Alabaster.)

The Illustrated Missionary News (1d. S. W. Partridge & Co.) gives a detailed account of the work of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, formerly conducted by Rev. P. I. J. Warschawski, now in the care of Mr. C. T. Lipshytz.

There is a good description of the Trinity College, Cambridge, Mission, in the parish of St. George's, Camberwell, in The Church Monthly (1d. Office: 30 and 31, New Bridge-street, E.C.). Several illustrations enliven the article.

The Reaper is always full of matter which at once engages the attention of spiritually-minded Christians. "The Modern Pentecost" is a republication of some notes on the great Ulster awakening in 1859. (1d. Houlston & Sons.)

The Harvest Field, published at the Methodist Episcopal Mission Press, Madras, has begun a new series. It gives a good résumé of Christian work in India, and may be had from the Wesleyan Book Room, 2, Castle-street, City-road, London.

The front page of The Cottager and Artisan exhibits a good picture of Mr. George Williams, who is so closely connected with the Young Men's Christian Association; and inside there is an interesting sketch of his useful life. (1d. 56, Paternoster-row.)

The British Workman presents a portrait and biographical sketch of the late Mr. Frederic Thomas Gammon, who was its editor at the time of his death last September, and owner of the business of Messrs. Partridge. (1d. S. W. Partridge & Co.)

In Divine Life, now edited by Rev. C. G. Moore, a series of "Reminiscences and Reflections," by the late Rev. Dr. Asa Mahan, has been commenced. "Dependence upon Christ" is a sermon by the late Professor Finney, of Oberlin, U.S.A. (2d. Marshall Brothers.)

The monthly editorial letter in Our Own Gazette, is devoted to "The Opium Traffic." It is well informed, and forcible in its appeal to members of Y.W.C.A.'s to use their influence in the furtherance of a policy of righteousness by the English people. (1d. 18, Paternoster-square).

Evangelical Christendom, the organ of the Evangelical Alliance, includes among its articles, "A Royal Priesthood," and "Prayer, more than Conference, our present duty." The correspondence from abroad gives an idea of Gospel thought in many countries. (6d. T. G. Johnson, 121, Fleet-street).

The Sentinel calls attention to the fact that the struggle against the licensing of immorality in India will shortly have to be renewed, as the Indian Government seems determined to re-instate regulations against which the House of Commons has decisively pronounced. (1d. Dyer Brothers, Rose-street Corner, Paternoster-square).

The Railway Signal has "a chat with the lads" about gambling, and a descriptive article "On the 'South Western,'" as well as reports of much Christian work among railway employés. (1d. The Railway Mission Office, 18, New Bridge-street, E.C.)

On and Off Duty records evangelistic endeavour among policemen throughout the country. This issue gives an account of the Royal Irish constabulary, and reports a Christian Police Association Conference at Parklea, Strathblane. (1d. Marshall Bros.)

The British Messenger. "The Gospel in the Passover" is the title of notes of a powerful and searching address by Rev. John McNeill, on Exod. xii. 21, 22. M. S. S. Herdman writes well on "Walks in Jerusalem." (1d. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.)

The Welcome Hour has a good bill of fare. "Mission Work in Tunis," by H. W. C. A., is worthy of special mention. Among the counsels of perfection in Out and Out, may be specified articles entitled "Death unto Sin," and "Living on God." (1d each. Marshall Brothers.)

Among the choice contents of Friendly Greetings (4d.) are: "John Bunyan's Last Days," "An Anecdote of Luther," and selections from many sources of spiritual light and truth. The Tract Magazine (1d.) has a portrait and sketch of the late Rev. Dr. Robert Newton, and another talk on "Cottage Politics." (Religious Tract Society.)

In The Bible Society Monthly Reporter, under the heading "Our Library,' Dr. Wright gives further information as to the well-known Fry collection of editions of the Holy Scriptures. "The Bible in the Great Public Schools," and "A Bible Journey in Madras" are other contributions. (The Bible House, 146, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.)

Young England. (4d. Sunday School Union.) Here is much to delight and inform the young. Tales and stories of travel divide the honours with varieties which are wholesome as well as entertaining. "Stitches in Time" is devoted to the making of aprons. Mr. J. R. S. Clifford contributes an article, admirably illustrated, on "Moth-Owlets."

The Quiver. 6d. Cassell & Co. "The Land of the Inquisition: a New Book of Martyrs," is the title of a series of eminently readable chapters by Professor Blaikie. At the present time there is urgent need for the widespread diffusion of the facts of history which are here so well displayed. David Buxton writes on "Cruelty to Children," and Louisa Crow on "Our Soldiers' Amusements: At the Tin Hall, Aldershot." Among other items of sterling value may be named Dr. J. R. T. MacDuff's sermon on "Influence," preached before a Young Men's Christian Association.

Church Missionary Intelligencer and Record. 6d. Society's House, Salisbury-square. The opening article, by Dr. Robert Cust, is entitled, "Civilisation without the Gospel is Profitless"; an important proposition, ably sustained by fact and argument. In an article on the Kashmir Mission, it is pointed out that, although there is a mission on the Tibetan frontier of Kashmir, and a mission to the Afghans at Peshawar, there is no mission in Tibet, or Afghanistan proper. Chinese Turkestan, Russian Central Asia, and Badakshan are also unevangelised.

The Fireside opens with a new serial, a Reformation story entitled "A Martyr for Christ." The first chapters give promise of instructive as well as entertaining reading. Bishop Pakenham Walsh, in a very suggestive article on "Current Literature," urges the importance of wholesome books being used to neutralise the effects of those which are fascinating, but morally poisonous. "Under Currents; or, a Life's Mistake," is the title of a serial specially for young people. A centenary sketch of Charles Wesley, by E. C. Kenyon, is well worth reading. (6d. "Home Words" Office, 7, Paternoster-square.)

There are many good things in The Free Church of Scotland Monthly. An illustration, presenting the group of fifty rescued slave-children, now under Christian training in the Keith-Falconer Mission, near Aden, has a pathetic interest. The death, at Bandawè, Lake Nyasa, affords sad occasion for a sketch of Rev. J. Alexander Bain, of the Livingstonia Mission. Foreign missions are strongly represented in this number of the magazine, and among the articles that by Mrs. George Henry, on "Women's Work in Livingstonia" is particularly noteworthy. Rev. Andrew Moody, of Budapest, describes a six weeks' mission at Totis, Hungary, and Professor W. G. Blaikie, who is in America, writes on Southern California. (T. Nelson & Son.)

In view of the frequently recurring railway accidents in this country and America, a special interest attaches to an article in Scribner's Magazine on "Safety in Railroad Travel." It is finely illustrated, and is full of timely information.

The Girls' Own Paper has a very appreciative account of that excellent institution, the St. John's Servants' School, at Westbourne-park, founded by the late Lady Kinnaird, and still vigorously carried on. Fifteen hundred children have been trained and prepared for the duties of life in the school. (Religious Tract Society.)

Two useful penny magazines are The Day of Days and Home Words. The former has a sketch of William Howles, of Long Acre; the latter a biography of George Stephenson. Well illustrated, these are capital periodicals. Hand and Heart (1d.), a larger sheet, has an attractive article on "The Monkey." (7, Paternoster-square.)

Rest and Reaping has a high tone, and is replete with edifying matter. The contributions of the editor, Miss Charlotte Mason, are always helpful to those who would imbibe the spirit of Holy Writ, and live in the fellowship of Christ. Mrs. McHardie continues the series of articles on "The Mizpah Band, Glasgow." (1d. Morgan & Scott.)

The Life of Faith (4d. Marshall Bros.) is a double number, and has full reports of nine of the valuable addresses at the Keswick Convention. Such a weighty body of testimony from men of ripe experience in the things of God is worth possessing and treasuring for future reference.

The Expositor is an exceptionally strong number. Dean Chadwick contributes a study of Judas Iscariot which will well repay perusal. Canon Cheyne writes on Ps. xvi., and, although unwilling to follow him on some points of detail, we cordially acknowledge the beauty and cogency of much of his interpretation. Professor Agar Beet writes helpfully on "The Christian Secret."

Toilers of the Deep gives many echoes of work in connection with the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. The superintendent evangelist writes "Notes in the West," and Mr. James Robertson, "On board the Mission ship Clulow." From first to last the record is one of earnest labour for Christ, carried on among a class which steadily grows in appreciation of the kindness shown. (3d. Bridge House, 181, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.)

Among articles of special value in The Theological Monthly may be named "The Bible and Egyptology," by E. Naville; "Jewish Pseudepigraphic Writings," by W. J. Deane; "Man: Whence is He?" by D. Gath Whitley, and "Luther and the Music of the Protestant Church," by J Cuthbert Hadden. The Homiletic Magazine opens with a very suggestive sermon by Rev. Dr H. R. Reynolds, on "Christian Reunion, its ideal and Standard." (Nisbet & Co.)

Mr. Nankivell's Reporters' Magazine begins a new volume with this issue. It well maintains all its distinctive qualities of varied interest to the practical phonographer, and splendour of manipulative execution. In the editor's hands this system of shorthand truly becomes "a thing of beauty and a joy for ever" to the initiated. The number contains a characteristic portrait of Thomas Carlyle, and an exceedingly lively sketch of "a country solicitor's office." (4d. 5, New Bridge-street, E.C.)

A.1. (6d. Partridge & Co.) makes a very readable and miscellaneous budget. Miss Emily Holt's tale, "The White Lady of Hazelwood," is quaintly fascinating, with a rich antique flavour, as one would expect. Lady Hope's brief story, "A Bicycle," is interesting, but too crowded with accidents even for a devotee of the wheel. The "London Sketch Book" for country cousins, is an attractive feature. The paper on "The Rewards of Literature" ought to have a disillusionising effect on youthful and sanguine would-be authors.

REQUEST FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on an eight days' special mission, at Albany Chapel, Albany-road, Camberwell, S.E., conducted by Rev. W. A. Meaton, of the Christian Instruction Society.

MR. DANIEL MATTHEWS is about to visit Bristol and other places in the West of England to make known the needs of the blacks of Australia. He also hopes before leaving England (at the end of October), to go to Yorkshire and Scotland. Many have been blessed by learning, from the lips of Mr. and Mrs. Matthews, of the abounding grace of God, whereby some of the most degraded of our race have obtained an inheritance with the saints.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 8.—Ruth III.

HOME ought always to mean Rest (ver. 1 and i. 9). True wedded love is Rest, and the heart which has learnt its true relationship to the great Kinsman, Christ, is at rest indeed. At rest from toilsome service in barley fields; all He has is ours.

(1) Naomi's proposals (2—6).—To our notions of propriety they seem rather extraordinary. But we must remember that Ruth had a legal claim on Boaz, to be taken as his wife, on supposition that he was the nearest kinsman, or goel (Deut. xxv. 5—10). There is a sense in which a defenceless soul has a claim on the Lord Jesus Christ; nor is there any posture for us better than to lie at his feet, waiting for Him to tell us what to do. Eastern threshing-floors, though covered at the top, were open at the sides, to allow the entrance of the wind for purposes of winnowing. Winnowing is done by the King's own hand. Trust Him.

(2) The chivalry of Boaz (6—13).—He would not take advantage of the poor Gentile girl who appealed to him; and until his rights were clearly established, the question of their marriage union must needs wait; in the meanwhile he took the greatest care of her character (14). Nor did he leave her to plead her own case with the other kinsman, of whose existence Naomi seems to have been unaware, but undertook to ascertain his position for them. There seems a slight touch of pleased vanity in his allusion to Ruth's preference for himself over the younger men, which is very natural and lifelike.

(3) Waiting (16—18).—And so the two women sat still. It was a good attitude, and one which well befits us all, when we have done all we can, and must leave the issue (Ps. lxii. 1). It was a grand character for promptitude that Naomi gave Boaz (18). But how aptly it befits our blessed Lord, our Kinsman indeed. Put all into his dear, strong hands, and then sit still. Thou mayest rest, but He never will until He has thoroughly fulfilled his trust (Isa. lxii. 1, 2 Tim. i. 12).

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 9.—Ruth IV.

It was probably early morning when Boaz went up to the customary place of Eastern legal transactions, at the gate of Bethlehem; and there he waited till the other and nearer kinsman came. And in that total disregard of time and absence of hurry, which are so characteristic of Oriental life, they sat down to discuss their matter in public, before ten elders, or, as we might call them, magistrates.

(1) A Law Court (3—11).—The kinsman was willing to acquire the land, which, perhaps, had been mortgaged, in payment of debt; but he was not willing to marry Ruth, because a son, born of the union, might divert the succession of his own lands from his family. So he renounced his right of claim, and confirmed the act by a curious old custom, in which, by the transference of his shoe, he transferred his proprietorship. Our Saviour redeems not only our souls, but our bodies; not only ourselves, but our world. He has bought us out of the hands of one to whom we had sold ourselves for nought. Do we always remember the great price with which the Bridegroom has purchased the Church for Himself? (1 Pet. i. 18).

(2) A Wedding (11—13).—The gleaner need not wearily follow the reapers' footsteps; all these broad fields were hers now, because she had become one with their owner. So, when we are married to that other, Christ, we no longer toilsomely work for redemption, but, being redeemed, we bring forth fruit unto God (Rom. vii. 4) Redeemed, wedded, fruitful.

(3) A Nursery (14—16).—What ecstasy filled that aged heart! God will not ever be threshing us, but will give joy where He caused sorrow (Luke i. 45).

(4) A Genealogy (17—22).—Of this line came David; and also on these same fields angels chanted the birth of another greater than all, who had sprung from this Gentile girl. Race cannot exclude from the line of blessing. In Christ all are one (Col. iii. 11).

THE FIRST BOOK OF SAMUEL.

Some of the early versions have four books of Kings, the first and second being our two books of Samuel, and the third and fourth our first and second of Kings. The name is not inappropriate, for in this book the government of Israel passes over from a republic to a monarchy. Yet this and the following are as appropriately called Books of Samuel, because both Saul and David were anointed by him. He has been called the connecting link between the Judges and the Kings.

Samuel was the author of the earlier portion of the book (x. 25); and the rest was compiled from the books of Nathan and Gad (1 Chron. xxix. 29).

Probably Samson and Samuel were contemporaries, both judging in different parts of Israel.

The history of this first book covers a period of about eighty years, and is full of interest and instruction. It shows us how God reigns, and out of the confusion and distress arising from the sins of men, steadily fulfils his own purpose. It also abounds in typical and prophetic allusions to the Messiah. In the failure of the people, and of the King they had chosen; in the quiet, steady growth of the kingdom of David, even while the rejected Saul occupied the throne; and in the subsequent reign of David, and the consolidation of the kingdom under him, it is easy to see a typical representation of the kingdom of God in the world, and a picture of the work of grace in each heart.

New Testament quotations from this book will be found in Matt. xii. 3; Acts vii. 46; xiii. 21—23.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10.—1 Samuel I.

Elkanah was a Levite, of the family of Kohath (1 Chron. vi. 27—34). Though living at Ramath-aim-Zophim—called Ramah (19), he is called an Ephrathite—perhaps indicating that he was born in Bethlehem (Gen. xlviii. 7).

(1) Elkanah's piety (3—8).—In his yearly visits to Shiloh he combined worship and sacrifice (3). The two cannot be separated without destroying them both. Sacrifice is only valuable when prompted by the spirit of worship; worship, if sincere, will express itself in sacrificing its best for God. The two sons of Eli were wicked men, and unfit for the priesthood, so that "men abhorred the offering of the Lord" (ii. 17). But neither the popular tendency to irreligion, nor the wickedness of the priests prevented Elkanah from giving God his due. The inconsistency of the professed servants of God does not lessen our obligation to Him.

(2) Hannah's prayer (9—18). So great was her "bitterness of soul" (10) that even Elkanah's sympathy was not enough. We have need to thank God for every sorrow that gives urgency and earnestness to our prayers. Her vow (11) was not so much a bargain as an expression of her high appreciation of the blessing she desired. Gratitude would prompt her to return to the Lord the son she asked of Him. God gives all to the spirit that is willing to yield all to Him. She prayed in her heart, and by her tears: "her lips moved, but her voice was not heard" (13); hence Eli did not understand her (14). What a testimony to the corruption of those times, that Eli should suspect a woman to be drunk by the temple of the Lord! The suspicion must have greatly added to Hannah's grief. How seriously we may injure and wound others by our mistaken and hasty judgments.

(3) The birth of Samuel (19—28). They rose early, in order that their journey might not displace their worship. An excellent example. God was faithful to his promise (19); and Hannah perpetuated the memory of his faithfulness by naming the child Samuel—asked of God (20, 27). She was also faithful to her vow (11, 28). The child God had given was returned to Him for life. Did she not do the wisest thing with her child? True, she lost some of the comfort and brightness of his presence in the home, but then he was God's; and who could better fill his life with blessing, and make it fruitful for good? Christian parents may now imitate Hannah in giving up for God and his work the children they love. Note the offerings which accompanied this gift (24, 25). The best we can render, even the sacrifice of ourselves, can only be acceptable through Him who offered Himself without spot to God.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11.—1 Samuel II.

(1) Hannah's song of thanksgiving (1—10).—Significantly this is called a prayer. "Hannah prayed" (1)—for thanksgiving for mercies received is a necessary part of true prayer. We are struck with its exultant spirit. She has left her child at Shiloh, but she does not grieve as one bereaved. This arises from the fact that God is the theme of her song. She is occupied with Him, and not with Samuel. The Giver is more to her than the gift. When the heart is taken up with Him, it is not only easy, but delightful, to yield Him our best.

The following verses continue the narrative of Elkanah and his family, interwoven with that of the house of Eli. The latter was rapidly declining through the wickedness of Hophni and Phinehas; but the former was steadily advancing in the person of Samuel. Hannah lost nothing by giving her best to God (20, 21). In the life of faith we get by giving, and gain by sacrificing. Samuel is mentioned four times (11, 18, 21, 23). He was not too young even then to serve God, and was growing, not only in stature, but in capacity for further service, and was in favour with God and man. The evil example of Eli's sons did not corrupt him. Their conduct is vile in the last degree (12—17, 22), and made the service of the sanctuary to be abhorred. Their position as priests, and the example of piety they had in Eli, aggravated their guilt. But Eli was not without blame. His mild reproof was not enough (23—25). It is clearly implied that severer measures might have restrained his sons (iii. 13); hence, in the message of judgment which follows (27—36), he is regarded as sharing their guilt (29, 30). The rejection of the house of Eli was according to the principle, "Them that honour Me, I will honour, and they that despise Me shall be lightly esteemed" (30). Eli had honoured his sons above God (29) by being too indulgent to them.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 12.—1 Samuel III.

We have here—(I.) The call of Samuel (1—10). "The Word of God was precious, or rare, in those day" (1). There was no one to whom the people might look for God's message. This lack was supplied by the call of Samuel (19—21). It was a call, not to conversion, but to a more exalted service. God prepares and chooses his own instruments. His call came at night (2, 3), (see Job xxxiii. 15, 16), and was not understood. Men hear the messenger, but not the voice of God behind him. By his word, his providence, his Spirit, religious privileges, conscience, He speaks, yet man perceiveth it not. Patiently He repeats his calls until we recognise his voice. Our best attitude towards God is that of Samuel: "Speak, for thy servant heareth" (10). It implies readiness, not only to listen, but to obey.

(1) What a message God gave him (11—14).—It was in substance what Eli had received before (ii. 27—36). To remind Eli of his sons' iniquity, to reprove him for his neglect, and to pronounce a judgment that no sacrifice could avert, was a painful duty to Samuel. To commit such a message to one so young was an evidence of God's confidence in him, and a prophecy of the use He would make of him.

(2) Eli's reception of the message (15—18).—To Samuel the message was a burden that seems to have kept him awake until morning (15). But Eli heard it with the spirit of submission. To him it must have been agony; but the wisdom and righteousness of it are acknowledged. What else could it be than wise and right, since God did it? Oh, that we always learned to argue thus! To see the Lord's hand, even if it holds the rod, makes it easier to receive its strokes.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 13.—1 Samuel IV.

The first sentence of this chapter properly belongs to chapter iii. There is no reason to connect Samuel with the judgments here recorded. The prediction concerning the house of Eli is here being fulfilled, and until the judgment is passed the voice of God's prophet seems to be silenced.

The first Ebenezer experience was one of defeat, in which Israel lost 4000 men (1, 2). Upon this followed their inquiry (3), their mistaken confidence (3—5), and their further disaster (10—22).

(1) Their inquiry.—"Wherefore hath the Lord smitten us?" (3). There is always a reason for his people's defeat; and the first step towards victory is to inquire the cause. They do not seem to have appealed to Samuel, nor to have waited for God's reply. We can only learn the secret cause of failure by waiting upon God. If you are not living the overcoming life, do not be content until the reason is discovered, and the Achan condemned and put away.

(2) Their mistaken confidence.—Not waiting for God's counsel, they follow their own. They rightly concluded that they had failed because God was not with them; but they could not bring Him nearer by their superstitions and idolatrous reverence for the ark. Their sin separates Him from them, and explains their defeat (Isa. lix. 1, 2). How much more important the outward symbols and forms of religion become, when the reality is lost. Ritualism indicates the decline of true piety! Men who deny the power have often a superstitious reverence for the form of godliness.

(3) Their further disaster.—What an accumulation of ills followed! (10—22). Notwithstanding their confidence, and the terror of the Philistines (7—9), they suffered more terrible defeat. Not only were 30,000 men slain, but the ark was taken, and the two priests who had shared with the ark the confidence of the people, were destroyed (10, 11). To this succeeded the sorrowful death of Eli (17, 18); and the death of the wife of Phinehas, who perpetuated the memory of this defeat by naming her child "Ichabod." What glory remained to Israel now that the symbol of God's presence was gone? In every life, failure, certain and ignominious, must result from every other confidence than that in God alone.

The whole narrative evidences the truth of God's Word, in his threatenings as well as in his promises. Sin cannot go unpunished, even in the sons of a man of God. And terrible as this is, it is only the beginning of the threatened judgment, and is a sign (ii. 34) that the rest shall follow.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 14.—1 Sam. V.

The Philistines place the trophy of their victory in the temple of Dagon. The ark was, in their judgment, Israel's God, as Dagon was the god of the Philistines. Probably they designed to worship both, and obtain the blessing of both. They did not know that Israel's God can brook no rival. The temple in which He is honoured must be devoted to Him alone (1 Cor. iii. 16, 17). If our bodies are to be his temples, we must accept this condition.

The incident illustrates (1) The power of God. He would not display his power by delivering his people, for they had lessons to learn that only defeat could teach them; but He makes the Philistines know that they have got a very doubtful blessing. Note (2) the increasing severity of his judgments (3, 4, 6, 9). Should not the first have convinced them of the folly of their idolatry, and the impossibility of fellowship between Dagon and the ark? But worse judgments succeed when the first fails; until at last the ark itself is removed, and they are left to the worship of Dagon. So does God deal with men before He finally withdraws from them. Note also (3) the folly of the Philistines. They tried twice to establish fellowship between Dagon and the ark of God; and when chastisements succeeded these attempts, they were only concerned to send the ark away. They did not consider how to get right with God, but how to get rid of Him. The mutilated condition of their god ought to have shamed them out of their idolatry; and the power displayed by the God of Israel ought to have prompted the inquiry: How can we propitiate Him? But all wicked men find it a terrible thing to come into contact with God. Sad that so many should prefer to keep their sin, and bid God depart (Mark v. 7, 17).

SLAVERY IN BRAZIL.—The British Consul at Santos, in his last report, has some interesting observations on the effects of the abolition of slavery in the province of Sao Paulo, of which that port is the principal outlet. This great social reform, he says, was accomplished without the firing of a shot, and without the perpetration of a single act of violence.

ALBERT ORPHAN ASYLUM, BAGSHOT.—The annual festivities held at the Royal Albert Orphan Asylum, Bagshot, on Saturday week, possessed an interest greater even than usual, as the institution was celebrating its twenty-fifth birthday, it having been built as a memorial to the late Prince Consort. It is the only institution of its kind in England to which children are admitted without canvassing for votes, poverty and need being the only pleas needed for their acceptance there. A large number of "old orphans" had come down for the day, and these were entertained at lunch and tea, while out of doors, the boys' band, athletic sports, and musical drill took place. All the boys are taught some trade here, and all the girls are trained practically in domestic economy and needlework. A capital little exhibition was held in a tent in the ground, of clothes, carpentry, and bread and cake, made respectively by the tailor, joiner, and baker-boys; while one stand, full of fine vegetables and fruit, proved that the little gardeners could turn their knowledge to account. Not to be behindhand, the girls had frocks and underclothing, darning and marking, to show, all of it reaching a high standard of excellence.—Echo.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, September 15.

DAVID SPARING SAUL.—1 SAM. xxiv. 4—17.

GOLDEN TEXT: ROM. xii. 21.

FROM the time of the last lesson David was an outlaw and a fugitive for about seven years, constantly in peril of his life through the bitter enmity of Saul. His painful experiences during this section of his life taught him many useful lessons. At Nob he lied to Ahimelech (xxi. 2), and at Gath he feigned madness before Achish (xxi. 13). These were humiliating exhibitions of the evil of his own heart, and did not encourage him to place any confidence in himself. In the conduct of Doeg and the cruel massacre of the priests which the fierce Edomite executed at Saul's command, and in the treachery of the people of Keilah, he saw the folly of placing confidence in men (xxii. 9—23, xxiii. 1—13). At the same time God was giving evidence of his care over him, by warning him to escape from Keilah, by the strengthening words of Jonathan, and by the providential invasion of the Philistines at a time when David seemed almost certainly in Saul's hand (xxiii. 10—12, 16—18, 26—28). In all this God was leading him to fuller confidence in Himself. Surely he was learning that while his own devices usually failed, God had unlimited resources, and by most unexpected means could deliver his servant. Very tenderly God dealt with him; his frequent failures were met by some form of delivering grace, so that the words, "He restoreth my soul," acquired a new significance.

David was not now alone. While in the cave of Adullam he had been joined by about 400 men. The oppressive rule of Saul was already causing disaffection among the people. David in humiliation and exile was more worthy of their allegiance than Saul crowned and enthroned. In the hour of David's triumph these faithful followers were not forgotten. Nor will Jesus—the antitype of David—forget those who follow Him in his humiliation (Matt. x. 32, 33).

In the incident of this lesson, and in the similar incident in chap. xxvi., the noble and magnanimous spirit of David appears, while Saul proves himself weak and irresolute. The one is an object of admiration, the other an object of pity. Having cast off the authority of God, Saul is now the creature of impulse. The better character of David reproves him, and for the time makes him helpless to accomplish his evil purpose. Wickedness is weakness; only the good can be truly great and strong.

Engedi, the scene of this incident, lay in the south of Judea, and on the western shore of the Dead Sea. Solomon's Song i. 14 refers to the beauty of this spot; while its limestone cliffs abound in large caves, in which David and his men might find concealment and shelter. Here Saul, with 3000 chosen men, came in search of David, and, entering the very cave where David lay concealed, he fell asleep. Now was David's opportunity, for had not Providence placed his cruel enemy in his power? So his followers argued. "Behold the day of which the Lord said unto thee," &c. (4).—They even strengthened their cause by suggesting that the present opportunity was in fulfilment of the Divine promise. But they were wrong. God had certainly promised that David should be king; but this promise never meant what was now suggested. The temptation was a great one. So many arguments might have appealed to him. Did not Saul deserve it? Would not the kingdom be the better for his death? And was not the present opportunity given for this purpose? If he had wanted to do wrong, or had been only ambitious for the crown, he might have argued thus. But all these apparent advantages did not blind him to the true nature of the deed, and he achieved a victory over himself. He gained by resisting; he would have lost by yielding. Every temptation resisted makes us better and stronger men. So, instead of taking Saul's life, he cut off the skirt, or fringe of his robe. Even for this his conscience reproached him. Should he not be careful of the dignity as well as the life of the Lord's anointed? "David stayed his servants" (7).—If they were eager to destroy Saul, why not let them, and put the responsibility for the act upon them? But David would not so meanly try to escape guilt. If wrong for him to do it, it was wrong also to allow his followers to do it. This victory over such a temptation was greater than the victory over Goliath (Prov. xvi. 32).

Saul left the cave (7) unconscious of the danger to which he had been exposed. David boldly followed him, resolved to appeal to Saul's better nature. He paid him the homage due to the Lord's anointed (8), and ventured to plead his own case. First, he claimed that Saul had been deceived as to the intentions of David. Such men as Doeg had slandered David (9). Skilfully he pleads that in sparing Saul's life in the cave, he had proved his loyalty. Let Saul judge of David by his actions. Does not "wickedness proceed from the wicked?" or, in the language of Christ, "Is not a tree known by its fruits?" (10—13). And, since David had no intention against the life of Saul, why should one so insignificant be the object of the king's pursuit? (13—15).

This method of dealing with Saul proved, for the time, effectual (16, 17). He could not but recognise the beauty of David's conduct in contrast with his own. His tears proved that he was not yet incapable of appreciating the noble qualities of David's character. But the change was not permanent. Before long the old feelings returned, and persecution was renewed (xxvi.).

LESSONS.

(1) David's victory over self.—To retaliate—to "give a man as good as he sends"—is so natural to us, that the opposite conduct evidences a real triumph. David had gained that. To slay Saul when he had such an opportunity would hardly have been deemed wrong by others; but he refused to take their judgment against that of his own conscience. Imitate him in this. Even when wrongdoing pays, refuse to do it. Let your ambition be, not to get on, and acquire wealth, and position, and power, but to do right. Don't tamper with your own conscience by seeking to accommodate it to conventional ideas. Peter the Great once struck his gardener, who took to his bed, and died in a few days. Peter, hearing of this, said with tears in his eyes: "Alas! I have civilised my own subjects; I have conquered other nations; yet I have not been able to civilise or conquer myself."

(2) David's victory over Saul.—This he obtained on the principle of the Golden Text. Someone has said: "To return evil for good is devil-like; to return evil for evil is beast-like; to return good for good is manlike; but to return good for evil is Godlike." David overcame evil with good. A Chinese Emperor resolved upon destroying certain enemies who had raised an insurrection in one of his provinces. As he approached, they all submitted to him, and, instead of severely punishing them, he treated them kindly. When asked why he had not destroyed them, he replied: "I have done so. They were my enemies, but they are so no longer; I have transformed them into friends" (Rom. xii. 20, 21).

(3) The Lord's victory over David.—This appears in his refusal to touch the Lord's anointed. Only the man who gives God the right place in his heart and life can overcome self, and return evil for good. We do not attain this by struggling, but by faith (Gal. ii. 20).

FROM THE VICTORIA NYANZA, says The Church Missionary Intelligencer, no news has come since Mr. Douglas Hooper left in January. It is some years since so long an interval elapsed without letters. Let not the four brethren there—Mackay, Gordon, Walker, Deekes—be forgotten for a moment in our prayers.

MR. SPURGEON AND HIS STUDENTS.—In the September Sword and Trowel Mr. Spurgeon refers to the assembly of his college students after their vacation, and says:—"Our readers are earnestly requested to pray for the College, to which the editor of The Sword and the Trowel devotes so much care, and thought, and time. Oh that the Lord may raise up many witnesses for his truth in these evil days! Great attempts are made to keep our brethren out of pulpits, but opponents might as well endeavour to keep the sun from shining on the fields."

ROME AND PALESTINE.—"The Roman Catholics make it no secret that they are determined to conquer Palestine." Such is the statement Rev. J. Zeller makes in The Church Missionary Intelligencer. Writing with respect to the reinforcements sent to Palestine, and contrasting the insignificance of these accessions when compared with those of the Romanists, he says:—"Almost every year we have caravans of more than five hundred French people, mostly priests and nuns, coming to Jerusalem, and marching into the town with a flag bearing the motto of the Crusaders of old, 'Dieu le veut.'"

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Church Congress will open at Cardiff on Tuesday, October 1, and continue for the three following days.

Rev. Charles John Corfe, chaplain of Her Majesty's Dockyard, Portsmouth, has been selected by the Archbishop of Canterbury as Bishop of Corea, in which country the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel are commencing a mission.

The vicarage of the new parish of St. George's, Tiverton, Devon, has been accepted by Rev. Prebendary W. J. Edmonds, rector of Highbray, South Molton, a well-known evangelical clergyman, who was for some years a missionary in India in connection with the C.M.S.

Rev. E. A. Douglas, curate of Hendon, Sunderland; Rev. J. W. Charlton, curate of St. Benet's, Stepney, E.; and Rev. W. Wallace, curate of Portaferry, Ireland, have recently been accepted for service abroad by the Church Missionary Society. The two last named go to Bengal.

The Archbishop of Canterbury will shortly be asked by the Church Missionary Society to approve the appointment of a clergyman, with large Indian experience, as Bishop of Eastern Equatorial Africa. It is now more than a year since Dr. Parker's death, which followed soon on the murder of Bishop Hannington; but, in view of the troubles in Equatorial and Central Africa, no haste has been made to select one from among the many volunteers for this post of danger and honour.

BAPTIST.

Dean Perowne, of Peterborough, was among Mr. Spurgeon's congregation at the evening service at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday week.

A new mission-room in connection with the church at Brasted, Kent, was opened last week at French-street, a hamlet where for the past three years cottage-meetings and open-air services have been held. The room is an iron structure, seating about fifty persons.

The Baptist and Congregational Churches of Thames, New Zealand, have united for worship and communion. Each church is to preserve its entire independence, and manage its own affairs in matters of church government and discipline. Church meetings will be held in the building belonging to each denomination respectively, and the separate Sunday-schools are to be maintained, but all other meetings will be united.

The autumnal meetings of the Baptist Ministers' and Missionaries' Prayer Union are to be held at John-street Chapel, Bedford-row, London, on September 23, 24, and 25. The speakers will include Revs. J. T. Briscoe, J. P. Clark, Dr. Clifford, W. Cuff, J. B. Figgis, Hugh Price Hughes, Charles Leach, F. B. Meyer, Peter Thompson, J. T. Wigner, Z. B. Woffendale, Mr. C. R. Parsons, and Mrs. Ormiston Chant. The secretary of the Union is Rev. J. E. Martin, The Manse, Erith, Kent.

METHODIST.

The Primitive Methodists have held a great Holiness Convention at Derby. It began on August 11, and continued until the 18th. A large number of ministers took part, and it is believed great spiritual good has resulted.

Rev. T. Champness, of the Joyful News Mission, has hired the Secularist Hall at Rochdale for religious services, on the understanding that he vacates when Mr. Bradlaugh, the atheist, visits the town, and requires the use of it.

The dead body of Mr. Sewell, a well-known Free Methodist local preacher, of Holbeach, Lincolnshire, was found on the railway near Holbeach. It is supposed that the deceased was crossing the line, and was killed by a goods train.

Mrs. Wiseman is lecturing in this country on her experiences in India during a recent visit. She gives vivid descriptions of the life in the zenanas, and has interested various provincial audiences in the women of India and Ceylon.

The open-air workers at West-hill, Hastings, have lately been greatly assisted in their work by visitors from London and elsewhere. The help of other Christian friends visiting the town is solicited. Brass instruments will be especially useful.

In Sunday-school work the Wesleyans stand first among the Free Churches, having more teachers and nearly as many scholars as the Congregationalists and Baptists combined. The teachers number 129,472, and the scholars 928,056, the latter showing an increase on the year of nearly 20,000.

Four clergymen—the vicar and curate of Biddulph, the rector of Biddulph Moor, and the incumbent of Knypersley—were present recently at a Wesleyan bazaar at Bradley Green, in North Staffordshire. Pleasant compliments and expressions of mutual esteem passed between them and the Methodist ministers and laymen who were assembled.

The Leysian Mission is seeking to develop its work in Whitecross-street, E.C. The trustees of the Old Chequer Mission have given a site, valued at £1500; a further piece of land has been purchased, and a spacious new hall and premises, costing about £7000, are to be built. It is proposed in these new buildings to carry on religious, social, and philanthropic work of all kinds. Amongst other phases may be mentioned a medical mission, a crèche, a boys' brigade, a working men's club, and a gymnasium.

SALVATION ARMY.

Sixty new barracks will be opened during the month of October, in addition to those which are arranged for in September.

Good times are reported from the Ceylon division. We learn from the Indian War Cry for August 12 that in one meeting, conducted by native and English officers, eighty sought pardon and purity.

A most enthusiastic welcome-home meeting was held at the Congress Hall, Clapton, on Monday night, in connection with Mr. and Mrs. Ballington-Booth's visit to this country, many being unable to gain admittance.

Another batch of Salvationists, twelve in number, have been convicted at Whitchurch for obstruction, handcuffed by the police, although there was no resistance nor the breath of an attempt on the part of the populace to rescue them, and dragged like criminals through the streets to prison.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A mission-hall on the Newfound Pool estate, Leicester, to accommodate 170 persons, has recently been opened.

"Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Services for the People" are being commenced this month at Tacket-street Church, Ipswich.

The foundation of the Morley Memorial Congregational Church at Fishponds, Bristol, was laid the other day by Mr. Charles Morley, of London, son of the late Samuel Morley, as a memorial to whom the church is to be erected. The new church will be capable of seating 450 persons.

Sir F. T. Mappin, M.P., presided last week at the opening of the Dore and Totley Union Church, erected at a cost of £280, to accommodate 150 worshippers. Of recent years a considerable population has gathered in the Abbeydale Valley, and in this effort to provide for them religious instruction, Congregationalists, Baptists, and different sections of Methodists have united.

Mrs. G. S. Reaney, of Manchester, preached at Harecourt Chapel, Canonbury, on Sunday week. The sermon was throughout a series of parables, each followed with a well-pointed appeal. One, of a deacon, whose wife had fallen into the habit of drinking, led up to an appeal to husbands to love their wives—to place themselves in that position that they might fill their wives' lives by thinking of those little fondnesses which make up the whole of a wife's existence.

Rev. G. S. Reaney, preaching on Sunday week at Cavendish Chapel, Manchester, referred to the movement in favour of eight hours as the working day. Thousands of labourers, he said, are convinced that the present conditions of their life are destructive of all progress to a nobler manhood. In years that are gone, the efforts of the working classes to better their position have received neither sympathy nor help from the churches. It is to be hoped that wiser counsels will prevail in the future.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Rev. W. W. Tulloch is arranging for a series of special Sunday evening services to be held in Maxwell (Established) Church, Glasgow. Various well-known preachers will take part in the course, the general theme of which will be "The Social Mission of Christianity."

Rev. John Robertson bade farewell to his congregation at Stonehaven on Sunday week, previous to entering upon the pastorate of the M'Crie Roxburgh Free Church, Edinburgh, in succession to Rev. John McNeill. The church presented a very remarkable appearance, every inch of space being occupied, and many people being unable to gain admission.

A special meeting was held in Flisk and Creich Free Church, a few days ago, to celebrate the jubilee of the senior minister, Dr. Taylor, author of "A History of the Disruption," and several other volumes. Dr. Laird, Moderator of the General Assembly, stated in the course of his address that there are now thirty ministers in the Free Church, of whom five are in Fife, who have attained their jubilee.

In Montrose Established Church, the other day, Rev. J. Duthie, who recently returned to Scotland, after labouring for over thirty years in Southern Travancore, delivered a lecture on "Indian Missions." He read extracts from letters he had received from the Maharajah of Travancore and his Prime Minister, giving testimony to their appreciation of the social and moral effects of missionary work in that province.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Protestant Orphan Society for Antrim and Down has now 710 children under its care.

The united evangelistic meetings, commenced in Monaghan immediately after the mission services recently held in that town by Rev. Geo. C. Grubb, are rapidly increasing in attendance and interest, and have already been made the means of great spiritual blessing to many.

An interesting meeting on behalf of the Bible Colportage Society of Ireland, whose agents are doing an excellent work in the counties of Donegal and Armagh, was held in Lady Annesley's schoolroom, Newcastle, co. Down, on Friday week, when addresses were delivered by Revs. Dr. Irvine, John Elliott, and others.

A most interesting valedictory meeting, the first of the kind ever held in the place, has just been held in the Parochial Schoolroom, Queenstown, to bid Godspeed to Miss Josephine Porter, who has disposed of her property, and is going out at her own cost to labour in Japan, under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society.

At the recent meeting of the Irish Presbyterian Foreign Mission Committee in Portrush, Rev. Wm. Moore, from Spain, gave a very interesting account of the progress of the college in Puerto Santa Maria for the education of a native ministry. It has already furnished one pastor (Señor Gimenez), who has charge of the work at Cordova and the stations in the neighbourhood.

A third edition of "Hear the Other Side," which gives an account of the conversion of Rev. Thomas Connellan, late Roman Catholic curate of St. Peter's, Athlone, has been published by Mr. George Herbert, of Dublin. In this pamphlet Mr. Connellan describes the way in which he was led to renounce the Pope's supremacy, the confessional and transubstantiation, and several of the other doctrines peculiar to the Church of Rome; and gives much insight into the training and duties of the priesthood.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Alexander Rentoul, minister of Sandymount Presbyterian Church, Dublin.—Mr. Jas. Johnston, of Dromady, near Clones, aged 68, an earnest local preacher.—Rev. William Wales, hon. canon of Peterborough Cathedral.—In South Africa, Rev. John H. Morgan, of the C.M.S. Mid-China Mission.—Mr. James Duncan, a prominent Wesleyan layman at Redhill, Surrey.—Rev. James Hay, D.D., senior minister of the Established Church, Inverkeillor, N.B.—Rev. Chas. Kushalli, native pastor of the C.M.S. in the island of Mauritius.—Rev. G. W. Thompson, American Presbyterian missionary in Brazil.—Rev. A. Shaw, Free Church minister, Torosay, Mull, N.B.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

THE JESUITS are gaining ground in Austria with remarkable rapidity. Besides several settlements, they have eight colleges in the empire.

THE EMPEROR OF GERMANY.—While in Norwegian waters recently, the Emperor William II. was on board his vessel the Hohenzollern during Sunday. Divine service was held according to the form prevalent in the Prussian army, the Emperor himself delivering a brief address to his suite and the sailors.

THE LOCUST PLAGUE IN ALGERIA.—Thanks to the activity of the Government and the colonists, the locusts, which not long ago threatened a repetition of last year's plague, have been almost entirely destroyed. The ravages of the insects have this year been insignificant and local, the crops having on the whole been excellent.

SWISS OLD CATHOLICS.—The fifteenth annual Synod was attended by 110 delegates, representing 48 congregations of the Christian Catholic Church of Switzerland. During last year over 700 new members were received. Laymen are three times as numerous as ecclesiastics in the Synod, the president of which is State-Councillor Philippi.

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS IN FRANCE.—At the thirty-seventh annual meeting of the Sunday-school Society of France, testimony was borne to the progress of the movement. There has been satisfactory advance since 1882, when there were 1133 schools in the country, Corsica and Cantal being the only departments to which the excellent institution was a stranger.

CHRISTIAN CHINESE AND OPIUM.—When the native Presbyterian community of Moukden, in Manchuria, where the United Presbyterians have an active mission, were recently forming rules for their church, of their own accord they resolved that no opium smoker should be a member, and it was the missionary himself who got them to make an exception in favour of elderly converts. This is an indication of the opinion which the intelligent Chinese hold as to the mischievous nature of the drug.

NORTH SCHLESWIG has a population of about 130,000 souls, who speak the Danish language, but are under the dominion of Prussia, part of whose policy is to stamp out the Danish language in the territory. All school teaching, except in religion, which is confined to six hours a week, is given in the German language, so that the children are growing up unable to read the Bible in the language of their homes. It is felt in Denmark that the Protestants of Germany might well exert themselves for the reversal of this policy, and the establishment of religious liberty among the Danes of Schleswig.

A FALSE MESSIAH has lately appeared in Arabia, and multitudes of Jews are following him. A man of high education, with tremendous force of character, he has been greeted by the poor among his people as the very deliverer they need. Regiments of life-guards, composed of Hebrew youths, protect his person, and he has even deceived some of the wise and prudent of the Jews of Northern Arabia. The rabbis are fully occupied in pacifying the excitement, and preventing the further spread of the movement. What, however, the people really need is to be told of God's Messiah, who, though rejected of their forefathers, was raised from the dead, and lives for ever, as Prophet, Priest, and King.

PROTESTANTISM IN JERUSALEM.—The "Evangelical Jerusalem Foundation" is henceforth to do, in the interest of the German-speaking inhabitants of Jerusalem, the work which was contemplated by the now obsolete agreement as to the Anglo-German bishopric of Jerusalem. The foundation has at disposal a large sum of money, and its object, as expressed in the imperial statute, is "The maintenance of the existing, and the creation of new evangelical establishments and institutions in Jerusalem, especially of a church and school, as well as the support of the Protestant congregation there." A board of control in Berlin will supervise the affairs of the congregation.

Appeals.

The Cry of the Children.—There are thousands of little children at this moment in East London literally crying for bread. Every shilling sent will provide twelve free meals (consisting of pint of soup and slice of bread). Will your readers send timely help?—Rev. J. W. ATKINSON, 308, Old Ford-road, London, E.

Hook, Lydiard Tregoz, Swindon.—Funds are needed to carry on work amongst young men, &c., the present mission-room being too small. An appeal in this paper three years ago enabled us to get a small cottage and utilise as mission-room. The work has grown, and now much must be stopped if help is not forthcoming.—Address Miss F. BAILY, Lydiard Tregoz Rectory, Swindon, Wilts.

Evangelistic Mission.—DEAR SIR,—In the midst of much prosperous tent work in various parts of the country, the late gales have played havoc with several of the marquees, and we are urgently needing means for the repair of them, and supply of one or two new ones to take the place of some utterly destroyed. With fine weather there may be many weeks of happy Gospel work in very needy parts if we were able to repair the damage done. I should also be thankful for assistance for the general current expenses of the Evangelistic Mission in all its branches. We would at the same time ask your readers to unite in thanksgiving to God for many won to the Saviour during this summer campaign.—Yours very truly, C. RUSSELL HURDITCH.
164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, London, N.W.

Mr. E. Hurditch's Work in Cardiff.—DEAR SIR,—I wrote you a fortnight ago concerning the good work commenced in the tent on the moors. The tent has since then been wrecked in a gale, and the meetings continued in the Wesleyan Chapel, kindly lent for the purpose. There is here an immense population of many thousands. The people are crying out for help; many of them have been enlightened, and are asking for more light. Something must be done to reach them. It is proposed that a portable wooden building be erected, capable of seating, say, six hundred people, so that the immediate necessities of the work may be met, and that further evangelistic work may be undertaken. As a permanent site cannot be obtained, the building could then be used for itinerant mission work in several parts of Cardiff, and also in Wales. The cost of such a building would be about £250. The work would be carried on under the auspices of the Evangelistic Mission. Contributions may be sent to the director, Mr. C. RUSSELL HURDITCH, 164, Alexandra-road, London, N.W.—Yours faithfully, F. C. SPURR.

ITALY is more than ever open to evangelical truth. One indication of this is found in the fact that Pastor J. P. Pons, of Naples, moderator of the Waldensian "Table," has been honoured with the distinction of Knight of the Crown of Italy. It is needless to say that the Waldenses see in this a new mark of the favour with which the Government views their approaching celebration of the second centenary of the "Glorious Return."

THE FIRST MISSIONARY TO THE MOLOKAI LEPERS.—The first minister to make his home among the Sandwich Island lepers (says an American contemporary) was not the late Father Damien, but a native member of the Congregational Church, Rev. J. Hanaloa. His wife was attacked with leprosy about twenty years ago, and he voluntarily accompanied her to the leper island of Molokai. He is not yet a leper, and, as he is an old man, the probabilities are that he will not be stricken with the dreadful disease. He is a Christian hero, and, like Father Damien, is entitled to the honour accorded to all men who sacrifice themselves in the causeof comforting and helping suffering humanity.

RUSSIA.—A number of Letts in the Baltic provinces who were converted some time ago to the Russian Orthodox faith, have lately reverted to Lutheranism. The reason given is that the Letts could not understand the service celebrated in Russia, while the Lutheran pastors uniformly use the Lett dialect.

A REMARKABLE MISSIONARY MEETING was held in the large foreign settlement at Shanghai on May 1. General Kennedy, U.S.A. Consul-General, presided; Rev. T. R. Stevenson, pastor of the Union Church, opened with prayer. Rev. W. Muirhead, L.M.S., spoke on India, Ceylon, and Burmah; Dr. Allen, American Episcopal Methodist, on China and Japan; Mr. C. Thorne, an English resident, and a member of the C.M.S. Finance Committee, on the missionary work going on in Shanghai. Rev. F. L. Hawks Pott, American Episcopal Church, read a paper by Dr. Percy Matthews, describing personal visits to Moosonee, &c.; Rev. G. F. Fitch, American Presbyterian, spoke on Mexico and South America; and Archdeacon Moule, C.M.S., on Africa and the Islands of the Sea. Rev. H. C. Hodges, British chaplain, closed with a few hearty words.

WEDDING GIFT
— TO —
MR. AND MRS. J. W. C. FEGAN.

Many friends who have long been interested in Mr. Fegan's earnest efforts in the rescue of homeless boys, desire on his marriage (which took place on the 23rd ultimo) to present him with a token of their goodwill and esteem.

It has been ascertained that Mr. and Mrs. Fegan much prefer that any expression of regard on the part of their friends should take the form of a substantial help to the Homes, rather than any gift to themselves personally.

It is proposed that a sum of money be raised, to be used at Mr. Fegan's discretion, for any purpose connected with the Lord's work under his care, and it is intended that the amount gathered, and all the letters forwarding the separate contributions, be given to Mr. and Mrs. Fegan on their return home.

All remittances to the Wedding Gift Fund should be addressed to the Treasurer,

TESTIMONIALS from Purchasers of above Organ.

W. ELDERKIN, Esq., Spalding, Lincoln, writes:—"I now have one of your pipe top organs, No. 1,500, and have had it tried by most of the Organists in the town, and all pronounce it the best Organ ever played on. I have also the "Chime" No. 8,000, which I consider a perfect marvel both as regards tone, workmanship, and handsome appearance."

G. D. CHRISTIE, Esq., 12, Crown Alley, Dublin, says of the No. 8,000 "Chime" Organ:—"I had one of the best amateur organists in Dublin to play on it. He pronounced it the best he ever played on. I may say that, as a piece of furniture, it is more than value at the price. You may give me as a reference."

THOMAS WALTON, of No. 9, Argyle St., Sunderland, Durham Co., Eng., writes:—"Your Style No. 8,000 Organ is simply perfection both to eye and ear, and I claim to have saved 10 Guineas by buying from you direct."

A. LINDSAY, Esq., of 38, Trinity Square, Southwark, London, S.E., Eng., writes:—"Organ Style 8,000 received this week; both my wife and I are highly delighted with it; accept our thanks for sending such an elegant Organ."

HENRY BLOCKLEY, Esq., of 13, Russell Square, Leicester, England, writes:—"We are all very much pleased with the 8,000 Organ you have sent us over. Its tone is remarkably fine, pure, sweet, and harmonious—while its case is an ornament to any drawing room."

J. FRANCIS, Esq., of 13, Francis St., Hetton Downs, Fence Houses, Durham Co., Eng., writes:—"Style 8,000 has given every satisfaction, and I consider it a marvel of cheapness. I am only too happy that I noticed your advertisement."

R. E. DAVIS, Esq., of Lurganboy, Manorhamilton, Ireland, writes:—"I am very much pleased with 8,000 in every particular, and consider it marvellous how you can supply such an instrument for 14 guineas. It is really elegant in finish and exquisite in tone."

Mr. JOSEPH PEDELTY, of Craghead, Chester-le-Street, England, says:—"Allow me to express my very high appreciation of your organ. I have seen in my time many reed instruments, but this, for purity and sweetness of tone and power, is unsurpassed and unrivalled. I can safely say that its equal could not be bought for £30. I am thoroughly satisfied and highly pleased."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

ADVANCED CASE OF CONSUMPTION.—A SEA CAPTAIN.

The Editor of the Protestant Standard, in an article which appeared in that paper, April 13th last, headed, "CONSUMPTION IS CURABLE," says:—

"Only a few days ago a gentleman told us that a friend of his, a sea captain, had advanced so far in Consumption as to be almost dying, and incapable of going outside his house. He was advised to try Mr. Congreve's remedies. He did so, and with the result that he has been ploughing the mighty deep during the past winter, as hale and hearty a man as ever commanded a vessel. We also know of a gentleman who is now one of the most successful traders in Liverpool, who, had it not been for Mr. Congreve's skill, would have been long ere this in the silent tomb. Consumption is curable, but it needs timely treatment, and that from those who best understand the character of the disease.—ED. P.S.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Miss Sarah Robinson, Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth,

is now completing her Scheme for the benefit of Soldiers, Sailors, their Families, Widows, and Orphans, and the poor of Portsmouth, by the erection of a large Gospel Hall and Coffee Palace (with 170 beds), opposite the Portsmouth Town Railway Station, at a cost of £30,000, including site. This is her fifth, and last, House; will be self-supporting; and, like the others, will be vested in Trustees.

Having no family claims and few personal wants, Miss Robinson has always freely spent her own money on these Institutions, besides collecting the needful funds. She is now making a great effort, at the cost of much personal suffering, to obtain help for the new building. After being confined to the house for eight years, she is undertaking a three-months' tour, by road, in an invalid's coach, built for the purpose, intending (D.V.) to travel a thousand miles, and address meetings in fifty towns, after which she will publish a full account of her journey and its results. She travels at her own expense, accompanied by one helper.

THE INSPIRATION OF THE BIBLE.

I CORDIALLY thank those friends who, in response to my appeal for help in preparing a Million Copies of the Lecture on Inspiration for free distribution, have ordered in advance some 140,000 copies during the past few weeks. We hope to go to press October 1 or earlier. Meanwhile, we need prompt orders for at least 350,000 more, before beginning to print. Many may have felt unable to buy a thousand copies, even at the very low price of Two Guineas. Accordingly we make this ESPECIAL OFFER. Up to October 15, 1889, the Publishers will receive cash subscriptions for the new Penny edition of "Inspiration," at the thousand rate, One Guinea for 500 copies, and, in addition, I will personally GIVE to each purchaser an extra thousand copies, provided it is expressly asked for. Let no one hesitate to request the extra copies if they would like them. Those, however, who prefer not to call for the extra pamphlets will have the satisfaction of knowing that thus a moderate profit is afforded the Author, for the extension of the work in other directions. Some of the Lord's stewards may feel disposed to help meet expenses by donations. Up to October 15, 1889, the giver of a shilling will be able to send out its full value in tracts at the absolute costs of production by the ton. Not a penny will be reserved for Author's profits, nor for two months' time and labour now being given to the work by his son in London. Crossed cheques should be made out to H. L. Hastings, and sent to him care of Messrs. Marshall Brothers, 10, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

Regarding the usefulness of this Lecture, the following words have been spoken:—

"One of the most important essays of modern times. I will do my best to distribute it widely.—LORD SHAFTESBURY.

"I, myself, would walk ten miles to hear it again."—D. L. MOODY.

"One of the most pungent and useful ever published."—CANON WILBERFORCE.

Address, MARSHALL BROTHERS, 10, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.
H. L. HASTINGS, Editor of the Anti-Infidel Library.

"I haven't taken up teetotal work; but teetotal work has taken me up! Morgan & Scott made me accept a big, handsome Pledge Book, in February; and somehow the thing has fairly caught fire here. One led to another, and yesterday, boys were coming all day to sign! I had twenty-five recruits yesterday alone, and a whole squad more are coming this evening! and we are going in for getting EVERY boy in the whole village!—and now, 'Please, miss, mayn't the girls sign?' So I have got to open a girls' branch as well! So the work grows."

"'IN VIEW of the great dishonour done to our most gracious God and Saviour; and in consideration of the damage, temporal and eternal, to our fellow-creatures, through the drinking of strong drink, I AGREE to abstain from all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage, and to discountenance their use by others (John xv. 5; 1 Thess. v. 22; Philippians iv. 13).'"

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Established 1822.

FOR the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible throughout Ireland. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities as City Missionaries, and visit all denominations, where permitted. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES—27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN; and 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE.

NOTE.—Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm (not only cut off from the comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid), may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

HELP WANTED FOR THE TOILERS OF THE DEEP.

TEN Mission Vessels now cruise with the Trawling Fleets, each being at once a CHURCH, DISPENSARY, LIBRARY, and CLUB. Funds are required to provide a Mission Vessel for EVERY FLEET, and for the maintenance of the HOSPITAL MISSION SHIPS Queen Victoria and Albert. The urgent necessity of these floating Hospitals is shown by the fact that during last year over 7,000 cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated on board the Dispensary of the Mission Vessels. WHO WILL HELP? Large or small Offerings will be thankfully acknowledged.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Wm. Cuff, of Shoreditch Tabernacle.

A great Missionary Convention of Young Men will be held in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington, on Tuesday, October 15. The speakers will include Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, Rev. A. Maclaren, D.D., Rev. John McNeill, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, and others. Tickets of admission and information can be obtained of W. C. Minifie, Convention Secretary, Pastors' College, Newington, S.E.

We direct attention to our correspondence columns, in which will be found two letters from esteemed correspondents on the unhappy and prolonged strike of riverside labourers in London. We are sure that many will sympathise with Mr. Chubb in his expressions of perplexity as to the best and most righteous method of ending the social strife that has burst upon us. For our own part we have every wish to recognise the fact that the dispute has two sides, and that the path of the Dock Directors is by no means free of difficulty. Therefore we have supported the proposal that the questions at issue should be submitted to impartial arbitration. But it has seemed clear to us that the action of the Directors in declining to justify their attitude by any satisfactory explanations, coupled with the unfortunate language of their chief spokesman, has justly caused the public to conclude that they have been actuated throughout by motives of a self-regarding character.

The position of those who act as leaders of the dock labourers' strike is no easy or enviable one. With the best intentions, they may fail in some cases to control the action of the rank and file; but, if they would not alienate the best wishes of the community from their movement, they will have to exercise rigid care to exclude forcible intimidation from their armoury of persuasives. There have recently been some bad cases of this sort, as to which the correspondent of The Times writes:—

> Of course these cases of intimidation are very hard to follow, but if reliance is to be placed upon the opinion of a gentleman with whom I had a conversation, there can be no doubt as to the practice. His business lies among the wharfingers; he is a man in whom confidence may be placed; he has been at work throughout the strike, and he assures me with the utmost earnestness that some influence is at work among the men which is sufficient to cause great terror. For the most part men appear to fear not so much immediate violence as that they may become marked men; and it is quite certain that many hundreds of men would return to work if they dared. In any case Mr. Tillett's defence against the charge of intimidation was characterised by marked feebleness.

It will be a thousand pities if a good cause is spoiled through lack of self-restraint on the part of some of the strikers; nothing will so speedily produce a revulsion of feeling with respect to the sufferers as acts of violence or intimidation.

In view of the turn that matters took in the end of last week through the interposition of the Lord Mayor, and others co-operating with him, we are free to express our sincere regret that the strikers so unceremoniously rejected the terms of the compromise submitted to them. That proposal virtually conceded the modified demands of the labourers, and was, indeed, a full justification of their revolt. If the directors are able to concede the sixpence per hour after influential outside pressure, we cannot understand why they should not have done so at the first. Seeing that the dispute is now narrowed down to a question of date, we earnestly hope it will be ended by a little mutual concession, so that the transit trade of the metropolis may be liberated and once more set going, to the mutual comfort and benefit of all.

A largely attended meeting of ministers connected with the Free Churches of London was held in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on Monday afternoon, to take concerted action with respect to the dockers' strike. The chair was taken by Dr. Hannay, and Revs. J. McNeill, Dr. Clifford, Dr. Lunn, F. B. Meyer, W. Cuff, Fleming Williams, and others took part. It was agreed to raise a fund to relieve the distress, to hold a public meeting to express sympathy with the dockers, and to send a deputation to the Lord Mayor and the Dock Companies urging the immediate granting of the demands of the men.

A recent visitor to the Paris Exhibition wishes to urge upon Christians the pressing need of embracing the present opportunity, until October 15, that is afforded at the Paris Exhibition for distributing tracts and Gospels in French among the millions of visitors, who are chiefly Roman Catholics from all parts of France. There is very little of this work being done, although there is no practical prohibition of it. Mr. Jaye, who is staying at 205, Rue St. Honoré, Paris, and is daily distributing in the Exhibition, will be glad to give any information to those interested in such work.

It is proposed to hold an important congress at Paris on Lord's Day questions on September 24—28, which will be attended by several influential delegates from England.

A few days ago, while some Christian people were conducting a Gospel meeting on Harold's Cross Green, Dublin, a number of lads threw stones, and commenced a disturbance by hooting. The police restored order, and summoned the offenders before Mr. Keys, a city magistrate, with a truly regretable result. Having been informed, erroneously, that the mission workers belonged to the Salvation Army, the magistrate expressed his utter disapproval of their work, by saying: "I think these people are a greater nuisance than those young persons who interfered with them." He refused to inflict merited punishment for offences which were not denied, and even went out of his way to say that, in case any of the persons who had been holding religious meetings in the public squares were brought before him, he would know how to punish them."

We are not surprised to see that this singular magisterial action has excited the indignation of Dublin Christians. Rev. R. D. Bluett, vicar of North Strand Church, writing to The Irish Times, points out that the logical result of the proceedings is that persons engaged in religious services in the open air may be assaulted with impunity.

> The decision amounts to this, that it is unlawful to hold a prayer-meeting in any public place in the city. This is certainly a new view of the law which few of us would be willing to believe to be correct.

Evidently the right of outdoor congregations needs at the present day the jealous conserving care of evangelical believers.

The discussion going on in the columns of The Times as to the working of the "Dual Basis" of the Church of England Temperance Society shows the practical difficulty of attempting to combine two such opposite principles as those of total abstinence and moderate indulgence in strong drink. To be of any effect at all, the fight against alcohol must be thoroughgoing, and this can never be the case in a Society that is weighted by the lukewarm notions of "moderate drinkers." While the two parties are contending as to the proportionate share they ought to have in the management of affairs, the real work of combating a gigantic evil remains undone. Compromises in matters of this sort are a delusion and a snare.

A correspondent of The Times makes out a strong plea for the appointment of several female factory inspectors. The appropriateness of this must be patent to everybody, and needs no detailed proof. We can scarcely conceive that such a reasonable and desirable arrangement would meet with opposition from any source, and it is matter for surprise that Parliament has not sanctioned it before now.

Our very orthodox friend, Dr. Fulton, of Boston, will be somewhat amused when he hears that the Bishop of Chichester has written to Rev. J. G. Gregory, of Brighton, soundly rating that clergyman for permitting him without protest to use language which "directly impugns the vital doctrine of the Incarnation." The words of Dr. Fulton objected to had reference to the mother of our Lord, and were directed against the system of Mariolatry fostered by the Romish Church. We think they were certainly indefensible. They remind us of the remark of a wise woman who said that some Protestants are so vehemently carried away, that they forget to speak respectfully of the Virgin Mary. Nevertheless, we cannot imagine how the expression could be twisted so as to convey the meaning that the Bishop extracts from them. It is satisfactory to find the Bishop so zealously defending the fundamental doctrines of the Christian faith; we wish he were equally ready to intervene when Ritualistic clergy in his diocese, and in the very same town, afford him infinitely more occasion to do so, in the interests of Bible truth.

The Pall Mall Gazette of Thursday, last week, had a very unbecoming and unworthy sneer at the "piety" of the German Empress. In commenting on a recent Government ukase as to restrictions in public dancing among the young in Germany, our contemporary says there is no reason to be surprised at such a law, seeing that "when the sovereign lady makes a present of a fan to another crowned lady, she causes a Bible text to be painted on it among the flowers." We find it difficult to discover the logic of this reasoning; but, apart from that, we fail to see why such a very proper and praiseworthy act on the part of any lady, royal or otherwise, should be deemed to indicate excessive piety. The strange accusation comes more strangely from a newspaper that is frequently wont to interlard its articles with Scripture phraseology in a fashion that many of its readers deem irreverent.

The Nineteenth Century contains an article on "Diseases caught from Butcher's Meat," by Dr. Behrend, who has bestowed much attention upon the subject. He asserts that a considerable percentage of meat sent into the English markets is infected with tubercular disease, and very serious facts as to the results on the mortality of the country are set forth in his paper. We draw attention to it, not on this account only, but because of its quotations from the writings of one of the most distinguished French physicians in relation to the hygienic rules which dominate the Israelites in the matter of animal food. Owing to them the Jews to this day are insured against tubercular diathesis in a manner altogether exceptional.

It must surely sometimes occur to the thoughtful Christian that in his prayers there is apt to be too much of the "I" and the "Me," too much limiting of the petitions to temporal blessings, too much dwarfing down of prayer to mere petition. Perhaps the following extract from one of Dr. Vaughan's University sermons may be instructive as bearing upon this point:—

Prayer is not the synonym of petition. Petition itself is not chiefly of earth. Prayer is speaking to God, whatsoever be the voice, the language, the subject of discourse: it may be confession, it may be adoration. If it be petition, it may be entreaty, it may be deprecation, it may be intercession, it may be for this life, it may be for the soul... A man may pray who asks nothing, who but dwells in the secret place of the Most High, silent from petition, counting it enough to abide under the shadow of the Almighty, the All-loving... The reality of prayer is the meeting of the two spirits—the "I" and the "I am"—unto communication, unto converse, into interchange (with reverence be it spoken) of thought and speech, of life and love. Where this is, prayer is: though nothing be asked, and nothing be given, save that ineffable grace of the Divine presence, from which the earthly countenance shines, and men take knowledge of the man that he has been with Jesus.

At the recent Alcoholic Congress at Paris, amongst other sad revelations, it was elicited that during the last eight years the dramshops of Paris have increased from twenty-four thousand to twenty-nine thousand, that in thirty years the consumption of alcohol has been trebled, in the last ten years doubled, and that no less than thirty-six million gallons of liquid poison have been manufactured out of potatoes. The seed thus sown has borne its inevitable fruit in a startling increase of crime, disease, insanity, and suicide. The Congress passed a resolution to the effect that inebriates should be treated as mad, and that prison hospitals should be created for them. But this is to be wise after the event. What is required is to check the present free-trade in drink which begets these inebriates.

China is gradually but surely being opened up to commerce and civilisation. A telegram from Peking received on Friday last announces that an Imperial Decree has been issued sanctioning the construction of a railway from that city to Hankow, and orders have been given for the commencement of the work. The increased facilities to travel that will accrue will be favourable, among other things, to the development of missionary effort.

Some earnest Christians in Manchester are protesting through the Press against the proposed establishment in the city of a great "Palace of Varieties"; in other words, a monster music-hall. Knowing something of the wide-spread demoralisation that is caused among young people in London by such places, with the aid of the drink, we hope that the Manchester community will successfully resist this addition to the temptations and pitfalls of their city.

One of the outward evidences of the subtle influence which is insidiously working in the interests of Rome is to be seen in the attempts often made to belittle and throw contempt upon the Reformation, and all who had a share in it. The Athenæum has lately been attacking Tyndale, who at the cost of his life gave us our English Bible—for his translation, notwithstanding repeated revisions and the attempted improvements of modern scholars, is substantially the Bible with which we are familiar. It is asserted that the proscriptions and burning of the Bible in England were due to the fact that the man who translated it was an obscure individual, of no responsible position in "the Church," but a private chaplain of insulting manners, most violent temper, and unscrupulous in his assertions. William Tyndale was, it is true, a private chaplain, but a perusal of Rev. R. Demaus' exhaustive and scholarly biography (R.T.S.) will suffice to show that the above estimate is most erroneous.

The true reason for the Bible-burnings and proscriptions was that the "Established Catholic Church" of the beginning of the sixteenth century, being full of corruptions and abuses, "loved darkness rather than light." She was the uncompromising opponent of all attempts to enable the people to read the Word of God for themselves, and, by accepting it as the rule of faith, to burst their bonds of ignorance and superstition, and give the lie to the blasphemous claim of "the Church" to act as the only interpreter of the Scriptures. "Lord, open the eyes of the King of England" were the last words of the martyr of Vilvorde. May the eyes of England, as a nation, be opened in these days to see the fatal web which Romanism and its handmaid Ritualism are craftily spinning around her.

The American correspondent of The Manchester Examiner and Times describes the subjection of the municipality, and of even some of the judges of New York city, to the liquor interest as shamefully degrading.

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

IN the terrible tempest at Samoa, when ships were going to pieces by the score, and the stoutest hearts quailed, Captain Kane, of the Calliope, slipped his anchors, and called to his engineer, "Put on every pound of steam you can!" There followed several seconds during which it was a terrible question as to whether the storm would master the Calliope, or the Calliope would stem the storm. At last, slowly and majestically, she rode the wave, amid the ringing cheers of the 450 men of the Trenton by her side. Why did she escape when the Trenton and other ships foundered? Because their engines were old and weak, and hers were new and strong. Therefore, my brethren, put off the old man, with his deeds, and have no confidence in the flesh. But have all confidence in Christ, who is not only our Righteousness, but our Strength.—Rev. J. B. Figgis.

"BY WAY OF A TREAT."

The story is told, I think, of Rowland Hill, that one of his deacons was reported to have been to the theatre. The deacon avoided him for some time; but at last they met, and Rowland Hill said, "Oh, I hear you have taken to the theatre lately." "Oh, no, no," was the reply, "I don't go regularly, you know, but just now and then by way of a treat." "Oh, then, if I am told by and by that you are fond of garbage, I will say, Oh, no, you do not feed on it; you just take a little now and then by way of a treat?" Dear friends, what do you feed on by way of a treat? What books do you read? Are they the Lord's food? How often nowadays do people feed on mental garbage, instead of the wholesome food prepared for God's people! If there is any garbage in your possession, put it away, and let it be burned with fire. Walk in the light, and let it shine upon your food, as the lamp upon the shewbread of old. Then let the incense of praise go up from your life—praising Him all the day long, because He makes you glad with the joy of his countenance.—Rev. Hubert Brooke.

EMPTY HOUSES.

In these days of summer, in the West-end of London, one constantly meets with houses that are evidently untenanted. The families have gone out of town. Blinds or shutters cover the windows. The fine carpets have been rolled up; dust-sheets cover the furniture, and everything speaks of desolation; whilst, perhaps, some poor woman as housekeeper has been put in to live in a back room, looking out on a narrow court or yard. That seems to me a figure of the history of many a Christian heart—the best part of the nature given up to neglect and vacuity, while the Holy Spirit has been driven back into some small attic or cellar of our life. And what we need to do is to listen to the pleading of the Spirit of God, and to open to Him rooms long shut, saying, "Blessed Spirit, there is the library of my memory; there is the throne-room of my judgment; the sanctuary of worship; the various apartments given up to my daily life and my daily business—how I long that there should be no room in my heart untenanted by Thyself; oh! that Thou wouldst fill my inner man."—Rev. F. B. Meyer.

GOD'S CHANNEL OF COMMUNICATION.

Christ said that when the Spirit of Truth was come He would make manifest; He would reveal and teach. If God has provided a channel of communication between Himself and man, surely man is bound to accept it, or for ever remain in darkness concerning Him. Some people say that knowledge of God will not come in that way. It reminds me of the canal made a few years ago at Hurdwar to tap the Ganges and irrigate the Gangetic Valley. The Brahmins said: "No, the holy river will never run in that canal, made by infidels." The floodgates were to be opened with great ceremony, and the holy waters were to flow into the canal. The Brahmins made a rope of living men across it, and the officers tried to prevent them by persuasion and by force, but there they stood. Oh no, the Ganges would never go there. No sooner were the flood-gates opened than the flood swept them away. So there is a Divine channel of communication, and all the force of intellect and all the culture of this nineteenth century, cannot prevent the power of God's Spirit from flowing into the channel He has created, to irrigate the desert and the waste places of this world.—Rev. J. Gelson Gregson.

Faith and Force.

BY REV. A. C. DIXON, D.D.

"Then said David to the Philistine, Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield; but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hosts."—1 SAM. xvii. 45.

THIS duel of David with Goliath is but a chapter in the history of the contest always going on between faith and force. The secret of Goliath's strength was trained brute force, assisted and protected by sword, spear, and shield; the secret of David's strength was simple faith in God. Forces—physical, mental, financial, social, and scientific—are constantly putting themselves against God's cause, and challenging his people to combat. The Davids who try to meet force with force are apt to be defeated; but the Davids who meet force with faith in God are sure to conquer.

(1) Faith must often stand alone, while force rallies many followers. The Philistines were evidently enthusiastic in their support of Goliath. David had few sympathisers among the Israelites, until after he had conquered, and had no need of them. Saul discouraged him; his brothers virtually took sides with Goliath. God and little David stood alone. Happy the man who is willing in a crisis of faith to stand alone with God.

(2) Faith should control all the forces at its command. David had skill with his sling, and he used it. His forces were not such as to inspire faith in others. Saul was anxious to give him greater strength by the addition of his armour. Goliath, on the other hand, inspired faith by his gigantic stature and splendid equipment. To see him was to believe that he could not be easily slain. David's source of strength could not be seen because it was in his heart. It consisted simply in his attitude of soul toward God. His faith mastered all the forces at his command; while the forces of Goliath mastered his own faith and the faith of the people. He and they believed that he would conquer, because the indications of greater strength could be seen. Dark the day for God's people when they allow the forces at their command to mould and measure their faith; when they can expect no greater results from God than they can see as naturally flowing from the forces they can see at work. They have then adopted Napoleon's lying maxim: "God is on the side of the strongest battalions." Michael Angelo looked up into the domes of churches so much that he contracted the habit of looking up all the time. Even when walking the streets of Rome his face was turned upward. The man who looks up to God all the time will do a thousandfold more than the forces at his command would warrant. The man who looks only at his forces is no stronger than those forces. Weak forces in the hands of God are strong as God; strong forces which make God dependent upon them have simply their own strength.

(3) Faith is simple, always the same; force may assume many forms. The bear David overtook and killed was one kind of force; the lion was quite another kind, and Goliath still another. The skill which enabled him to kill the lion and the bear would avail him little in fighting the giant. But the same childlike trust in God was sufficient for each. The forces, by constantly changing their forms, sometimes deceive and overcome us. The David who slew the giant was himself slain by the giantess. He forgot to trust in God. Just before the American War the United States Government began to build a large wooden steamer, and spent a quarter of a million on it; but after the invention of the ironclad ship it was found to be worthless, and what remained of it was sold the other day for ten dollars. The ironclad was a new force which the wooden vessel could not resist. But all through the ages there has been no force discovered which faith in God, using the forces at its command, cannot overcome.

The most dangerous forms of force are often the pigmies which meet us in every-day life. When we see the giants we think of God and call for help. But the little worries come to us in such a way that we yield without a struggle. The Turks once conquered a German town, and while they were marching up one of the narrow streets some young women threw from a window a dozen or more beehives among them. The bees did with their little stings what the German soldiers could not do—threw them into such confusion that they were easily put to flight. The Turks knew how to fight men, but not bees. But faith in God will help us to meet and overcome the insectile annoyances of life as well as its giants. However the forces may change their forms, faith may be equal to the emergency.

(4) Faith which seems to expose to danger, really protects; while force, which seems to protect, really exposes to danger. Goliath, wrapped in his coat of mail, seemed to be safe, while David, with his invisible armour of faith, seemed to be in danger. But David was really safe, and Goliath was in danger. The place of greatest apparent danger if we are in the line of duty, is the place of greatest safety. The lions' den and the fiery furnace were for Daniel and his friends the safest places in Persia. John Huss preached at Prague in spite of the king's command, and was safe. He sought a safe conduct from the king to the Council of Constance, and under its protection he was burnt at the stake. Adoniram Judson preached in spite of the rage of the heathen, and was protected; after his visit to Ava to seek permission from the emperor to preach his troubles began, and eighteen months in the dungeon was the result. Martin Luther at the Diet of Worms trusting in God, was never safer in his life. We may stand bare-armed and bareheaded before any or all the giants of evil on earth if we come against them "in the name of the Lord of hosts."

(5) But does David always conquer Goliath? Does not force sometimes prevail over faith? Have not martyrs fallen by the thousand before the thousands of the enemy? Yes, but the defeat is only apparent. The stones which fell upon Stephen hastened him into glory, and doubtless did much to bring about the conversion of the young man at whose feet his murderers laid their clothes. There may be victory through defeat. "In all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us." Study that text in its connection, and you will see how one may be "more than conqueror." When we gain the victory we are conquerors; but, when in our faithfulness to God, evil forces gain the present victory over us, we are "more than conquerors." The martyrs were "more than conquerors," and have special mention in Revelation as receiving great reward. Jesus allowed the forces against Him to conquer. They nailed Him to the cross. But the Goliath that struck Him down was himself killed by the blow. "The death of Christ was the death of death." And the forces at work within or without us will strike us down. But the last enemy to be destroyed is death. By our death we shall conquer death—

"Thy saints in all this glorious war
Shall conquer though they die;
They view the triumph from afar,
And seize it with their eye."

Obituary.

LADY LILIAS SHERBROOKE.

WE regret to announce the death of Lady Lilias Sherbrooke, wife of Rev. H. Nevile Sherbrooke, of Portman Chapel, Baker-street, W. A daughter of the late Earl Cairns, Lady Lilias expired at Oxton Hall, Notts, on Friday last, a few days after her accouchement. We hope next week to give a notice of the deceased from the pen of one well able to write concerning her.

REV. J. CROSSETT, MISSIONARY TO CHINA.

This devoted American missionary to China died on June 21. The poorest of the people were his special care, and for them he provided a winter refuge at Peking. He would go into the streets on the coldest nights, and, picking up destitute beggars, take them to the refuge, and provide them with food. He was wont to visit the prisons, and, as the officials had implicit confidence in him, he was often allowed to remove the sick to his refuge for careful nursing. He was known among the Chinese as "The Christian Buddha." He was attached to no organisation, and had no anxiety about food or raiment. The innkeepers would take no pay from him, and were even glad to entertain him. He wore the Chinese dress, had no regular meals, drank only water, and lived on fruit, with a little rice or millet. He never shrank from the uncleanness or disease of the miserable starvelings among whom he laboured; and, being quite reckless as to his own health or comfort, he has gone early to his rest, but, at the same time, left behind him a name blessedly fragrant with loving zeal and Christian self-sacrifice.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

THE monthly meeting of workers at the Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George's-street, Ratcliff Highway, E., was held on Friday evening, and was felt to be a season of refreshing to the company of friends assembled. Mr. J. S. Brunning presided, and the selected speaker for the evening was Mr. George Hucklesby, who discoursed upon "Living stones in the living Temple of the living God," contrasting the Temple of Solomon with the Christian Church, the "holy temple in the Lord," in which every believer is a living stone. Rich in spiritual suggestion, the address was listened to with much appreciation.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Matthews, of the Maloga Aboriginal Mission, and Paddy and Jennie Swift, the two Christian Aborigines, whom they have brought with them from Australia, also spoke briefly.

Mr. J. T. Isaac, the hon. secretary of the Rest, gave some particulars of recent effort, and drew attention to the needs of the work, mentioning that just now help is much needed, and that supplies of Gospel literature for sailors—English, French, German, Scandinavian, &c.—will be most welcome. He referred to the fact that the need of a Sailors' Rest at Zanzibar has been greatly felt, and asked prayer that God would lead some workers soon to commence a mission to the many sailors who frequent that port.

DUBLIN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.—The sixteenth annual Christian Convention is to be held in Dublin on the four days commencing Monday, September 23. Some of the speakers announced, are, Revs. Archibald G. Brown, H. J. Berguer, and Mark Guy Pearse, of London; Dr. Marshall Lang, Glasgow; George Davidson, Edinburgh; Thos. Cook, the Wesleyan evangelist; Dr. Latham, Wexford; R. McCheyne Edgar, Dublin; H. A. Bren and D. A. Rees, India; Rev. W. S. Swanson, China; and Mr. George Clarke. Mr. Robert Cotter, Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, is the secretary.

The Ministerial "Profession."

BY PASTOR F. C. SPURR, CARDIFF.

THE brief article in THE CHRISTIAN of August 30 under this heading came none too soon. The time has more than arrived for some definite and burning words to be uttered concerning a grave danger. I do not pretend that any words of mine will do justice to a subject possessing such solemn issues, but I hope that more powerful pens and weightier lives will be set to work to try and remedy one of the evils of the day.

No man who carefully observes the tendency of the times can fail to notice the change that is slowly creeping over religious thought and speech. The last decade has witnessed a marvellous difference, not only in the matter, but also in the manner of preaching. The tide is setting in the direction of an æsthetic style of speech: a great many of the younger men are sermon readers or reciters, in distinction from the old preachers. Dr. Joseph Parker once made use of the following pungent sentences, which are not yet out of date: "There are few preachers; there are too many who bear the name, who do not understand the vocation. He is not a preacher who stands in one place year after year, talking to the same people, and overfeeding them with intellectual luxuries...In our days we have degraded preaching into bending the head over a sheet of ill-written paper, and mumbling it with very uncertain emphasis."

Of course, this is not the place (for there is not space) to discuss the vexed question: "Shall sermons be read, recited, or spoken?" but this much may be safely said, that the danger of the read sermon is that it is liable to become a mere essay—beautiful, perhaps, in composition, but yet utterly destitute of the spirit and power which should characterise the true sermon. At the annual meetings of a Baptist Association held some time since, the president—an M.P.—delivered himself of an address on "The Minister of the Future," in the course of which he said:—

> What are the essentials in the minister of the future? In providing for the minister of the future, we have to consider the requisites to meet conditions altogether differing from those of the past, but which can be premised from the habits and customs of society as they are developing from their old phases into new and changed conditions. In the first place, the minister of the future will have to face an audience differing in feeling and education from those of the past...From henceforth the preacher will have to appeal to the intellect, and not to the emotions. He must address himself to those who will appreciate all the labour and culture he will bestow upon his pulpit orations, who will be quick to discover, and not slow to resent any attempt to pass off an unfinished article by tricky artifice. While the preacher of the future will deal with those who will closely criticise his effusions, he will at the same time have auditors who will not withhold their meed of praise where it has been deserved.

"Loud applause" greeted these and kindred remarks. What have we come to when a large company of ministers and delegates can applaud such sentiments, which, if carried out, would destroy THE distinctive character of our true faith? If a man had adopted the ministry as a "profession," then, of course, such remarks would be very welcome; but those who believe they are servants of God ought rather to weep than applaud.

What is a minister? Perhaps the use of the word is in itself misleading; the blunter word "servant" may help us better to understand. To-day, however, "ministers" are classed with professional men, and the "ministry" is considered to be a "profession." One thing at least is certain, that the Apostles never understood anything about the "profession"; they rejoiced in the fact that they were "bondservants of Jesus Christ." Their ministry did not mean attendance at soirées; speeches on political platforms; social entertainments; and a social status. No! it meant for them ignominy, pain, poverty, imprisonment, and martyrdom.

It is often asked why we, to-day, have not results of Christian work as the Apostles had; the answer is ready, Because we have not the Apostles' spirit. Just fancy Paul or Peter bestowing labour on their "pulpit orations," and pausing between thrilling paragraphs to give their hearers a chance to applaud. How many would have been converted on the day of Pentecost if Peter had followed out that line of action?

Much depends upon the view a man has of his ministry. A man may be "in the ministry," and the ministry not be in him. All the difference lies there. Not long ago, I was speaking to a young minister who had just preached an "Association Sermon"—rather he had read it, not preached it. Referring to his sermon, he said, "I hate these sermons, you know; but still they are a good advertisement. That sermon will get me some 'supplies.'" And on further conversation, it turned out that this was his loftiest view of his ministry.

I knew another young man, a Baptist, who went from college to a small church. Half of his time he was away preaching in vacant pulpits, "with a view." I spoke to him about it, and he replied, "I only went there for a start; I am looking out for a good church with a 'good screw.'" And he got it. To-day that man is in England preaching, or rather reciting, to a large congregation noted for its worldliness. He has got a big salary, and he is the people's god; but of regeneration he knows nothing, and his greatest happiness is to be with a select company of men in a smoking-ring. His sermons are brilliant, and their one theme, "Be manly, be good." To him the ministry is merely a profession.

A well-known London minister, visiting Cardiff recently, assured me that he had known two ministers preach at the same service, and the acknowledged object of each man was to "beat the other." The people themselves knew this, and after the sermons gave the vote as to the better man.

There is something seriously wrong. Has it come to pass that God's servant is no better than a clown or public entertainer who seeks to win the praises of his auditors? For God's sake let us cease our cant about "reaching the heathen," and attend to home matters first.

Lest I should be misunderstood, let me say here that these statements are not to be regarded as sweeping, but they are to be regarded for all that. Thank God for the many true and noble men who for Christ's sake are toiling and weeping for the masses, and whose ministry is being blessed of God. There are many such, but let not this fact minimise the one I seek now to emphasise—i.e., that there are too many who only recognise in the Christian ministry a respectable and lucrative professional career.

Why are such men in the ministry at all? Ah! there's the rub. Heads of colleges are human, and to be imposed on, as the rest of men, and many a glib tongue has deceived them and won the way to the college desk, and from out thence to a church and pulpit. And not only brilliantly unfit men have crept into the ministry, but there are many "duffers" in the ranks, whose presence is, and will be, a hindrance to the work so long as they are there. They may be good men, and sincere, but more is needed than goodness and sincerity: there must be fitness also. The writer knows many chapels, thinly attended, and presided over by ministers who are wholly unfit for their work; but the good men stick to the post for dear life, for they know full well that if they ever left that church they would never get another, and so the means of livelihood would be taken from them.

Reform is wanted, and wanted badly; the age needs men of power and dependence upon God; men in sympathy with Jesus, and who have understood, at least in measure, the bitter cry of the half-damned masses. Essays and fine sermons can no more accomplish God's will in men's salvation than an oration can waken a corpse to life. God's power alone can affect dead sinners, but it must not be tampered with. If we are willing to become fools for Christ's sake, God will make us wise to win men. The wrong must be overcome by the right. While ungodly and worldly-religious congregations demand pleasant preaching, traitors will always be found to supply it; but there will be a turning of the tables soon. Let those of us who believe in the Word of God preached by men of God in the power of God seek a fuller baptism of power, and then go on in the strength of God. The night is dark, and the revelry of the world grates on our ears. But courage, brothers! the daybreak is at hand, and Christ is coming.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

THE visit of Mr. Taylor to America has (like that of last year) resulted in much blessing. The work has been centralised, and, under the title of the North American Council, the brethren associated with Mr. Taylor will supervise the Mission interests on that continent. The headquarters are to be at Toronto, and a building is being secured to be used as a residence. Mr. H. W. Frost, who has accepted the position of General Secretary, will occupy part of the building, and the remaining portion will be fitted for the reception of lady candidates. The training will be furnished in the Institute, and will consist of Bible study and evangelistic work, in connection with the Christian Work Committee of the Institute. It is intended also to add as early as possible the elementary study of the Chinese language. It will cost about 1000 dollars to fit up the residence, and of this amount about one-fourth has already been furnished. The work is the Lord's, and He will supply the balance as the needs arise. —(Toronto) Faithful Witness.

THE FLORENCE PROTESTANT ORPHANAGE FOR GIRLS, situate at 2, Via del Gignolo, fuori Porta alla Croce, contains at the present time thirty-seven children, six of whom were received during the year ending June last. Two of these latter were English, their father, a mechanical engineer, having died suddenly at Palermo. Perpetuating the work of the late Sig. Ferretti, this is an admirable institution. The ladies' committee in England (secretary, Miss Reynett, 3, Cranley-place, Onslow-square, London, W.), appeals in the report for more liberal support, in order that the efficiency of the school may be raised. Moreover, the applications for admission are greatly in excess of the available accommodation.

A Visit to the Strikers.

BY REV. F. B. MEYER.

AN apology is due to your readers for the non-appearance of the first of the series of promised articles on the First Epistle of Peter: I hope it will appear next week. But a quite unexpected incursion was made on the little spare time available last week, by the dockers' strike. The East-end has had irresistible attractions, and time which would otherwise have been spent in the preparation of the promised article has been filled by personal visitation of the districts most affected by this great dispute, in order to show practical sympathy, and to learn how best to render help.

It has been a wonderful spectacle to see those streets so full of bodies of working men, marching by their thousands in orderly procession, meeting about the dock gates, or standing three abreast in long lines waiting for a little relief. With very few exceptions they have behaved, as their leader, Mr. Burns, put it, with "sweet reasonableness," enduring the pinch of poverty bravely and patiently. Probably no city in the world could have passed through such an ordeal for so long, as peacefully as the Metropolis; and much must be said in admiration of the general tact and prudence with which the men on strike have been handled by their leaders.

But the most noticeable and interesting fact is the evident increase of cordial feeling on the part of the working men towards the various religious bodies which have nobly striven to help them in this crisis. Walking around the district with Rev. James Chadburn, who has been feeding as many as a thousand a day, I was pleased to see the respectful greetings with which he was everywhere received. Mr. Archibald Brown, who spends the first three hours of the morning in relieving distress, told me that the other day, when passing his Tabernacle, the strikers gave three cheers for him. And at the Salvation Army depôt, which is doing most splendid work in supplying meals at half the cost price, I learnt pleasing evidences of the gratitude of the people to those who have combined so admirably the most devoted ministry to the body, with unceasing endeavours to utilise these days of enforced idleness for the highest purpose.

Whatever material benefits may accrue to the men from the present struggle, it is certain that they will have learned to find their truest friends, not in the camp of the Socialist, but in the religious bodies which are so nobly exerting themselves for their help. And I shall be much surprised if in the near future these dark days shall not be looked back upon as the beginning of better times, spiritually and religiously, in that mighty centre of teeming life.

The public-houses are doing badly. But, alas! the pawnbrokers are becoming heavily stocked with the household goods of the poor. The shilling per day which each man receives is insufficient to maintain his family, and there is no resource but to part with the "home" bit by bit. And even though the strike should be finished, and the men have recommenced work, before this paper shall come into the hands of our readers, yet for at least four weeks the needs of the people will remain almost as urgent as they are at this moment, and the provision against the severities of the winter will be even scantier than usual. Is not this the time when Christian love may do something to heal human sorrow, and to bridge the gulf between the various grades of our social life?

The Battle with Degradation.

AN address by Miss Octavia Hill, at the late meeting at Oxford, in connection with University Extension, has been printed in the current Nineteenth Century. It contains some strong opinions, which are not to be taken on trust, but will receive attention as coming from a lady of long and large experience on the matters about which she writes. The paper starts with affirming that there has been marked progress in the condition of the London poor from the days when her grandfather—Dr. Southwood Smith—worked with Lord Shaftesbury. Their social condition in the standard of living, sanitation, higher wages, and schools for their children, is altogether raised. Two rooms, instead of one, are more frequently rented.

This progress, which has been wrestled for and suffered for, should, however, be regarded by the vast growth of the workers who desire to serve in this direction, as a starting-point to what is far higher. Especially should new movements that destroy thrift, weaken parental responsibility, and injure the obligations of family life, be resisted. What the writer calls "the dole system" is strongly condemned; and, somewhat surprisingly, she includes in this system free meals, which in her experience teach a father to spend in drink, and the mother in gossip, the time and money which ought to be given to their children's dinners. She has, moreover, little approval to bestow on the efforts of County Councils and philanthropists to build houses for the poor, and to call upon taxpayers for rates in aid. Non-remunerative houses, she holds, will in the end not help the people, but put money into the pockets of employers. Rents are falling, and builders are proving that sanitary tenements will pay. The gist of the paper is that the poor must be taught to resist temptation, to be gentle and pure, and that efforts, which are substitutes for this slower process, will inevitably suck the blood both from the sense of duty and of family life.

This article with its hopefulness should be read in connection with the striking paper by Archdeacon Farrar in The Contemporary Review, with its dark apprehensions. The danger of both writers is perhaps a too hasty generalisation, and the overlooking of special exigencies of need, and of an individual improvement. The battle with these modern problems of sin and misery is tremendously serious. There can be no instantaneous remedy, but the patient toilers with the Gospel in their hearts and on their lips are doing a work beyond all estimation.

ROMANISM IN OXFORD.—Murray's Magazine states, in connection with a rumoured perversion to Rome, that there is a great revival of proselytising energy in Oxford, where the Romish Church of St. Aloysius is powerfully manned and worked on attractive lines. Our monthly contemporary thinks this revival is due to the removal from Oxford of many leading spirits of the Anglican party.

NORWAY.—A Scotch correspondent of The Times, in giving an account of a trip through the Norwegian Fjords, says that at Gordaas he "had the good fortune to see a great mission meeting, or conventicle, which was attended by several thousands of persons who had come great distances to attend it, and which lasted for two or three days. There could be no doubt of the earnestness of the simple country people who had come so far to indulge their religious zeal."

"MY FATHER IS THE HUSBANDMAN."

BY REV. MARK GUY PEARSE.

GOD compass thee with favour as a shield
  Thro' all the season's changeful days and hours;
The changes be as to some fruitful field,
  Where sun is shaded but for gracious showers;
His favour be thy strength to serve and yield.
  As earth serves heaven by yielding fruits and flowers.

If biting frost come from the bitter north,
  'Tis but to fray the earth to readier mould,
'Neath leaden skies the sower goeth forth
  And fills the furrows with a wealth of gold;
Though wild winds sweep and howl in threatening wrath, [bold.
  The seed corn sleeps within thy heart: be

There cometh soon a time when storms are still, [blue,
  When all the earth is arched with sunny
When thou shalt find the end of good and ill,
  And how through all the harvest ripened grew:
Thy Father is the Husbandman. His will
  Is ever good who maketh all things new.

Since blacken'd roots and shapeless wither'd seeds
  By patient skill He brings to fairest flowers;
Since He can meet a whole world's hungry needs [showers;
  By sunshine and soft winds and passing
Up to what beauty and what service leads
  His love, when we are his and He is ours!

WORK IN NEW ZEALAND.

MR. A. HONORÉ writes to Echoes of Service from Foxton:—The work among the Maoris is carried on as usual. As a rule they come regularly to the meetings, and are interested. Their average moral conduct is above that of the Europeans. Most of them have given up their habit of drinking. They are not all total abstainers, but drunkenness is rare, at least in this district. Large meetings and festivals are held at which not a drop of intoxicating liquor is used. They are becoming more and more industrious. They also clothe themselves respectably, and build good houses. In comparing them with those of other countries where the drink traffic abounds, we have much to be thankful for. Yet there is such a thing as being sober and industrious whilst without Christ and without life. Were these Maoris proud and self-righteous and despisers of the Gospel, we should have no hope of them, but seeing that they willingly listen to it, and always ask me to come again, we have real reason to hope—indeed in some instances we are sure that it has been made the power of God unto salvation.

During the past eight months about thirty flax mills have been opened in this district, employing over seven hundred men and youths, including some Maoris. Most of these men and youths are very godless. Vice, profanity, and wickedness abound. This has a bad influence on the Maoris; so I am waiting upon the Lord that He may, if He will, send me or some other man to visit these places with the message of the Gospel.

I have just returned from a visit to some Danish people at a place called Halcombe, about thirty miles from here. They listen to the word with much attention, and I hope soon to see real life among them.

CHILI.—Mr. Marcus Lewis, of Newbury, Berks, has accepted the pastorate of the Reformed Church of England in Traiguen, Chili, South America, and hopes to sail from England in the second week of October.

More Leaves from my Notebook.

BY REV. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.
Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

XXV.—THE LADY IN MOURNING.

THERE came to my vestry one Sunday morning a lady attired in deep mourning, accompanied by a young gentleman also in mourning.

Being seated, the lady said with much emotion, "My daughter died two months ago, and on her dying bed she made me promise that I would come and hear you preach."

"What made her do that?" I inquired kindly.

The lady answered: "Last season before my dear daughter was taken ill she attended this church, and heard words from you which were the means of her conversion to God. Before many weeks had passed she was seized with a painful illness, and after four months' great suffering, which she bore most patiently, she departed with great joy, in her own words, 'to be with Jesus.' She laid it upon me to tell you this, and also made me promise that I would hear you preach on the first opportunity."

I said, "I suppose your dear daughter intended that you should do something more than merely hear me preach."

There was no answer, so I continued, "May I ask if you are saved?" Still there was no answer. Then I turned to the gentleman, who happened to be the husband of the departed one, and asked him, "Sir, are you saved?" He was much embarrassed; but after a short pause he replied, "No, I am sorry to say I am not."

I said, "It is better to be sorry than to be indifferent about such a matter. I have no doubt your late dear wife spoke to you, and longed for your salvation. How she would rejoice to meet you again!"

The young man was much moved, and so was his mother-in-law. "I should like to hear something more," I remarked, "of the dear one who is gone"; but they evidently could not speak of her then, and rose to go away.

I proposed to pray with them, and did so. I thanked God for the testimony of the departed one and for her desire for the spiritual welfare of these two now kneeling before Him. I asked the Lord to sanctify this great sorrow to them by bringing them to Himself. After prayer they rose from their knees, and the lady sat down again, as if unwilling to go away. Seeing this, I asked the gentleman if he would not be seated also.

I said, "The fact is, madam, that your dear daughter intended you to do as she had done. She not only heard God's word, but did it." The poor mourner could not speak, but nodded assent.

I went on to say, "The sermon you have just heard is one you can easily put into practice. David was able to say, without a 'but,' or 'if,' or 'perhaps,' 'The Lord is my light and my salvation.' If he could say that in the old dispensation in which he lived, we, in this new one, may say so more positively. The Lord Jesus Christ came to be our light, because we were sitting in darkness; and He came to be our salvation, because we were sitting in the shadow or power of death. What can be the use of hearing this, if we do not fall in with his plan, and accept Him as our light and our salvation. No one can do this for you; you must do it for yourself. What is the benefit of a gift, if you do not accept it? God so loved you both that He gave his Son, that if you believe in Him you should not perish, but have everlasting life. You will certainly perish if you do not believe in Him."

The lady said, "That is exactly how dear E—— used to speak to us. Oh, if I could have believed it then, what joy it would have been to her. My dear daughter," she added, "looked so lovingly at us when she was dying; her eyes seemed to say, 'If only I knew you were in the way also!'"

We were all three moved to tears. I felt as if these two dear souls were sent to me to bring them to Jesus.

After a few more words of sincere sympathy, and assuring them of my desire to help them, I called their attention to the eighth verse of the twenty-seventh Psalm: "When Thou saidst, Seek ye my face; my heart said, Thy face, Lord, will I seek." I said, "The Psalmist seldom gives us a happy experience such as this in the first verse—'The Lord is my light and my salvation'—but what, if you look, you will find the secret stairway to it. God said to him, 'Seek ye my face'—that is just what He is saying to you. 'Come to Me in your sorrow, and I will comfort you; come to Me, and I will do you the good you need.' It may be, you have been seeking peace and assurance, such as your dear departed one had; but that is not seeking God. He does not say, 'Come to peace or happiness, but come to Me—seek my face.' David did as he was bidden, at once, promptly. He said, 'Thy face, Lord, will I seek.' Observe, his obedience was not only prompt, but according to God's word, and the answer was given from his heart directly to the Lord: 'My heart said, Lord, thy face will I seek.' So, from your heart, fall in with his invitation; no one else can do this for you. Now, suppose the Lord Jesus Christ was in this room visibly, as He is really, and suppose He audibly offered to be your light and your salvation, then would you accept Him?"

The lady, looking up, answered firmly, "I would." The gentleman assented also, but with some little hesitation. I said to the lady, "Just tell the Lord this in so many words. You have no idea how much help there is in articulation. Say, 'Lord, I do accept Thee to be my light and my salvation.'"

It was not so easy for them to say this, though it was so simple. I could not bring either of them to the point, they were afraid to commit themselves.

I said, "Why will you not say these plain words? What will you gain if you do not? and what will you lose if you do? I can see that God has prepared your hearts so far: now dare to venture?"

"No," said the lady, "I am not good enough." "That is the fact with me also," added the gentleman.

"It is just because you are not good, and that you are both more lost than you think, that God has offered you his salvation. Do not let your unworthiness stand in your way. Truly that is our passport to Him. The Lord Jesus came to save sinners, not good people. He needs sinners to save as much as they need a Saviour. The doctor needs patients, and the patients need the doctor.

"Come, say with me, 'Lord, be our light and our salvation.'" As they hesitated, I remarked, "You see I have come down to your position, to say it with you. 'Lord, be our light and our salvation.'" After a little more persuasion, they repeated these words with me, but very indistinctly, as if they were only saying it for me. I bid them say it again firmly.

The lady at length fell upon her knees, and said with tears, "Lord, do be my light and my salvation."

I thanked God for this, for there was such reality about it. As the gentleman did not speak, I turned to him kindly, and said, "Will you not for your dead wife's sake say, 'Lord, take my heart.'"

He did so. I then thanked God with them, and commended them to his teaching and guidance, "May God bless you both," I said; and added, "Go home thanking God. Never mind feelings for the present, they are sure to come to you."

These mourners went away very grateful, and came to church again in the evening. I felt sure by the manner in which they shook hands with me that some change had already taken place, I was satisfied the Lord had been blessing them; and so it proved. They continued to make steady and continual progress in divine things. Their interest in God's Word and his work was not disguised, and the stand they henceforth took on the Lord's side was fearless and firm.

TEMPERANCE AT CARRUBBER'S CLOSE.

DURING a recent sojourn in Edinburgh. Rev. J. Branwhite French, of St. Leonards, paid a visit to the well-known Carrubber's Close Mission, which is situated in the heart of the old town, and is surrounded by a dense poor and not too sober population. In a communication to us Mr. French tells of a Saturday evening temperance demonstration he attended:—

The building would probably hold from eight hundred to a thousand people, and that night it certainly did hold them, for they were jammed together all round the place, and stowed away in every nook and cranny. The meeting was presided over by a young man who put his own vigorous soul into the proceedings, and made everything "go." The speakers were strangers and foreigners, no less than three being Americans, and another a native of Bengal.

Mr. Charles N. Crittenton, founder of the Florence All-night Mission, New York, spoke with a tear in his voice, urging any who were down through the drink to get the help of Christ to conquer their vices. Rev. M. Bose, the friend from India, appeared among them as one who had been a worshipper of heathen gods, but who had found satisfaction for his soul in Christ. He seemed moved by the fact that so many in a country like this were not believers in Jesus, and on his own experience testified to the blessedness of the Christian life. Then came Dr. Peloubet, of Boston, who had only arrived in England the day before, and in Edinburgh that night. With great force he spoke of the power Christ gives to help the man who commits himself to Him to master his ruling passions, speaking of drink in particular.

Then they were ready, and more than ready, for that for which they had, many of them, been waiting, which was to hear the American lady, Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, who told them pretty plainly what she thought of all who took alcoholic drinks, whether little or much, and spoke as only a true woman can in persuading all to give it up. It was a temperance meeting, but it was Gospel temperance that was advocated, and the Gospel was accorded the supreme place as the power to lift man's life up. Nobody could help feeling thankful that such an agency existed in the thick of such a population.

Leaving the hall, we wended our way through the awful throng, with its disgusting inebriates; we felt that Gospel temperance had still work enough to do there. It is some relief to think that that hall resounds constantly with the voices of the glorious Gospel of Christ, and that many are persuaded to enter it.

At the evangelistic meeting on the Sunday night, Mrs. Leavitt and Dr. Peloubet were to speak, as they were also, as well as Mr. Crittenton, on the same evening at an earlier hour in the Free Assembly Hall, where, as we were glad to find, the Sunday evening services, so long connected with the Carrubber's Close Mission, are still kept up with sustained interest and power.

GERMANY.—Mr. H. Wright, Im Moore 6, Hanover, writes with regard to Mr. Hastings' tract, "The Inspiration of the Bible," which is published in German:—"It ought to be scattered broadcast among the Socialists of this country. In this city and suburbs there are tens of thousands of Socialists, and should any of the Lord's stewards send me a supply of these tracts, I will gladly undertake their distribution."

The Dahra of Algeria.

Beyond the mountainous regions on the north-west of the province of Algiers, lies the similarly mountainous country the Dahra, in the province of Oran. Amongst the many groups of Berber populations, that of the Dahra country is very interesting; it has been called the little Kabylia, and is somewhat similar to the less mountainous parts of the greater Kabylia, some of its summits reaching to 3000 feet above the sea. Most of the salient points are crowned by houses, whilst magnificent forests extend in two parallel bands through the country. Its riches, however, consist in its fig trees, which bring in a million francs a year. Its population may amount to about 80,000. A considerable number of Marocan Berbers are found amongst them, the tribe Mediouna being the most prosperous of the Dahras, but an Arab patois is spoken throughout, although the tribes of Zerrifa and Achache speak Berber. The Kaid of the latter is a rich and liberal man, and often comes to Cassaigne; though he does not drink wine himself, orders champagne for his companions at the table of the inn. They have a magnificent physique, are large-made, sunburnt, muscular, with a great air of strength and dignity. The whole country is very fresh and healthy, owing to its elevation and the vicinity of the sea.

We came on to explore it and to escape from the heat of Algiers, and have been much refreshed by its sweet breezes, and calm and lovely aspect of well cultivated and widely extending valleys in the midst of the mountains. Stopping at the station of Oued Riou, on the Oran line, we crossed the plain, and the bridge over the Shelliff, and ascended the back, as Dahrá signifies. After five hours we reached the prettily situated French village of Renault, 1,802 feet above the sea, towards the eastern extremity of the Dahra; it is perched on a hill, crowned with a fortified redoubt, which divides it in two. This means, of course, a settlement in a once hostile country, for the tribes persistently resisted the French, and their subjection was accomplished by an awful tragedy. One of the most prominent to resist the French arms was the tribe of Oulad Ria, which had a remarkable large cavern, in which they had much confidence as a place of retreat. Obstinately refusing to listen to terms, they shot an envoy who had been sent to treat with them; and being again and again warned of the consequences, the soldiers at length lit a fire in the mouth of the cave, and all perished by suffocation—men, women, and children—in number nearly one thousand. Such is war! The tribes are all now

SUBJECT TO FRENCH RULE.

But a fort is built near the scene of this tragedy, and the village of Cassaigne, at the western extremity of the Dahra, has also its fort. We made our way to Mazouna, the Berber capital, and its aspect was to us startling. Being so accustomed to see Kabyle villages built irregularly on mountain heights, it was a new thing to see a considerable native town in a valley surrounded by barren hills, with its massive-looking stone houses, each with a parapet. The town, with its suburb, Bou Halloufa, on the opposite side of a ravine, has a population of 2000. It is a lovely ravine, having a forest of fruit trees. It descends to the river Shelliff, which forms the southern boundary of the Dahra. A solitary French schoolmaster is here; but there are Arab schools, and numerous learned Arab scholars and Talebs. Indeed, there are Arab schools throughout the country, and most of those to whom we gave Arabic Gospels could read, though sorely puzzled to receive them as a gift. Some months back there was a terrible visitation of small-pox, owing to overcrowding in a low part of the town, and about 500 were carried off by it, mostly children.

We see on the brow of many hills small villages, with their whitewashed houses, and in the plains douars or groups of tents, protected by bushes, and looking like gourbis. At the Arab invasion they retreated to the hills, where they could have more permanent habitations. Several thousands were gathered at the market in Renault; there were about 600 at that of Cassaigne, and perhaps one or two thousand at Ain-Tedles.

We found several Protestants at Renault, who were glad to have a service in the house of a hard-working agriculturist, and had a room full. There is a decent inn here, and nice people. We proceeded by a circuitous route to the other village on the west of the Dahra, called Cassaigne, which is not so prettily situated as Renault, but has the advantage of a view of the sea. On our way hither from Oran we passed numerous villages where there are Protestants, St. Cloud, several under the shadow of the Orouze Mountains, Arzeu, &c., and on the heights Ouillis and Bosquet, on the way to Cassaigne. One cannot well describe the desolate and neglected state of the colonists generally, and even where there are Protestants life is at a very low ebb, and there is no attempt to meet together for mutual edification. All is relegated to the very infrequent visits of a pastor. It was pitiable to hear the lament of some poor women, "Oh, give us something good, for we are miserable in our souls"; "We want our moral condition improved." The mistress of the hotel at Cassaigne offers a large room in the house for a Protestant Sunday morning service. Some of the officials and a few Protestants if one could settle in the place. A road is being made from this village to Renault, and villages will soon spring up on the line, so that an important field of labour presents itself amongst the French, and even many Arabs know a good deal of French.

But what shall we say of the Spaniards in Algeria? They literally swarm, so that it is unsafe to give numbers. They are found in almost every town—amiable, upright, temperate, grave, and industrious, and away from priestly influence. It was like music in our ears to hear, under our windows at the inn, a Spanish muleteer reading to his comrade, at half-past four in the morning, the Gospel of Luke, with nasal twang.

Oh, what a loud cry there is for labourers. The Lord send them forth! Young volunteers are needed; say, two young men living and working together. The knowledge of French and Spanish would be turned to good account, or soon easily acquired. Work in Spain itself so difficult, and so easy amongst the dear Spaniards here: in a beautiful and healthy country, and within call of the British Isles.

There is great need of labourers in Oran. It would be a nice place for a married couple, or two sisters to live in, or winter in. It is a bright and cheerful town. Rent and living would be moderate. George Pearse.

THE PROPOSED MONASTIC ORDER.—Rev. George Everard, Dover, writes to The Record:—"I am persuaded that to leaven our country with pure religion as found in Holy Scripture, this proposal goes on a wrong tack altogether. We want to foster and multiply such work as is carried on by the Evangelisation Society, by the Church Army, and such work as the night school held at Mildmay Park each winter, with its hundreds of working men. We want mission-halls in every parish. Above all, we want our clergy to preach more the free Gospel of grace and love, and in season and out of season to be always about their Master's business, and ready to tell to one or a thousand the good news of life eternal given freely for Christ's sake."

Carlisle Convention.

For the fourth time Carlisle has had the privilege of holding a Convention, calling together God's people to meet with one another and to unite in seeking unto Him. Former Conventions have proved to be very solemn and fruitful seasons; a spirit of union amongst all bodies of believers has been fostered and realised by many; wavering souls have been brought into liberty, and the faith of God's people has been much strengthened. A deep interest, too, has been manifested throughout the city in these annual meetings. The coming of God's messengers has been eagerly welcomed by many; the meetings have been well attended, and in the evenings crowded, and each Convention has been linked to the preceding one by a chain of regular meetings for special prayer.

The Convention just over—held on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of last week—has been, like its predecessors, remarkable for a quiet earnestness and a widespread interest. Many have come from the "country round about" to hear the truth proclaimed, and to carry away with them a simple conviction that God has been exalted, and a life of blessedness in trusting Him fully, proclaimed as a great reality. Speakers already known in Carlisle had come again—Rev. W. Haslam, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. J. Sloan, Rev. J. G. Gregson, while two new ambassadors attended—Rev. E. H. Hopkins and Rev. S. A. Selwyn. Mr. Wilson, of Broughton Grange, co-convener with Rev. W. M. Shepherd, of St. John's Church, again presided in his quiet, reverent manner. The hon. secretary, Mr. C. I. Clafferton, led the choir, and superintended the general arrangements. Many of the local clergy and ministers are in earnest sympathy with the movement, and were to be seen in frequent attendance at the meetings.

The Convention of 1889 has been a time of much blessing and of happy union amongst believers. The great drill-hall has been again and again crowded to its utmost capacity, and there has been much definite work done in the conversion of the unsaved, as well as in the quickening and teaching of believers. There had been much previous prayer, and the service held in the Drill-hall by Rev. B. F. Buxton on the previous Lord's Day, was peculiarly impressive.

We have only space for some of the salient points of teaching. Rev. S. A. Selwyn, speaking from 3 John iii., pleaded for entire devotion to God, that spiritual ill-health, with its lack of appetite, low temperature, and restlessness, might be set right. Rev. Evan Hopkins examined the word "perfect" (Heb. xiii. 20, 21), comparing it with the rendering of the same word in Mark i. 19, where it is translated "mending," and in Gal. vi. 1 "restore," so that it should be rendered "adjusted," or the setting of a dislocated limb. The great need of most Christians was spiritual adjustment, and the progress ensuing would be progressive, for the prayer was in the aorist tense and suggested a definite point of time. Rev. John Sloan gave a very helpful address, Ps. lxiii. 1, on "Being satisfied with Jesus." Rev. J. G. Gregson denounced the worldliness of the Church; spoke of the Acts of the Apostles as the Gospel of the Holy Ghost; and dwelt on the correspondence between conscience and the Holy Spirit. Rev. F. B. Meyer spoke on conditions for successful service, and on the necessity of being linked through a living faith with the second Adam. Rev. W. Haslam spoke on growth in faith, and illustrated his addresses, as is his wont, by interesting allusions to the incidents of his ministry.

Such meetings cannot but exert a powerful influence on the districts in which they are held; and we rejoice that the multitude will gather for the consideration of such themes, irrespective of all denominational and sectarian distinctions. It is a great and blessed sign of the accomplishment of the Master's prayer.

LONDON CHURCHES.

WHITEFIELD TABERNACLE.

REV. J. JACKSON WRAY ON "IRON GATES."

AFTER a month's relaxation in Yorkshire, the respected pastor of Whitefield's Tabernacle, Tottenham Court-road, London, was again among his friends last Lord's Day. The historic building having collapsed, after being the scene of much earnest work for God and man, an iron hall has been erected on land adjoining, and in this temporary structure, filled with an audience of about a thousand, Mr. Wray preached, in the morning, a sermon which was as truly helpful and inspiring as it was well suited to the present circumstances of the church. After worshipping for some weeks in a hired building, the congregation was gratified to find itself once more in a home of its own, but will not be content until a new Tabernacle, with schools, lecture-halls, and institutes, has been erected. The scheme is intensely interesting, for it is proposed to erect a Toplady Hall in connection with the new Whitefield Memorial, the remains of the author of "Rock of Ages" lying beneath the floor of the old Tabernacle.

At the morning service a spirit of joyous worship pervaded the congregation. Praise and prayer combined to favour the holy exercise, and the souls of many were evidently led out to heavenly pastures. The sermon was based on words in Acts xii. 10, "They came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city; which opened to them of his own accord." At one time or another most people find themselves before iron gates. Sometimes they are erected by a gracious providence for our good, to keep wandering feet from unsafe paths. If there had been an iron gate instead of an enticing stile, Christian and Hopeful would probably never have got under the cudgel of Giant Despair.

Sadly often iron gates are erected by the sins and follies of men; besetting sins bar the way to heaven and peace. Mr. Wray dwelt upon the iron gate of —difficulty arising out of circumstances we cannot control. These iron gates are very common, and some of them very big. There are not many of us who have seen thirty or forty years of managing our own affairs who cannot say with Job, "My purposes are broken off." At times we are greatly taken aback by the notice, "No thoroughfare," but if we only let faith go in front, we may discover that the direction really is "This way out."

DIFFICULTY IN THE WAY OF DUTY

Enlarging upon Peter's case, the preacher said, Herod, who put the Apostle in prison, was iron himself. The Apostle took it for granted that there was no other escape, and went to sleep between the soldiers. Man's extremity, however, is God's opportunity. There would be far fewer iron gates than there are, and they would not be near so strong, if there was a little less going to sleep—if there was a general wide-awakeness, and a universal activity, instead of indifference.

"They came unto the iron gate; which opened to them of his own accord." When did it open? Not until they came up to it. For some of us that would not be soon enough. How impatient we get! Can you imagine Peter in any stage of his deliverance saying to the angel, "It's all no use, there's the iron gate!" Yet this is a common phase of unbelief. Remember that to open the iron gates when his people come up to them; for He is the essence of punctuality. When the feet of the Israelites were in the waters of the Red Sea their way was opened; and when Abraham had lifted the blade over his son Isaac, the Lord provided a victim for the burnt offering.

In conclusion, Mr. Wray spoke of the iron gate of the grave, of which Christ has the keys, and of the gates of the New Jerusalem, through which the saved will pass. In some informal words, afterwards, he bade his congregation not be discouraged before the difficulties which will attend the raising of the money (£20,000) needful for the erection of the new Whitefield Tabernacle.

WESTMINSTER CHAPEL.

REV. F. W. MACDONALD ON "THE MEDIATION OF CHRIST."

THE Congregational church worshipping in Westminster Chapel, James-street, Buckingham Gate, W., has for some time been without a pastor, and during recent months special preachers from various parts of the country have occupied the pulpit. During the present month the preacher is Professor F. W. Macdonald, of the Wesleyan Theological College, Handsworth, Birmingham. Well known for his intellectual gifts, and highly esteemed as an expositor of Gospel truth, the preacher has drawn goodly congregations. Last Lord's Day the sermons were devoted to a study of two great themes: The Fatherhood of God, and the Mediation of Jesus Christ. In the evening the combined truths were admirably treated, and shown to be closely linked and intimately related, therefore not, as some have inferred, opposed or incompatible.

Taking for his text John xiv. 6, "No man cometh unto the Father but by Me," the preacher addressed himself to a meditation, which was throughout eminently suggestive. So settled is the impression of some that the mediation of Christ is incompatible with the Fatherhood of God, that sides have actually been taken. This kind of strife ought to have been impossible, as our Lord's words to his disciples clearly anticipate and remove the misconception. There is no stronger expression in the Scriptures concerning the mediation of Jesus Christ than the Lord's words, "No man cometh unto the Father but by Me," and yet that expression has distinct and entire reference to the Fatherhood of God.

He who thinks that he can best hold one of these great truths by neglecting or minimising the other, will certainly lose that which he seeks to keep. It is no matter of abstract argument, but a fact that has been shown again and again, that where has been disparaged, the doctrine of the Fatherhood attenuates and runs feeble. For it is in the Cross of Christ, in the mission of the Son of God, that the Divine Fatherhood displays itself in final and final consummate revelation. If you shut your eyes, or withhold your heart from that which is the supreme discovery to us of the Fatherhood, mainly the gift of the redeeming Son, then all your conceptions of the Divine Fatherhood will not merely be inadequate and imperfect, but they will be mutilated, as it were, in the very centre.

On the other hand, if zeal for the doctrine of the Cross should tempt to a disparagement of the doctrine of the Divine Fatherhood, the result will also be disastrous. When the mediation of Jesus Christ, his cross and passion is disconnected from the Divine Fatherhood, its origin and explanation, the source of the Redeemer's mission becomes altogether obscured. There is no intelligible or adequate explanation as to whence it came, from what deep fountain of wisdom and goodness this great revelation of love proceeded. In the next place, the work of the Cross is thereby deprived of its goal and end, for Christ died the just for the unjust, not to save us from God, but to bring us to God. The mediation of Christ Jesus is a means to an end, and if that end be hidden from sight, the great transaction refuses to interpret itself to our hearts. It is the recovery of man to the Fatherhood of God that expounds to us the significance of the Cross of Christ.

Having enjoined an opening of the heart to a reception of both these great truths—the Fatherhood of God being the ground and source from whence was manifested in the fulness of time the mediation of Jesus Christ—the preacher dwelt upon the magnitude of the redeeming work of Christ, whereby man is enabled to attain his chief end—to glorify God. To "come to the Father" is to attain —forgiveness of sins, recovery of spiritual health, deliverance from condemnation and guilt, and, in all its unspeakable fulness of meaning, eternal life. Having further considered our Lord's words, in which He plainly declares Himself the revealer of the Father, the preacher enlarged upon the heinousness of sin. The argument of some that as human fathers can forgive their children without anything like a propitiatory sacrifice, so God could pardon without requiring the death of an atonement for the sinner, was shown to be fallacious. God's forgiveness of sin has in it an element which distinguishes it from any human act of forgiveness. We can only release from guilt in so far as an offence may lie against ourselves, but this does not alter the relation of the offender to the law of righteousness. What may be involved in truly remedying sin, and putting the sinner right with eternal righteousness, the angels of God cannot tell; how much less can we?

LIFE'S TRUE END

Our forgiveness of our children affords us no sufficient sense of the height and depth, length and breadth of God's forgiveness, and by no means enables us to say how God can and ought to pardon sin. In the revelation which God has given us, it is ever and always asserted that the sacrifice of Christ solves the mystery. Jesus said: "This is My blood, shed for the remission of sins." The Apostle said: "We have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins."

In some concluding words, the preacher grieved that in many respects the transaction of Calvary has been much misrepresented. Who can fully and correctly explain it? He rejoiced, however, to show that God's love was the source of all redemption. Whatever Christ did for the benefit of sinners, he did by the will of God; whatever He was for us, He was from God. He said: "I have come down from heaven to do the will of Him that sent me." But who and what was the Saviour whom God sent? Jesus said: "I and my Father are one." Here we touch the mystery of the matter. He who sent his Beloved Son to be a propitiation for our sins, was Himself, in his Son, a sufferer, giving to mankind the deliverance, and forgiveness, and salvation that came out of the self-sacrifice of the infinite God. "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself." The discourse was full of thoughtful and instructive passages.

PARIS.—A correspondent writes with the desire to make known to Christian friends a comfortable Home in Paris, surrounded by garden-ground and trees, and most pleasantly situated for those who like tranquillity, and at the same time to be near the Exhibition. Having been deeply impressed by the need of a Home for receiving and bringing up abandoned or destitute orphan children, Miss Christie has been led to consecrate her life to this work. In order to raise funds towards the founding and maintaining of such an institution, she receives boarders at her residence, 54, Rue Violet, Paris. A most interesting pamphlet, entitled "The Lost Children," may be had from Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co., Paternoster-row, London (1s. per dozen, 1½d. a single copy).

UNDER THE BLOOD.

ALL the evening these words have been in mind, and I will tell you why.

This is a Mohammedan feast, the rites of which are very like those of the Passover, from which, no doubt, the false prophet took the idea of their "Great Feast," as it is called. A lamb is killed in every home. This afternoon I entered a Moorish house, and saw for the first time the blood over the door. As I passed under the blood the thought came to me, with startling reality, of my security through the blood of Christ. I longed for the native children who were waiting there for me to know it too.

While looking at the blood, I said to a dear Christian girl: "I will tell you a story about that." So we sat down on the floor, and she drank in every word.

It is almost unnecessary to tell you the same old story, but I will because it came to me in all its freshness as I told it to these children in the simplest words I could.

You know how, long ago, the Lord wanted to save his own people from the Egyptians; and He told them that He would slay the firstborn in every family. But the Israelites were to kill a lamb in each dwelling and sprinkle the blood over the door.

When God came to destroy the firstborn He saw the blood over the door and passed over that house, because a lamb had been slain instead of the eldest son. They were safe under the blood. We, too, are who have believed in the dear Lord Jesus; we have God's word for it, "Christ, our passover, is sacrificed for us." Just as the lamb died in place of the firstborn, so Jesus, who is the "Lamb of God," died in our place.

The eldest sons in the Hebrew homes must have been very thankful to the Lord for providing a way for them to be saved. Should we, also, not rejoice that our Heavenly Father has in his love to us given his own Son to be our Saviour?

I must tell you of another lesson to be learned from the Christian girl whom I mentioned. She told me of a visit she had from one of her friends, to whom she confessed Christ. After explaining to her friend how Christ loved her and died to save her from her sins; she added, "If you want to be my friend you must love our Lord Jesus, because I will not have any friends who do not love Him." This conversation led this other Moorish girl to the Saviour. I listened with interest and deep joy to think how the Lord had used the testimony of this young Christian, who does not even know how to read, to bring another to Himself.

As I was starting home one of the little girls reminded me of the powder play, which was going on in a large open square between there and home. She begged me to wait till sunset, when it would be over. There was no real danger, but I did not like to pass alone through the confused crowd of men and horses.

A little boy said: "Let me go with you, I will pass you." The brave little fellow, not minding the jeers of some men who laughed at him for walking with a Christian, took tight hold of my hand and walked with me through the crowd, not leaving me till I was safely in our own door. Then he said: "Did I take care of you? I will always, ALWAYS pass you through that place."

I was at first very amused at my little protector. But then I thought how willing the Lord Jesus is to "always, ALWAYS pass" us through every place of danger that lies between us and our heavenly home, if we will only trust Him and let Him. REBA BALDWIN.

HOW TO GO TO THE CITY.

"The labour of the foolish wearieth every one of them: because he knoweth not how to go to the city."
ECCL. x. 15.

I said to a little boy one night, "Will you ask the Lord Jesus to make you His own little boy, and wash all your sins away?"

"No," he said, decidedly, nestling down into his bed; "I'll wait till I'm ill, or have an accident, or something."

He thought that if he belonged to the Lord Jesus, he would be sure to die immediately.

Perhaps you think, also, that if you knew "how to go to the city" you would be taken there at once, and possibly you would rather stay here a little longer.

However, if you will look in the tenth chapter of Ecclesiastes you will read of some people who were weary, because they didn't know how to go to the city.

Are you ever weary? Does there ever creep into your heart a feeling of discontent? Now, if you knew "the Way," how to go to the city, that feeling would not come into your heart any more. The knowledge of that Way would satisfy you (Jer. xxxi. 25) and give you rest.

I want to reach some child who really does sometimes wonder how he or she can get to heaven—someone who is trying very hard to get there.

The little boy that I told you of a moment ago had a serious mood lately. His brother was, with others, singing hymns one Sunday evening, but he crept off into another room all alone. A lady found him there full of anxiety and thought.

"What are you doing, dear?" she asked.

"Oh, I'm trying," he said earnestly, "I'm trying to listen to the hymns."

"But why try so hard?" she inquired.

"Because you know," he said simply, "that's the way to get to heaven, isn't it?"

"The labour of the foolish wearieth every one of them." We often weary ourselves because we don't know that God loves us, that He doesn't want us to be wearied or full of care.

He does not want us to "labour for that which satisfieth not," or to grope helplessly to find the way.

I daresay you have learnt the fourteenth chapter of John's Gospel, and can easily remember who is "the Way" mentioned there, and who speaks of Himself as "the Door" in the tenth chapter. It is the Lord Jesus Christ who is "the Way" and "the Door." He knows we shall always be weary and dissatisfied till we find Him, and so He calls and invites us: "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest" (Matt. xi. 28).

He wants to change our weariness into rest. It can only be done by coming to Him, and resting in Him, and in His finished work—that work which made Him so "exceeding sorrowful" and "full of heaviness."

He wants to give you rest now, and He will give you an eternity of rest by-and-bye. Once you have known the Lord Jesus, you will never thirst for anything else (John iv. 14). Why shouldn't you have both these rests? Don't be like the little boy who would wait to come to Jesus "till he was ill, or had an accident or something." Now is the time.

That city will be, indeed, a happy place; for we read of many terrible things which shall never enter there:—They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat...(Rev. vii. 16). No more tears, no more death, neither sorrow nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain (Rev. xxi. 4). No need of the sun, neither of the moon. The gates shall not be shut. No night there. There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth; neither whatsoever worketh abomination, nor maketh a lie...(Rev. xxi. 17). S. E. S.

PHUSSANDPHRET.

Have you heard of the land called Phussandphret,
Where the people live upon woes and regret?
Its climate is bad, I have heard folks say,
There's seldom, if ever, a pleasant day.
'Tis either too gloomy from clouded skies,
Or so bright the sunshine dazzles one's eyes:
'Tis either so cold one is all of a chill,
Or else 'tis so warm it makes one ill;
The season is either too damp or too dry,
And mildew or drought is always nigh.
For nothing that ever happened yet
Was just as it should be in Phussandphret.

And the children—it really makes me sad
To think they never look happy and glad.
It is "O, dear me!" until school is done,
And 'tis then, "There never is time for fun!"
Their teachers are cross, they all declare,
And examinations are never fair.
Each little duty they're apt to shirk
Because they're tired or 'tis too hard work.
Every one is as grave as an owl,
And has pouting lips or a gloomy scowl;
The voices whine and the eyes are wet
In this doleful country of Phussandphret.

Now if ever you find your feet are set
On the down-hill road into Phussandphret,
Turn and travel the other way
Or you never will know a happy day.
Follow some cheerful face—'twill guide
To the land of Look-at-the-Pleasant-side.
Then something bright you will always see,
No matter how dark the way may be,
You'll smile at your tasks and laugh in your dreams,
And learn that no ill is as bad as it seems.
So lose no time, but haste to get
As far as you can from Phussandphret.

MR. ARNOT'S AFRICAN MISSION.—In its current issue Echoes of Service says with respect to the West African mission of Mr. Arnot and his helpers:—"Speaking generally we may say that difficulties increase rather than diminish, and for some time it will evidently be in this work the day of small things. No tidings have come from our brethren, Swan and Faulknor, in Garenganze. Mr. Arnot writes, June 30, from Chisanje, the first village on the plateau that he was making his way inland with Mrs. Arnot, although the few men he had did not intend to go beyond Chivulu, two stations further on. He hoped to be able to reach Bihé, to leave Mrs. Arnot there with Mr. and Mrs. Fay, and return to the coast. Two brethren, Lane and Munnoch, who went with him, remained at the Pass, hoping to improve the path, but they soon had to return to the coast. Mr. G. Fisher writes from Benguella, July 15:—He had had only two days' illness during the two months' stay at the coast, but the other brethren—Crawford, Lane, and Munnoch—had all suffered."

The Real Needs of Ireland.

BY REV. THOMAS CONNELLAN.

IN Ireland, where so many of us "agree to differ," there is one subject about which we happily have no controversy, namely, that our country has needs in abundance. And if her ills are numerous, so are her physicians. No other country of like extent can boast such an army of voluntary quack doctors, each clamouring for a trial of his pet nostrum. There is some danger lest, amid such a multitude of physicians, the patient may die: and so it is with much diffidence that the present writer adds his voice to the chorus.

On a recent occasion, when glancing through Chambers' Journal in the British Museum (New Series, Jan. 1847, p. 160), I was much struck by the following sympathetic reference to Ancient Ireland:—

> The Irish appear at one period to have been the most learned nation in Europe. Egypt, Greece, Rome, Ireland, these seem to have been the countries in which learning of a refined nature progressively found refuge and repose. Egypt was in part despoiled by Greece; Greece was similarly despoiled by Rome; Rome was despoiled by the Teutonic nations of the North; and two branches of these nations, the Danes and Anglo-Saxons, completed the train of ruination by despoiling Ireland. Ireland is to England what Greece was to Rome, the spot whence it derived not a little of its civilisation.

The above is a perfectly impartial picture of early Christian Ireland, and it is a true picture. It becomes then a very solemn duty for all true Irishmen to try and discover how it is that a nation once in the van of civilisation should now be lagging among the hindermost. There can be no doubt that a large amount of blame must be laid at the door of England. This, happily, is now generally admitted, and by Englishmen among the first. Patrick, our National Apostle, carried into this land the Gospel and the discipline which he had learned in the East or from those who had been there. The writer in Chambers' Journal gives us the sequel. After seven centuries, Henry II. steps in with the Bull of Adrian IV. in his pocket, authorising him to conquer Ireland "in order to widen the bounds of the Church." Adrian's successor, Alexander III., encourages Henry in the good work, in order "to extend the privileges of the same (Roman) Church, and to establish her jurisdiction where she has none at present."* This was England's first great crime against Ireland. She made herself the tool of the Pope to Romanise the people, and drive out the pure evangelical religion established by St. Patrick. After three centuries—centuries of misery and retrogression for Ireland—the Bible was translated into English, and found its way into every corner of Britain. Very soon the scales fell from the eyes of the people, and Romanism was cast out. Did England then repay the land from which it had received "not a little of its civilisation," by translating the Bible into Irish, and placing it in the hands of the people? Far from it. The native Irish were deliberately kept in a condition of semi-barbarism, and the gallows and the pitchcap were the means employed to impart to them a Gospel of peace and love. During many wretched centuries, the device—

> Jew, Turk, or Atheist
> May enter here, but not a Papist, was not confined to the gate at Bandon, but was virtually blazoned over every Government portal, from College Green downwards. Can we wonder that deep down in the hearts of Roman Catholics there are yet open wounds; that they look upon Protestantism as the badge of English serfdom; that the most unscrupulous reference by interested persons to past persecutions for religious convictions shuts the door upon reason; in fine, that they are so determined to stick to what they ignorantly believe "the old religion," as the last remant of their national heritage?

What Ireland primarily needs is the presence in the minds and hearts of the great majority of her children of the pure Gospel of Christ. "They have forsaken Me, the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water." And with great reason might Christ complain of Ireland: "Yet I had planted thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed: how then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto Me?" The three nations, England, Germany, and the United States of America, whose people have had an open Bible in their hands, are to-day the most prosperous in the world. Spain, with its "strange vine" watered by the Holy Inquisition, is in the last stages of decay. France, where Rome had the people for centuries in the very hollow of its hand, has moved through seas of blood far on the road to infidelity. Italy, destined by nature to be the garden of Europe, was reduced by clerical régime to the condition of a desert. In the criminal official statistics for the year 1851, there were in the Papal States 113 homicides for every million of inhabitants, while in England in the same year there were only four homicides to the million. Italy has thrown off the petticoat government which had so long drained her life-blood, and what is the result? Mr. Gladstone, in the May number of The Nineteenth Century, gives us a peep at it:—

> I visited Naples in the winter of 1850-51. I saw it no more until the winter of 1888-89. The change which has passed upon the city during these thirty-nine years may without exaggeration be called enormous. At the earlier period personal liberty was deprived of every guarantee. But at the latter period there lay upon the surface every sign, not only of change, but of transformation. The basking, loitering, lolling, loafing population, so peculiarly Neapolitan, seemed to have become extinct. The filth, which formerly made the city offensive to eye and nostril, had disappeared in great measure. Mendicity, formerly amounting to a public nuisance, had become comparatively rare; the most importunate beggar that I encountered was a sister of charity.

The history of Ireland is very similar to that of Italy. Vast cathedrals and expensive episcopal palaces are being everywhere erected, while the mass of a constantly diminishing people remain in almost abject poverty. In a few years Ireland, like Italy fifty years ago, will be a land of stately structures and starving people.

There are to my mind two things which mainly help to perpetuate such a state of things. One is the apparent disunion among Protestant denominations; the other, the attitude of a small section of Ulstermen towards their brother Irishmen. As to the first, I have deliberately called it apparent, for all Protestant denominations are agreed upon the great essential dogmas of religion. But ordinary Roman Catholics do not know this, and the fact that eminent men who agree about essentials make much noise about details goes far indeed to perpetuate their misconception. Hence the vital necessity of Christian Union; of proclaiming the consoling fact that Christ's Church consists of all true believers in the Lord Jesus—proclaiming it, not by the voice only, but affording our Roman Catholic brethren the surer testimony of our lives. As regards the attitude of certain Protestants, especially in Ulster, towards their Roman Catholic brethren, I shall make but one remark. For centuries Ulster has had the priceless blessing of an open Bible, has drawn from the pure cisterns of living water. One has only to travel across her borders to witness the results of this. It is manifestly her duty, then, as it should be her earnest endeavour, to obtain for her countrymen what she possesses herself.

A few days ago in reading a charming book, entitled "The Writings of Patrick," edited by a very distinguished scholar, Dr. Charles H. H. Wright, I was very much struck by the following passage:—

> And the man of God was assiduously desiring and earnestly praying that he might be certified of the present and future state of Hibernia. Then the Lord heard the desire of his heart, and manifested that which he sought for unto him by an evident revelation. For while he was engaged in prayer and the heart of his mind was opened, he beheld the whole island to be as it were a flaming fire, ascending unto heaven, and he heard the Angel of God saying unto him, "Such at this time is Hibernia in the sight of the Lord." And after a little space he beheld in all parts of the island cone-like mountains of fire stretching unto the skies. And again after a little space he beheld as it were candlesticks burning, and after a while darkness intervened; and then he beheld scanty lights. And at length he beheld coals lying hidden here and there and reduced unto ashes yet appearing still burning.

Patrick, plunged in grief at sight of this dark picture, is told by the angel to "look towards the northern side." "Then the saint raised his eyes, and behold he at first saw a small light arising in Ulidia, the which struggled a long time with the darkness and at length dispersed it, and illumined with its rays the whole island."

Dr. Wright has placed the above among the "doubtful" writings of Patrick; but, I confess, I cannot help looking on it as a wonderfully correct picture of the gradual decadence of evangelical religion after the death of our National Apostle. It may be reserved for the Ulstermen of our day to verify the latter portion of the "vision." This will be achieved, not by warring over the bones of mediæval monarchs, both tyrants, but by looking the difficulties of the present in the face and trying to conquer them. Thus, while "speaking the truth in love," we shall have the happiness of knowing that we are all working "for God and country."—The Christian Irishman.

THE IKWEZI LAMACI MISSION.

IN a recent circular letter Mrs. Aitchison reports the visit of Mr. Plant, the school inspector. The occasion was a joyous one to the entire Mission, for the inspector is an earnest Christian, fully in sympathy with Gospel work. Mr. Plant speaks the Kaffir language fluently, and knows well the customs of the people. He conducted religious services with much acceptance, and the parents listened with evident interest to his advice with regard to the education of their children. The sewing work of the girls showed creditable advancement, and it is gratifying to know that a generous spirit is cultivated by their being encouraged to sew patchwork quilts, to be given to aged women who would otherwise have no such comfort.

Mrs. Aitchison says:—"I have glad news to tell. On Sabbath last eight Griquas were received into church fellowship, six young men and two maidens. They have for some months attended the inquirers' class. You can imagine the joy we felt on seeing this row of intelligent faces brighten up with the hidden light as my husband addressed them personally before the congregation. One stalwart youth, six feet high, is the sixth of his family to come out on the Lord's side. We call him 'Saul amongst the people,' but how much better it is that he is trying to follow in the footsteps of his namesake, Abraham! Five years ago he used to walk six miles for lessons in English, which I gave him myself."

Preparations for the new place of worship are well advanced. Mr. and Mrs. Morcum, of Maritzburg, visited the Mission in July, and were greatly struck by the improvement in the entire surroundings during recent years. God's blessing has indeed been abundant. The postal address of the Mission is, Harding, Alfred County, Natal, South Africa.

Miss Bryson, 1, Belmar-terrace, Pollockshields Glasgow, is preparing a box of useful articles to send to Mrs. Aitchison, and will be glad of the fellowship of other Christians in providing for it.

SAMUEL OSBORNE HABERSHON,
M.D., F.R.C.P.

SCARCELY had our mournful footsteps turned aside from following to his last resting-place the late Mr. Denham Smith, than we were called upon to stand on the same spot, and place in an adjoining grave the remains of his friend Mrs. Habershon, with whom he had had such happy fellowship. Since then but four short months have elapsed, and now it has been our sad and sorrowing task to lay to rest, beside his beloved wife and his friend, that faithful and honoured servant of God, Dr. Samuel Osborne Habershon.

By his death, at the comparatively early age of sixty-four, not only has the medical profession, which he so ably adorned, sustained a grievous loss, but Christian work has been deprived of one who, besides being an eminent physician, was no less an earnest and devoted servant of Christ.

This is not the time or place to dwell upon Dr. Habershon's high position and distinguished career as a medical man, nor to note the numerous honours and gold medals gained by him as a student and which were but the earnest of his brilliant future. As physician to Guy's Hospital and teacher of clinical medicine at its school, he soon acquired a thorough knowledge of disease, which led to an extensive practice, while his works on medical subjects gained for him a world-wide fame. Added to this, his high principle, his invariable rectitude of conduct, his loyalty to colleagues, were early recognised by his medical brethren, and the College of Physicians soon marked him out for its most honourable and coveted distinctions, and quite recently elected him Vice-President.

A career such as this could not be deficient in opportunities for usefulness and service for the Master, and these Dr. Habershon used to the full. The willing spirit found many ways. Now it was by the placing of a little book in the hand of each patient in his wards; now by the gift to each student who entered the hospital of a copy of the book of Proverbs; now by some wise and thoughtful advice to the young doctor entering upon life; or again by a quiet word in season spoken to a private patient. Hand in hand with these unostentatious methods were associated others of a more public nature.

With characteristic fearlessness, whether in addressing students as their teacher, or in presiding at meetings of his professional confrères, or delivering an oration before a learned society, he would let his Christian faith be known and felt. None could associate with him without feeling that, whilst by nature gentle and unassuming, he was bold and unflinching in his stand for truth and right. These traits of character were plainly written in every feature of his clever, earnest, and striking face. They gained for him at once the confidence and affection of numerous friends, and the respect of those who differed from him.

His close adherence to the high principles that he set before him no less than his professional attainments enabled one high in the profession to write as follows:—

> Dr. Habershon's death is a great loss to the profession. The College of Physicians had no Fellow more sensible, more worthy, or more honourable. As a consultant, his professional brethren felt they could repose full confidence in his judgment and in the uprightness of his conduct, while the public justly trusted his ability, skill, and probity.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Fradelle & Young, 246, Regent-street, W

Dr. Habershon was born at Rotherham in 1825, and was the son of Mr. J. J. Habershon.

He came to London to study medicine in the year 1840. Having given early response to the faithful instruction of Christian parents, he soon combined active Christian work with a diligent study of his profession. It was in his student days that he found time to visit many of the wretched homes in the Mint and its neighbourhood, in Ratcliff-highway, and the slums of Whitechapel. This earnest and decided stand as a Christian, he has often said, gave him that decision of character and power to say "No" which enabled him to withstand the temptations of his student life. Later on, in 1850, in connection with the Weigh House Chapel, under the pastorate of the well-known Rev. Thomas Binney, he was superintendent of the Darby-street Ragged-school.

Here his quiet efficiency and gentle firmness in dealing with the rough elements to be found at that time in such work soon reduced chaos to order. This gained for him a reputation which, when he subsequently attended the ministry of Rev. James Stratton, led to his acceptance of the post of superintendent of the Paddington Chapel Sunday-school.

At this time he was Assistant-Physician to Guy's Hospital, and was in consulting practice at Finsbury-circus. It was his habit to invite the students of Guy's to meet on Sunday afternoons at his house for the study of the Scriptures. These occasions are still remembered by many who can look back with pleasure to the help and guidance there obtained. This early effort of practical work amongst medical students was fruitful in its results. It led Dr. Habershon to take a foremost place as one of the originators of the Christian Medical Association, in conjunction with the late Drs. Golding Bird, Grainger, and A. P. Stewart—a movement whose object was to unite together the Christian men in the profession. In 1854 its first meeting was held at Freemasons' Hall, with Dr. Habershon and the late Dr. Moore acting as honorary secretaries.

Notwithstanding much opposition from many quarters, the success of the Association was assured, and this was largely due to the excellent secretaryship of Dr. Habershon during his seven years of office. The activity of spiritual life thus aroused in men looked up to and honoured by their juniors in the hospitals, gave an impetus to Christian thought and work among the students themselves at the different schools. As an outcome of this the Medical Prayer Union of to-day, though altered in name, carries on the same work with the same objects, with the satisfactory result that each individual hospital has its Christian Association with a weekly meeting for the study of the Bible and for prayer.

During the many years that Dr. Habershon was connected with Guy's Hospital he was accustomed to hold the opening meeting of each session in his house, to which each newly-entering student received a personal invitation, an example which has since been followed by members of the staff at other hospitals.

In 1863 Dr. Habershon was appointed consulting physician to the London City Mission, a work in which he took a keen interest, which showed itself in many other ways than in the mere perfunctory examination of candidates for the Mission. By his death the society loses a valued friend, and will experience some difficulty in finding a successor of like character, ability, and sympathy.

Although the claims of private practice upon his time were increasingly great, Dr. Habershon continued throughout to be ever active in his labours for Christ. In this he found a congenial fellow-helper in his wife, the late Mrs. Habershon, who herself was a life-long worker of no mean spiritual and intellectual power. Hand in hand, they worked together amongst the poor in the neighbourhood of his residence in Brook-street, Grosvenor-square: she, with her largely attended mothers' meetings, and he with his Sunday evening addresses to the men.

On the site where now stands the recently erected Gray's Yard Ragged Church, for many years had existed a Ragged-school held on the Lord's Day, in which Dr. and Mrs. Habershon had shown much interest. On November 17, 1870, Dr. Habershon gave a supper to upwards of one hundred poor men, and on the following Sunday evening commenced his services for adults: simultaneously Mrs. Habershon began her mothers' meetings in the same premises. The meetings for the casuals, which have since attracted so much well-deserved notice, were then held on the Sunday mornings in a mews leading out of Davies-street, under the able superintendence of Mr. Woods, but were subsequently, in 1872, transferred to Gray's Yard, to the building erected by Mrs. Fuller Maitland. The action of the School Board interfered with this, however, and for a time the meetings were separated until the renting of the "Twinkler," close to, by Dr. Habershon and Mr. Woods, when the two meetings were again united, and continued to be held until quite recently.

He was thus one of the earliest helpers in this work among the "casuals," a work than which there can be few in London of greater interest, presenting as it does to the true Christian philanthropist so unique a field for sowing the Gospel of Christ. It is in a large measure due to Dr. Habershon and to the unflagging energy of his daughter, Miss Ada Habershon, that this striking work is now so efficiently and suitably housed in the Ragged Church, which was opened last year under the chairmanship of Mr. T. A. Denny. Here, only six weeks prior to his death, and in spite of much weakness and pain, Dr. Habershon conducted the evening service. He selected for his subject the "peace of the believer," and dwelt upon "Christ our Peace," "peace in trial," and "peace in death." This his last address in public was given to an attentive and much impressed audience, composed of those he so loved to labour amongst, and was followed by marked blessing.

But it was in happy association with his beloved friend, the late Mr. Denham Smith, that Dr. Habershon for many years past was more prominently engaged as regards Christian work. In the year 1873 Mr. Russell Hurditch, aided by the liberality of Mr. John Morley, of Upper Clapton, commenced evangelistic services on Sunday evenings in St. George's Hall, Langham-place, the Sunday mornings there being occupied at that time by the Theistic services of Rev. Charles Voysey. Owing, however, to the characteristic energy of Dr. Habershon these Sunday mornings were secured by him in the autumn of 1875, and Mr. Denham Smith, who had long desired some central place for special work amongst Christians in the West-end, was requested to organise such services. This he willingly undertook, and both morning and evening meetings were amalgamated under the same management. In this work Dr. Habershon took a special interest; he acted as honorary treasurer, and contributed not only liberally of his means, but also largely of his time and practical sympathy. Strange indeed does it seem that two such devoted servants of Christ, who had thus together initiated, nurtured, and earnestly watched the growth of this active centre of Christian work, should both be called away within a few months of each other from the scene of their mutual toil to the rest of their home above. But, happily, the call came not until they had been permitted to see much fruit to their labours in the gathering in of sinners to Christ, and in the deepening of spiritual life in Christians.

Never in robust health, it was not until the last year of his life that Dr. Habershon's strength showed symptoms of commencing failure, symptoms which culminated in a severe gastric attack in November last. Laid aside for a time he soon, however, recovered, and resumed his professional duties, until March of this year, when he felt much the death of Mr. Denham Smith, upon whom he had been in such close and affectionate attendance for so long.

Following shortly upon this came the serious illness and loss of his beloved wife. Under the mental and physical strain produced by these, his malady, "gastric ulceration," returned, and though for a time still able to continue work, he was in July last once more reduced to a condition which confined him to his room, and gave rise to the gravest apprehensions. In spite of the loving ministrations of his daughters, the skill of medical friends, and the devotion and unremitting watchfulness of his son, Dr. Herbert Habershon, and of his friend, Dr. Gilbart-Smith, the weakness became more manifest.

Contrasting with this stood out in bold relief the strength of his faith, the humility of his trust, and the reality of his hope. With these the sufferings of his pathway through the valley were brightened, until on August 22 he exchanged weariness and labour, disease and death, for rest and life eternal.

And so it is that, whether we regard the field of Gospel work and Christian fellowship, the bereaved children, the sorrowing friends, or the profession of medicine, we see alike reason for mourning a loss which they and we who remain can ill afford. In truth, the space he occupied so well lies vacant, and yet with chastened hearts we can exclaim with Job, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

THE HAYTI MISSION.

"Auguste Albert, the young convert, is doing well, and is very regular at all the services, very earnest, and wishes soon to preach. But it is difficult for a young man in Hayti to be good. You can have no conception of the wickedness and depravity of the place. I can walk for nearly a mile by the seaside and pass numbers of men who are utterly without religion, and do not believe in the existence of God. Consequently, morals are nowhere.

"We have just finished our little Friday evening Bible-class, which is always a good time. A few of us meet together to read and study the Word of God. There were present this evening, Frius, Auguste, Guillaumette (the mayor of the town), Fredric Durand (our organist), and Mr. McKenzie. The conversation is, of course, carried on in French, and our subject just now is St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians. We hope to add to our number by degrees.

"Since this was written the war has come to a close, and it is hoped that with peace will come the Divine blessing on our Christian work in a richer measure. Prayer is asked for Hayti, and any help the friends of missions can give. Prices of provisions have been very high."

SAILORS' WELCOME HOME.—A very soul-stirring time was realised on Tuesday week at the monthly muster of the Christian Lifeboat Crew. Many sailors and watermen were present, among whom were several who could not join their ships on account of the dock labourers' strike. Miss Child spoke a few words on Rev. ii. 10 and Luke xvi. 16, the keynote being "Faithful." Miss Tuck gave a very instructive lesson upon "A people living near unto the Lord." Many testimonies followed. A young man gave a striking account of how one of the "Crew" had met him on the tram-car on his way to the theatre, and had spoken to him. The young man could not rest, and found his way to his friend's lodging, where he gave his heart to God.

SETTING FORTH.—On August 29, a young sister from Birmingham, Adelaide Hillis, left Southampton by the Tagus for Vigo, proceeding thence to Madrid to join Messrs. Gieser and Howard in work there; and on September 12, H. Sidney Turrall expects to leave Southampton by the Trent for Vigo, where he proposes to labour in fellowship with J. C. Hoyle. On August 30, C. J. Macklin, from Doncaster, left the same port with his wife and children to proceed to Maritzburg, Natal, there to pursue his calling, and to preach the Gospel as far as in him lies. Next month others hope to set out: October 3, Mr. and Mrs. Honywill, Miss Hosegood, Mr. A. R. Thoburn, for Singapore; October 19, Mr. and Mrs. Macrae, for India.—Echoes of Service.

British Y.M.C.A. Conference,

DUBLIN, SEPTEMBER 3—6.

SIGNS of vigorous life and interest in the work of the Association were very abundant in the recent Conference. The attendance was exceedingly good; men of all grades of influence in the work were well represented. The meetings were also exceptionally well attended by the Christian public. For the first time a spirit of enthusiasm was aroused in the endeavour to place on a proper footing the finances of the Council who superintend the national work. As a crowning sign of prosperity, unusually happy testimony was repeatedly given and eagerly received as to the power of the Holy Spirit for service, and concerning the work and example of Him whom all those assembled confessed as Lord.

Every morning and evening the delegates gathered together for public worship and praise and prayer. Before the general meetings commenced there was, as usual, a

PRELIMINARY CONFERENCE OF SECRETARIES.

This was held in a convenient hall in the beautiful marine suburb of Howth. Mr. R. P. FROSTE, an old friend of the Dublin Association, received the secretaries as his guests for the mid-day meal. The afternoon session was held in his garden, and consisted of a report of the impressions received in America, during their recent visit, by Messrs. Burn and McCann, supplemented by general questions. The forenoon was devoted to prayer, and to a brief but profitable consideration of a very important subject, the relation of athletic sports and secular entertainments to the work of the Y.M.C.A. There was, as the result, a general consensus that everything undertaken should be the best of its kind; that these departments were good in themselves, and were capable, under wise direction, of being used for the welfare of young men and the glory of God. The moral inculcated was, "Be sure you are right, then go ahead."

During the business sitting a Secretaries' Society was formed, open to all paid officers of Associations, for the promotion of their mutual welfare, spiritual and temporal.

The arrangements for the general conference were admirably executed by the Dublin Committee, assisted by Mr. Robert McCann, travelling secretary for Ireland. The Conference was inaugurated by a presided over, in Mr. John R. Fowler's regretted absence through illness, by Mr. SAMUEL M'COMAS, J.P., a capital chairman. These receptions have taken the same form year by year, and are in danger of becoming somewhat wearisome. The different nationalities are welcomed separately, and acknowledgments are made on behalf of each. The advantage is that an opportunity is given for several speakers on each side; the benefit, however, is not commensurate with the effort, the process being, like the old-fashioned toasting, more hearty than profitable. The delegates might all be welcomed together, and an opportunity given for a good inaugural address. The above remarks apply to the system, and not by any means to its representatives on the present occasion. These were Rev. Dr. FLETCHER (St. Barnabas, Dublin), who reminded the English friends that it was twenty-one years since their last official visit was paid; Rev. SAMUEL PRENTER, Presbyterian minister, who rallied the Scottish delegates by the mention of John Knox; and Rev. Dr. NICHOLAS, Methodist minister, who welcomed his Irish compatriots in written words of wisdom. The responses were made respectively by Mr. George Williams and Lord Kinnaird; by Mr. Oatts, general secretary of Glasgow Association; and by Mr. David Black, general secretary, Belfast. Opportunity was taken by some of the speakers for several questionable political allusions, the most excusable being that made by the Irish representative, who said that as far as the Y.M.C.A. was concerned it was a case of "United Ireland."

RECEPTION OF DELEGATES,

Several visitors from abroad were most heartily welcomed, Mr. Charles Fermaud (International Y.M.C.A. Secretary, Geneva), Mr. Johnson (San Francisco), Mr. Hughes (National Secretary of the French Associations), and Mr. Vanderbecken (one of the secretaries of the Paris (French) Association). Mr. Karl Fries (National Secretary of Sweden), and Mr. J. K. Cree (of New York), sent kindly excuses for absence.

On Wednesday morning, after devotional exercises and the roll call, Mr. JOHN WHITE (London) rose to open the first subject:

"THE PRESENCE AND POWER OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

in the work of Young Men's Christian Associations." He urged that the indwelling of the Spirit is an indispensable qualification and prerequisite for service; that there can be no ultimate success or satisfaction apart from this conscious possession. The mission of the Y.M.C.A. is to young men, many of whom manifest by their lives that the words of Scripture are true in their case: "Having not the Spirit; without strength, without hope, and without God in the world." How, without the Holy Spirit's aid, could the workers hope to succeed in winning such to Christ?

Mr. OATTS (Glasgow) said that the Y.M.C.A. was never so well organised, and their meetings were never so well attended as now. So far, good; but, without the presence and power of the Holy Spirit, absolutely unavailing. They had many an Apollos, but required more Aquilas and Priscillas to deal personally with young men.

Rev. HENRY MONTGOMERY (Belfast) wished to put a few personal questions. We need to be searched as to our own lives; the trouble all lies with ourselves. (1) How much do we know of private prayer? (2) What do we know of our Bible? (3) How about our zeal? (4) How little we value souls! (5) How little communion we have! The address was full of power and deep personal interest.

Major WHITTLE followed. His first words were the text of the whole address. God is dealing very searchingly with us to-day. We ought to go up higher, or step down and go out. Why should He continue us in his work? Some have not yet received the Holy Ghost. They should get out. Some have received the Holy Ghost, but have grieved Him. Repent, or get out of the work. Nobody will put you out, but by and by there is going to be an opening of the record, and great is the responsibility of staying in. "My brethren, be not many teachers." It is an awful thing to be a stumbling-block. God is sovereign. If not "called of God," at your peril you go on. Let go of everything between you and God; and you will get nearer. It is not done once for all; but a life of yielding day by day. The Holy Spirit is "given to them that obey Him."

A brief series of testimonies followed, and then came the noon prayer-meeting, conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, who gave a very profitable Bible-reading on "The work of the Holy Spirit, as set forth in the Acts of the Apostles." The delivery was somewhat marred by an unbroken monotony of voice and manner.

After dinner, in the Leinster Hall Annexe, of which Mr. William Fry was host, a variety of brief and bright speeches were delivered by visitors.

The afternoon session, under the presidency of Mr. JOHN MACPHAIL, Greenock, was devoted to the consideration of an important, though technical subject:—"The work of Young Men's Christian Associations, a definite work for and by young men." Mr. DAVID BLACK (Belfast) gave a very brilliant rhetorical introduction to the topic, which elicited very warm applause. Mr. ROBERT BURN (London) followed with a closely reasoned paper, which elicited warm discussion and criticism. Both papers will doubtless be published in Association channels of communication. The controversy was waged upon two points:—(1) Should the work of the Y.M.C.A. be confined to young men? and (2) Should young men be admitted to a larger share of government and responsibility? The general tone of the Conference, so far as the delegates found opportunity for testifying, was to answer both questions in the negative.

A great many took part in the discussion, including Dr. Ogle (Derby); Mr. Harden (Glasgow); Mr. Gladstone (Southport); Rev. H. Montgomery (Belfast); Mr. Wheeler (Brighton); Mr. Putterill, Mr. Jervis, Lord Kinnaird, Mr. Hind Smith, Mr. George Williams, Mr. W. H. Mills, and Mr. Kennedy (all of London).

The remainder of the session, under the chairmanship of Surgeon-General Gunn, J.P., was devoted to "The work of District Unions." Papers were read by Mr. W. Hind Smith, travelling secretary for the South of England, and by Mr. R. Henderson Smith, travelling secretary for Scotland. Both speakers testified to the valuable results of improved organisation.

A PUBLIC MEETING

was held in the evening, Lord KINNAIRD in the chair, the hall being crowded. The chairman dwelt upon the touching interest attached to the young men of our great cities, and the vital importance of saving them in the days of their youth. Mr. HIND SMITH gave encouraging testimony concerning the results of his labours in the South of England. Mr. HENDERSON SMITH spoke in a similar strain, especially on the ground of the solid evangelical teaching imparted to the young men throughout Scotland, through the agency of the Associations. Mr. ROBERT MCCANN (travelling secretary for Ireland) wanted to see the Irish work still further developed, and an increase in the official staff—a spirited challenge, which found encouraging response in the business session on the following morning. Mr. George Williams endeavoured to extend the sympathies of the meeting to the young men throughout the world. Mr. W. T. Paton and Major Whittle also spoke most acceptably.

On Thursday morning, after the devotional meeting, the delegates addressed themselves to a financial session. The roll-call of Associations throughout England and Ireland was read, and each representative was invited to state what his Association was prepared to do in support of the work of the National Council. A most satisfactory response was elicited, seeing that this was the first occasion on which such a step was adopted. The official contributions were then supplemented by personal donations from friends present. These were so numerous as greatly to interfere with the execution of the remaining items on the programme.

A further scheme was also brought under the notice of the delegates, namely, an effort to provide an additional thousand pounds a year income, to enable the National Council to place more travelling secretaries in the field. The method adopted was to invite friends to give or collect one or more sums of ten pounds each, guaranteed for the next five years; bringing the Association up to its Jubilee year, 1894. Before the session closed seventy of these shares, representing £700, had been allotted. Mr. George Williams, the treasurer, will, we are sure, be glad to receive application for the allotment of the remaining thirty.

At the close of the business, the chair, in the absence of Mr. John C. Newsom, was taken by Mr. John Wilkinson. Papers were read by Mr. W. H. Newett (Manchester) and Mr. George Williams (Rathmines) on "The Relation of the Active Members of the Y.M.C.A. to the Associates." This subject, touching one of the fundamental questions in the Association, elicited a very hearty discussion. This was participated in by Mr. M. H. Hodder, Mr. Cox, and Mr. Putterill (London), Mr. Livingstone (Melbourne, N.S.W.), Mr. Stanley (Walsall), Mr. Kennedy (Exeter Hall), and others. At half-past twelve,

Major WHITTLE gave a most profitable Bible-reading on "Christ, our example as a worker." (1) As called of God; (2) in being baptized by the Holy Ghost; (3) in self-denial; (4) in prayer; (5) in magnifying the Word of God; (6) in compassion; and (7) in faithfulness to individual souls. Like all the Major's Bible-readings and Gospel addresses, this was full of clear, practical exposition and loving warmth.

After dinner, as on the previous day, several interesting little talks were given, amongst others by Mr. Alexander, the gymnastic instructor at Liverpool Y.M.C.A.

At the afternoon session, Mr. Paul Askin, J.P., in the chair, Mr. WILLIAM STEWART (Dundee) read a paper on

BIBLE-CLASS WORK.

This was full of interesting personal testimony, the result of experience in a class of his own; as was also that of the reader of the second paper, Mr. W. H. ROBERTS (Plymouth). During the conversation that ensued, Mr. W. H. MILLS very good-naturedly yielded himself to the cross-examination of the delegates concerning Bible-class work in general, and his own in particular. Many took part in the general discussion. The impression left on the meeting was that the present are difficult days for the old-fashioned Bible-class; and, notwithstanding this, a strongly adverse opinion was expressed against adopting sensational methods, to which Association workers are being strongly tempted to resort.

Hearty votes of thanks were given to the Dublin committee and secretaries, and duly acknowledged; and to the hosts and hostesses, who had shown the delegates the real warmth of Irish hospitality. The invitation of the Birmingham Association, to hold the next British Conference in that city in 1890, was unanimously accepted. The few remaining minutes were devoted to the always popular "Question Drawer."

The official programme was brought to a close by a public evangelistic meeting in the evening. The large hall was crowded, the majority being young men who had been specially invited. Brief addresses were given by a large band of speakers; under the severe pressure of time, the testimonies were more than usually straight to the point. Mr. George Chambers, J.P., presided. The speakers were Messrs. George Williams, George Macfarlane, W. T. Paton, E. J. Kennedy, David Black, W. M. Oatts, H. Armstrong, and J. H. Putterill. Though the meeting did not close till late, the immediate results were most encouraging.

On Friday 350 delegates proceeded in brakes to Powerscourt House, viâ "The Dargle," a picturesque glen; returning viâ Donnybrook, a very beautiful drive of more than thirty miles. The surroundings of Powerscourt House are suggestive of an earthly paradise. On the return to Dublin, dinner was provided; at the close of which the well-pleased delegates wended their several ways; some for a trip to Killarney, others returning through the fog to their more prosaic daily round; but, doubtless, all with hearts refreshed and full of gratitude to God and to his servants for days of joyful and profitable fellowship.

AN ANTI-VIVISECTION HOSPITAL. — The Zoophilist says there is to be shortly provided an Anti-Vivisection Hospital. The project has already taken shape, and its initial success has been most striking. A generous anonymous donor has promised £1000, Mrs. Leigh Browne £100, the Leigh Browne trustees £100, Miss Marston £100, and Mr. Ernest Bell £100. This is but the beginning, though a very good one. We sincerely believe these are the drops which foretell a coming shower of funds wherewith to endow and maintain this most laudable and truly Christian undertaking. Further particulars may be obtained from F. E. Pirkis, R.N., High Elms, Nutfield, Surrey.

VISITING SIBERIAN PRISONERS.

GENTLEMEN,—The journey to Tomsk is long and tedious, and I might have said "expensive," had not the owner of the steamboat generously given us a free conveyance of ourselves and books, because we are visiting the prisons, and want to do good to the exiles. It is fully eight days by steamer from Tobolsk to Tomsk, about 2700 versts (=1800 to 1900 English miles), through a very desolate country. But there are said to be 4000 or 5000 prisoners at Tomsk, as there were some 2000 at Tobolsk, and there is no shorter way of reaching them.

The prison authorities allow me full liberty to preach the glorious Gospel to the captives, and, with rare exceptions, the prisoners receive the Word written and spoken with much gratitude and attention. At Tobolsk a priest was present, and listened with eagerness to the word spoken; he offered to distribute books to any prisoners who might come after we had left.

The journey by steamer is much shortened by the ministry of the Word to a number of students, most of them the sons of priests, who are on their way to the University at Tomsk, where they wish to study for the medical profession, having abandoned their study for the priesthood. They are greatly troubled with all kinds of infidel views, yet some of them are anxiously listening to the positive statements of Gospel truth. The form of godliness does not satisfy, and of the power they have no knowledge. Quite unexpectedly the weekly stream of exiles to Siberia was stopped by a telegraphic order, because there are so many crowded together at Tomsk that time has to be allowed for drafting them off. This they hope to effect by September 1, and then for a short time the regular weekly migration will be continued, till frost sets in and the rivers are no longer open for ships.

On both banks of this splendid watercourse, "the Obi," one can see Ostiak settlements, consisting of tents covered with bark or reindeer skins. They are mostly heathen of a low type, and it is most sad to see that their first touch with European civilisation is generally by the sins of Europe. I am told that intoxicating drinks and terrible diseases prevail amongst them to a fearful extent, and that they are dying out fast.

A young student, a native Samayede, is also among our travelling companions. His heart's desire is to become a missionary to his own people. We travel eight days, in order to spend four days in the prisons at Tomsk, and then to return to Tjumen, again an eight days' journey. A warm-hearted Scotch gentleman at Tjumen showed us much kindness. Mr. Wardropper seems to be a brave pioneer for Siberia by way of commerce, whilst he still retains the warm ring of a God-fearing Scotchman. It does one good to meet with men of his stamp in these far-off lands, and to enjoy fellowship with them,

The season is too far advanced to attempt anything beyond Tomsk this year. We hope to be at Perm on Sept. 1, and then to travel down the Volga. Poste Restante, Samaro, will be my address; and after that Poste Restante, Baku, Transkaukasia.

Yours sincerely, F. W. BAEDEKER.

Tomsk, Siberia, Aug. 16.

BOSTON, U.S.—A few days ago, when a City Missionary, Dr. Waldron, had taken a crowd of children and young people to Franklin Park for an outing, and they had gone under shelter to escape the rain, an effort to start a few Gospel hymns had to be promptly quelled, lest an officer should come in and arrest the missionary, if not the whole picnic! These restrictions are beginning to bear on other than religious bodies; and in the feeling which this is rousing may rest the hope of their entire removal.

RESCUED SLAVES.

ABOUT twelve months ago sixty-two Galla boys and girls were rescued by a man-of-war from three Arab slave-ships and handed over to the Keith-Falconer Mission at Shaik Othman, near Aden. In the Free Church of Scotland Children's Record for September, there is a photograph of some of the fifty who have survived the hardships of the slave-march and the fever of the new climate and soil. Beside them is the senior teacher of the girls, Noor Wild, who was herself carried captive some years ago, but has been trained as a Christian teacher by the American Presbyterian Mission at Cairo.

The Galla race are a powerful people, covering the thousand miles from the heart of Abyssinia south to the great Victoria Lake. They are six millions strong. To the same race belong the Christians of Uganda, many of whom have died the martyr's death. The chartered company established by Sir William Mackinnon, from Mombasa on the east coast of Africa up to the Lake and beyond it, has just made treaties with the Galla chiefs in the highlands of Ethiopia. As soon as the fifty boys and girls have received a thorough Christian training he will be glad to employ them as interpreters and agents among their countrymen, to whom some of them will become missionaries of the Gospel of Christ.

SAILORS' REST, FOWEY, CORNWALL.

THE memorial stones of the Home and Rest to be erected at Fowey, under the auspices of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, were laid in the presence of a large company of friends on Tuesday last week. The building will contain reading, writing, and recreation rooms, bed-rooms and bath-rooms, a mission-room, and apartments for the caretaker. The total cost, including purchase of freehold site, will be about £1200, towards which nearly £800 has been received in gifts and promises.

Brief addresses were given by Rev. G. J. Hill, of London; Mr. W. Hicks, of Newquay; and Rev. H. N. Purcell, vicar of Fowey, who said that although seamen and fishermen belonging to Fowey would always be made welcome, yet the Sailors' Rest would be chiefly for those who came from a distance and were away from their homes. They hoped it would be filled with strangers who would no longer consider themselves strangers, but would look upon the place as their own, and would use it to the fullest extent as a home and as a place of rest.

The third annual meeting of the Cornish Coast Mission was held in the evening of same day in the Institute Hall, and was largely attended. The report showed that great progress had been made, many souls had been saved, and a great work had been accomplished. The result of the day's proceedings amounted to about £160. A sum of £400 is still required in order that the Sailors' Home and Rest may be opened free of debt.

NAPLES HARBOUR MISSION.—Rev. T. Johnstone Irving, superintendent, reports that the sailors are peculiarly accessible at the present time. Moreover, though the population is essentially "floating," there are opportunities of watching the effect of the efforts made for the enlightenment of the sailors. Mr. Irving says:—"The last few years have seen a most marked advance in righteousness among our sailors. Take, for instance, the vice of drunkenness. I am not aware that during the past year a single sailor has been apprehended in Naples on this charge, or, indeed, on any other charge. A few years ago it was far otherwise. A considerable item in our consulate expenses used to be the money spent in connection with sailors imprisoned for drunkenness."

ROMAN CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY FOR IRELAND.

SIR,—The surprise occasioned by Mr. Balfour's nnouncement that it is intended to introduce in ie next Session of Parliament a Bill for the stablishment and endowment of a Roman atholic University in Ireland, in concession to ie demands of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy, has uickly given place to a sense of dismay, and wakened amongst the Protestants of the United ingdom a feeling of indignation and distrust.

The demands of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy ave been stated again and again, and may be riefly expressed in the words of the essay on Church and State," published by Cardinal Manng, in which it is laid down that although "the tate endows a school it must not prescribe the ourse of education."*

The committee and members of the Protestant lliance feel, that to place education in Ireland nder the absolute control of the Church of Rome, nd at the cost of the taxpayer, is an abandonment y the State of its duty to supervise and control l education paid for by the national funds.

A determined opposition will be offered to such measure, and the Protestant Alliance invites ommunications from all who may desire to join in movement to prevent the enactment of legislation give effect to the proposed disastrous policy.

ARMY CHAPLAINS AND SCRIPTURE-READERS.

DEAR SIR,—Mr. Cecil Smith's letter in THE HRISTIAN, on "Chaplains and Army Scripture eaders," is quite true, as I know by personal xperience, being a lady worker among soldiers. o bring the matter before the Christian world is ie way to secure a remedy.

Yours truly, J. E. P.

SIR,—Referring to the letter of Mr. Cecil Smith, am glad of an opportunity to say that when in ie early part of the current year I came to reside Ballincollig, the Scripture-reader of the 4th Iussars (Mr. Cummings) was carrying on his work igorously, in the theatre and schoolroom, at the allincollig Barracks, holding one service on Sunay evenings (the only Protestant Sunday evening ervice in the parish from year's end to year's end), nd two, and sometimes three, week evening serices, with the men and their families. God honured his faithful service and Scriptural preaching y many striking instances of conversion, both of ien and women. I am speaking from my personal nowledge, after having worshipped with my amily for six months among the soldiers and their ives and families belonging to the 4th Hussars.

During Lent the Cork chaplain held Sunday vening services in the garrison church. The first unday there was a good congregation, but week y week it dwindled. The rapid reading of the angled ritual, the genuflexions and High Church mfoolery, and what did duty for the preaching of od's Gospel to lost men, all was got through in less an an hour. The chaplain himself told me that the evening Lenten services were found successul he would continue them subsequently; but the hole thing was such a ghastly failure that he opped it on the Sunday before Easter, and has ever held a service in the church since. All the ork of the "Chaplain" at Ballincollig is a short ervice on Sunday mornings conducted by curates rom the Cork churches, they drive out from Cork n a car, conduct service for an hour, mount the ar, and back to Cork again for morning service at ieir own churches; so much for chaplaincy at allincollig.

It is noteworthy that Mr. Cummings did not stop is services during the Lent before referred to, at held them an hour or so after the chaplain had nished his performance, and the congregations ere very good, in fact quite as good as before and ubsequent to the chaplain's fiasco.

All this points to something utterly rotten and nsuitable in the chaplaincy system. It stands ondemned, as not meeting the necessities of the ase. Men and women connected with the army need spiritual bread, not husks—the glad tidings of great joy, not spiritual half-and-half in the shape of small talk and ecclesiastical millinery combined. Moreover, they can only be reached by Godly, earnest, self-sacrificing, plain men, who are themselves thoroughly emancipated from ritualistic formalism, and all the old, toothless, sapless, limp and mouldy ecclesiasticism covered up by the word "Priest"; about which men of sincerity, honour, and common sense are almost weary of poking their tongue in their cheek and laughing, in sheer amazement that any clergyman can be found so far gone as to suppose that he imposes upon anybody by his stupid and preposterous pretensions.—Yours truly, GEORGE HAYCRAFT.

Royal Gunpowder Mills, Ballincollig.

SIR,—In your issue of the 30th ultimo you have published a letter from a correspondent on the subject of Army Scripture Readers. The subject is an important one to all who are interested in spiritual work in the army, and I am glad it has been brought forward. I was for some years honorary secretary of this Society in one of the Indian Presidencies, and can therefore speak with a little experience of the difficulties indicated.

It is a deplorable fact that the Church of England chaplains, though they may be pious and devout men, teach, as a rule, the Ritualistic doctrines of salvation, by sacraments and good works. The Army Scripture Readers' Society is carried on by, and mainly supported by those who believe such doctrines to be most pernicious. To send earnest Scripture Readers to be superintended by Ritualistic chaplains is to pave the way to hypocrisy and insincerity of some sort. The Reader must either tone down the strength of his own convictions, or work against his Superintendent, while obliged to attend ministrations of which his conscience disapproves.

I think it is generally admitted that there must be some superintendence. First, because it is good for the Readers themselves to be under proper pastoral guidance; and, secondly, because in military life, unless they are furnished with due authority, many doors of usefulness will be closed to them: e.g., they would not be allowed into hospitals.

The difficulty is how to secure this proper superintendence. At a meeting of officers and others interested in this question, held at Simla in 1881, at which Mr. Gelson Gregson and Sir Robert Phayre were present, I think there was a unanimous opinion that superintendence was necessary, and every effort should be directed to obtain it on a sound basis.

I would suggest the following solution. Let the Society declare unequivocally their adherence to Protestant truth, their conviction that Holy Scripture alone is our guide-book to salvation, and that they have no sympathy with current Ritualistic doctrines. (Such a declaration might alienate some present supporters, but the separation must be, if they are to be true to their principles.) Then, before sending a Reader to any garrison, let the Society inquire from the Anglican chaplain whether he is willing to superintend a Reader on those terms. If he is not willing, then let a similar inquiry be made from the Presbyterian or Wesleyan chaplains. Of course it would be clearly understood that Readers are sent, not to proselytise, but to extend the knowledge of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

In the event of no chaplain undertaking the superintendence, it is better that no Reader be sent at all.

Your correspondent has instanced a case at a large camp in Ireland. I do not know whether the Society applied to either the Presbyterian or Wesleyan chaplains for superintendence of the Reader in question, but I think that had such application been made, either would have gladly undertaken it. Among the Presbyterian soldiers alone there would be plenty of work, for there are three Scottish regiments there.

Soldiers, whatever their faults may be, are not sectarian. At any evangelistic meeting among them you will find men of every denomination. No Scripture Reader need fear that, because he is accredited to one particular "persuasion," he will have no influence on others. The men will come to hear him, often out of pure curiosity, whether he asks them or not. But he must not proselytise, or he will get into trouble with the authorities.

Now, let me point out that there is something to be said on the chaplain's side of the question. Take the case of an earnest and godly chaplain of the right sort, of which there are many, thank God. He is given a Scripture Reader by the Society. He has not been consulted as to the selection of the man, and knows nothing about his fitness for the work? Is it surprising that he should ask for some guarantee of his qualifications for the work? Surely it is only natural. The Scripture Readers are but men. I could tell of instances where shame and dishonour have been brought on the name of Christ by those supposed to be devoted to his work in this department. The pay and position of a Reader are comparatively good, and have sometimes been an inducement to unworthy men applying for and obtaining situations as Readers. Any chaplain of experience knows this, and must be on his guard against it. Surely he cannot be blamed if he at first places a certain amount of restriction upon the Reader.

The main point, however, is that the Society should declare its principles decidedly. I fear it may mean the withdrawal of some honoured patrons; but, much as this would be regretted, it is better than the present system, which is a compromise and an unequal yoke.

Yours very truly, G. K. S. M.

DIVINE HEALING.

DEAR SIR,—I have read the very interesting letter in your paper of August 16 upon faith-healing. I trust the Lord for my healing.

May I suggest a few thoughts?

(1) Faith-healing is nothing visionary; but the outcome of a deep, calm, perfect confidence in Christ Jesus.

(2) Some say it is "a gift." So it is; but the gift of healing as illustrated in the life-work of Dorothea Trüdel is quite apart from the individual believer's trust in the Lord for everything. I have trusted for healing for a full year, but I have not yet been "called" to "lay hands" upon others.

(3) It is impossible to learn faith-healing, as some Christians would seem to try, by argument, and by analysing every suggestion, and almost refusing to believe unless they see something. Faith is not sight.

(4) Healing by simple faith is certainly Scriptural. Clear directions (of the Lord's will) as regards the "ceremony" (if this is the reverent expression) to be observed in visiting the sick is left for the Church in James v. 14, 15. Some Christians would spiritualise the meaning, but that cannot be. Take these passages and compare. Matt. viii. 16, 17: you read there, "That it might be fulfilled...Himself took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses." 1 Pet. ii. 25, "He bare our sins in his own body on the tree." Now the extraordinary part is that all Christians have to rest upon 1 Pet. ii. 24 for salvation from sins, and this by naked faith; but their confidence vanishes with their faith, as to "bare our sicknesses," in Matt. viii. 17, as concerning healing of the body.

(5) Again it is urged: "What about medicine; has not God provided it for man?" Certainly. What should I have done before I had faith to trust Jesus without medicine? Also, "He is kind to the unthankful and the evil." Let it be remembered also that faith is the grand proof of the new birth!

May I, to the glory of God, tell you how He enabled me to trust Him fully? I went to the Keswick Convention in 1888, sick in mind and in body. Amongst others, in the general after-meeting, I was invited to stand up as a testimony that I was willing to trust the Lord and surrender myself body, soul, and spirit. I stood; at that Convention I found Christ as my Saviour, my sanctification, and my healer, by faith. Now before this I knew nothing of Bethshans nor faith-healers; all I knew was that I had found Christ! I gave myself to Him, and never felt willing after to take myself back. He has taken entire charge of me.

I am now so happy and so well. Up to that time I had suffered much, and had been for about four years frequently in the doctor's hands. I had taken wine, mineral waters, invalid stout, and plenty of medicine; but after Keswick, such a thing became almost amusing to contemplate. Since that time I have had fiery trials, in being assailed by those who loved me too well to see me, as they feared, refusing God's special provision for me; but in all cases of pain or illness, I have been healed in a few hours.

If the Lord can heal with means, why not trust Him to do it without. A magnificent testimony is lost, and Christians (even missionaries), continue "subject to bondage," while there is this glorious freedom awaiting them.

There is no case of Jesus Christ refusing to heal, nor telling the sick that they would be perfected by that suffering; but there are other forms of suffering mentioned for the "perfecting of the saints," and for his glory, which our dear Master foretold, and which came to pass.

In conclusion, there is the "Life of Dorothea Trüdel" (1s. Morgan & Scott), which shows most exquisitely the healing of the Lord, by simple, childlike faith in Him.

Yours very sincerely, EMILY L——.

THE DOCK LABOURERS' STRIKE.

DEAR SIR,—It is not often that I find in your journal anything with which I am not in sympathy, and its general tone is one of the many charms it has for me. It is therefore with hesitation that I venture to ask whether, in your number of the 6th instant, and when speaking of the strikes, you refer to the Dock Directors, without any qualification whatever, as exhibiting "selfish callousness," you are quite justified or wise. It so happens that one of the Directors is my intimate friend. I know him to be an earnest Christian, an unwearied student of the Bible, ready at all times to take part in work for the Lord, and a man of very simple faith. And as I know he reads THE CHRISTIAN weekly, I cannot help feeling that your epithet will grieve him greatly.

I feel myself all too ignorant to get at the truth of the great question involved in these strikes. I only know, and I feel strongly, that the enormous wealth of this country is far too unevenly divided, and that labour does not receive its proper proportion of reward. I fully endorse your general views as to the need of Christian dealing. In these views my friend is at one with me. But in his view of the present difficulty he believes that the dock labourers form a very small part of the uprising. He considers that the wages paid (not less than 20s. a week when in full work, and generally some three or four shillings more) are higher than is mostly paid for similar labour in other businesses—notably by railways—and he has painful evidence before him day by day that plenty of labourers would largely come forward, but for the terrible intimidation which is made use of. He tells me that the public only see the general behaviour, whereas he has daily evidence of individual terrorism and personal suffering.

In a director's view, also, he must take in the consequences which will follow, for, of course, the extra 1d. an hour is but a small part. When this is granted, as a matter of course, every grade above will be out of proportion, and it is the whole question, and not a small part, which has to be considered. As yet the merchants and shipowners have not come forward to bear their share of the increased cost, and he scarcely thinks that the Dock Companies should bear the whole burden. But even if others consent to bear it, there arises beside it all the still greater question whether the trade in general can bear higher charges. The shipping trade of London is, I am told, very largely a transit business—i.e., goods are brought here in the first instance for transhipment to the Continent and elsewhere. Some of this trade (that of tobacco for instance) is now almost entirely lost to London, never to return, and the efforts being made by France in the new Calais Docks, and, still more, the immense efforts being put forth at Hamburg, where enormous expenditure has lately been incurred by the municipality, make it doubtful whether, with the cheaper continental labour and the longer hours prevailing there, this transit business can, with higher charges, be maintained here. It was only a moderate advance that drove away the iron shipbuilding trade from London; and I myself know that much ironwork used in building trades is done in Belgium.

The questions involved, therefore, are of the utmost importance. My friend, who has no knowledge of my writing to you, is giving his whole time and talents, and I am afraid health, to their consideration. Of course, he may be wrong; but whilst your and my own sympathies are with poorly paid workmen, at least we may think that there are two sides to the question. Until there is greater combination with continental workmen, an easy generosity may result in depriving the poor workpeople here of the little employment they have.

Again I say I cannot solve these questions to my own mind; my friend is in the position where he must endeavour to do so, and he is endeavouring to do it honestly and prayerfully. You may have made up your own mind, but is it well that my friend, in coming to your journal for comfort, and for news of God's work, should find himself branded, without any recognition of his difficulties, as one who is simply exhibiting a "selfish callousness"? I think, dear Sir, you will do something to set this right.—Yours sincerely,

Bickley, Kent. HAMMOND CHUBB.

SIR,—For many years I have, on important national occasions, noted the lessons for the day appointed in the Church lectionary, and have never failed to find in them suitable teaching. That it has been no mere coincidence or fanciful notion I judge from the very lengthened time during which I have made this observation, and also because I have tested it with reference to many historical events in English and French history.

On August 25, the first Sunday after the commencement of the great strike, the first lesson was from 1 Kings xii. The Hebrew people ask their king to make their yoke lighter, but, notwithstanding the advice of his experienced councillors, Rehoboam refuses, whereupon the leader of the movement gives the signal for revolt, and ten of the tribes fall away from the house of David. During the past three weeks the analogy of the previous part of this incident to what has occurred in London has been obvious; will it become completely so?

On the next Sunday, September 1, the first lesson was from 1 Kings xviii. Israel is asked to make a great decision, Jehovah or Baal. The God who seeks the spiritual elevation of men, or the god of productive energy—which will Israel acknowledge? The same question came to England. Would it worship the wealth-producing power, or that God who counts a human being as of more value than all material things? England and its colonies have answered: "The Lord He is the God!" Every penny sent to the strike means that we care more for the manhood of the East-end than that London should be the greatest money-making centre in the world. We worship the Son of Man, and not Baal.

To-day a great warning comes to those who represent the religion of England, to those who profess and call themselves Christians. The first lesson is from 1 Kings xxii. to ver. 41. Ahab, the grasping king of Israel, is at war with his foes; he turns for help to his neighbour, Jehosaphat, a worshipper of Jehovah, and a ruler who seeks to establish justice and truth in his dominions. Thinking of the stability of his kingdom, and the domestic happiness of his son, married to Ahab's daughter, Jehoshaphat allies himself with the worshippers of Baal, saying, "I am as thou art, my people as thy people, my horses as thy horses." What happens? The allied kings are defeated, Ahab slain, and Jehoshaphat nearly shares his fate; and in the end this unholy alliance brings about the entire destruction of those in whose interest it was evidently made—the family of Jehoshaphat. When his son Jehoram ascends the throne, that king shows himself already possessed by the murderous spirit of the family into which he has married—slaying all his brethren to secure his own position. The Nemesis followed, and in the revolt under Jehu against the house of Ahab, his own son Ahaziah and a number of his grandsons perish. And as if to climax all the evil results coming from this alliance with Baal-worshippers, Athaliah tries to destroy all that remains of the seed-royal of Judah, and almost succeeds in extirpating the race of David.

What a lesson! Will religious England understand it? The working classes, whose alienation from religion seems to puzzle many, gave on Saturday, by means of their organ in the press, a hint of the true reason. "To-morrow," said The Star, "will, we hope, see the churches coming into the great controversy. They will do well to set themselves conclusively on the right side."

Do we sympathise with the plutocrat or the labouring man—with mammon or with man—with Baal or Jehovah? Are we going to play the part of Jehoshaphat, and with one hand try to help the reign of God, and with the other grasp the hand and fight for the interests of the worshippers of Baal?

THE EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE.*

THIS is another issue of "The Expositor's Bible" and is as scholarly and as able in its own line as its predecessors. The author's method of interpreting Revelation leads him to deny a literal meaning in almost every place. His aim is "to catch the broader interpretation and spirit of the book." He deals with the general features of the Church's character during the whole of her connection with the world. General principles, rather than particular events, are, in his judgment, described. And his idea is worked out with considerable skill. He writes as one deeply attached to evangelical truth; earnestly alive to the danger of the Church's growing worldliness; and fearless in declaring that the Gospel of God is not that effeminate thing which some modern teaching represents it to be. Every evangelical reader will find in the book much that will not only commend itself to his judgment, but will prove inspiring and helpful.

We were sorry, however, to read the following exposition of chap. i. 5. Speaking of our being loosed from sins, Dr. Milligan says: "This loosing takes place 'in' rather than 'by' the blood of Christ, for the blood of Christ is living blood, and in that life of his we are enfolded and enwrapped so that it is not we that live, but Christ that liveth in us" (p. 7). Such language applied to the blood of Christ is mystical and mystifying. Scripture clearly teaches that we are made partakers of the life of Christ, not by the living blood of Christ (the idea seems monstrous), but by the Holy Ghost. The blood of Christ releases us from sin, not by communicating to us the life of Christ, but by applying to us the efficacy of his death.

The author's method of interpretation may be judged from the following examples: The angels of the churches are neither guardian angels, nor bishops and pastors, but "symbolical representations of the active, as distinguished from the passive life of the Church" (p. 25). The 144,000 of chap. vii. are the whole Church under a Jewish figure; while the great multitude, blood-washed and white-robed, standing before the throne, are the same persons viewed under a different aspect. Neither this multitude nor the 144,000 in chap. xiv. are "in heaven" in the "ordinary meaning of that term. They are on earth" (pp. 130, 243). Even the new heaven of chaps. xxi., xxii. is only "the heavenly aspect of the 'Christian's' pilgrimage to his eternal home" (p. 371). These positions, if unusual, are ably defended, and even those who differ from them will find much that is instructive in the author's method of presenting them.

We cannot but think, however, that in his denial of a literal meaning to the visions of the Seer, Dr. Milligan goes to an unwarrantable extreme in expounding chap. xx. This is his idea: "The thousand years express no period of time.... They embody an idea, and that idea, whether applied to the subjugation of Satan or to the triumph of the saints, is the idea of completeness or perfection. Satan is bound for a thousand years; that is, he is completely bound. The saints reign for a thousand years; that is, they are introduced into a state of perfect and glorious victory" (p. 337). To state such a theory is to refute it. But the author labours diligently to overcome the insurmountable difficulties connected with it. The first and second resurrections are both spiritual. "The rest of the dead" are "Old Testament saints, who, by the completion of the Lord's redeeming work, are brought up to the level of the New Testament Church" (p. 352, foot note). Such an interpretation, though defended with much ingenuity and skill, appears to us very like a denial of the passage interpreted. The same remark applies to the author's interpretation of the judgment under the sixth seal in chap. vi. 12—17, which is explained to be "the Christian dispensation on its side of judgment" (pp. 104 and 108). If this were all the passage meant, its language would appear to us to be greatly exaggerated.

Yet the book is thoughtful and devout, and often edifying and inspiring, even to those who do not accept the author's interpretation of the Revelation.

Miss M. F. Cusack ("the Nun of Kenmare") preparing a new work for the press. It will be r valedictory to Rome, and a supplement to her Autobiography." She has delivered many adresses in Canada for the last few months; she has en cordially received by Protestants and even Catholics.

Dr. Horatius Bonar.—The death of Dr. onar, says Murray's Magazine, is a great loss to e lovers of devotional poetry. Though a Scotchan and a Presbyterian, he wrote hymns which ve been sung with enthusiasm by English congations, and read with delight and edification in e most "orthodox" of Anglican homes.

Miss Bromby, who is popularly known as e lady curate, works energetically in the parish St. John, Bethnal Green, where her brother is icar. To her efforts is due the establishment of Cheltenham Ladies' College Mission in the arish. The Mission will take the form of a aining home for East-end workers, nurses, and so rth.

Rev. Dr. John Hall, the famous Presbyterian ivine of New York, has been visiting his native lace in co. Armagh. On Sunday week he preached ith his usual persuasiveness and power, to a rowded congregation, in Mountnorris Presbyterian hurch, where, when a child, he was accustomed to orship with his father, and where he is held in e highest esteem by all classes.

Dr. Henry Soltau, who has recently been oing medical mission work with much success in e East-end in connection with Mildmay, has for e present transferred his services to Dr. Lasen's Hospital at Tottenham. He is prohibited rom returning to the foreign field through conderations of health. His place in East London ill be supplied by a son of the well-known Dr. eatby.

Rev. Mothoora Nath Bose preached on unday week at Abbey-hill Chapel, Kenilworth. r. Bose was trained for the Calcutta bar, but reinquished the legal profession to become the first issionary of a Bengali Native Christian Misonary Society. Mr. John Macgregor ("Rob Roy") is seriously ill at his residence at Blackheath, the state of his health being such as to cause grave apprehension to his friends. Fears are expressed that he will never again be able to take part in the many and various philanthropic movements with which he has for so many years identified himself.

The Book World.

WESTWOOD LEAFLETS.—A very delightful series of twelve leaflets with this title, by Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon, is issued by Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster. The short narratives or homilies are mostly extracted from the authoress's Book Fund Reports of different years, and very choice bits of spiritual experience they are. We can conceive of nothing better fitted to be messages of comfort and cheer to Christians, and very heartily commend them for wide distribution. An assorted packet of fifty can be had for sixpence.

OUR WEE BOY. Earnest thoughts for young mothers, gleaned from a brief motherhood. Rev. J. Lowe, of the Edinburgh Medical Mission, supplies an introduction, the author of the book being a lady who was the first hon. sec. and for several years one of the most active workers in connection with the Livingstone Memorial Young Women's Christian Association. The story is a peculiarly sweet one and well told. Some admirable advice is given by the way as to the moral and religious training of the young. Edinburgh: James Thin.

CREMATION AND URN BURIAL. By W. Robinson. Cassell & Co. To those who are interested in the subject of cremation, and, indeed, to all who are concerned that the dead should be buried without being a source of danger to the living, this book will be useful. The arguments for urn burial are taken chiefly from the evils attending the present mode of burying the dead, and are well presented. The cemeteries of the future, if this system is adopted, are to be much more beautiful, and much less baneful, than those of the present. Whether its arguments are considered convincing or not, the book will be found interesting and instructive.

SUNDAY TALKS. By Rev. J. S. Nye. 6d. Iliffe & Son. This little book contains reports of the author's "Talks" on Sunday afternoons, as originally appearing in The Coventry Times. The subjects are of a varied and popular character, and calculated to interest the people. They include: "Why people don't go to church"; "Betting and gambling"; "Football"; "The theatre"; and one of the "Talks" was devoted to a criticism of Mr. Archibald Brown's pamphlet, "The Devil's Mission of Amusement." On this subject we think that Mr. Brown is nearer the truth than his critic. But upon every subject Mr. Nye speaks as one who has something to say, and who knows how to say it. He thinks for himself, and therefore most thoughtful people will find in his utterances many things with which they cannot agree. Our hope is that he may be kept very true to the Gospel whose power he so evidently knows. There is a useful future before him if he does this.

THE LIFE OF SUBMISSION, DEPENDENCE, AND REST: A Clergyman's Personal Testimony. Marshall Bros. In simple language, and with modest confidence, the writer describes his experiences during seven years' earnest seeking after full salvation, and the result as it affected his own life and work. His testimony will prove greatly helpful to many. The mistakes and failures through which he passed on his way to rest are doubtless similar to those experienced by others. They will be encouraged by his example. A life "of fellowship with God, and of victory over sin" is declared to be the will of God for all who surrender fully to Christ; while sinlessness in the flesh—the assertion "that the very existence of sin is taken out of the sanctified believer"—is pronounced unscriptural. A pure heart is described as "a heart delivered from the power of conscious sin, and set free from those evil emotions which harassed the Christian, and disturbed his peace and rest." We commend the book as calculated to guard the unwary against dangers through exaggerated language, and to help those who seek to know and live the truth.

RUIN AND RESCUE. By Mrs. Charles Fisher. 6d. George Stoneman. A Scottish temperance story, attractive in style, and definite in moral purpose.

In a compact little volume there are published three "Prize Essays on the Class Meeting," written in connection with a prize competition announced in The Methodist Magazine last year. Over two hundred essays were sent in, and the first three, written by Rev. W. H. Thompson, Rev. Simpson Johnson, and Rev. Edward Smith, are now given to the public in this form. It may safely be assumed that almost everything that can be urged in favour of the class meeting is set forth in these essays. There is a supplement containing suggestions, topics, outline Bible readings, &c., and the little book, we are sure, will be welcome in many a Methodist household. (3d. T. Woolmer.)

THE STORY OF JESUS IN THE WORDS OF SCRIPTURE. By Alexander Mackeith. 1s. Glasgow: Maclure, Macdonald & Co. In the form of one continued interwoven statement of facts from the four Gospel narratives, the author has produced a book which will greatly interest the young, and be of service to many a Sunday-school teacher. Containing over two hundred quarto pages, every other of which is occupied by excellent pictures, with many blackboard illustrations, anecdotes, and explanations, this will undoubtedly be a useful handbook to persons engaged in conducting services for children. It is a marvel how such a large book can be sold at so low a price; but we are glad to hear that it is going by thousands. We trust it will have a success similar to the author's previous work, "Moses's Bible."

EMERGENCY NOTES. By Glentworth R. Butler, M.D. 2s. Funk & Wagnalls, 44, Fleet-street. The author, who is medical director of the Red Cross Society of Brooklyn, U.S.A., has had much experience in instructing non-medical people "what to do in accidents and sudden illness until the doctor comes." These "notes" contain much useful information expressed in plain language. Members of societies having for their object the rendering of first aid to the injured, will find it a very helpful book, while in most households it might be studied to good purpose. Several illustrations assist the letterpress, and there is an excellent index. The popularity of such organisations as the St. John's Ambulance Association in England is extremely gratifying, and we trust this book will increase the number of their members.

THE KINGS OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH. By George Rawlinson. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. A valuable addition to the deservedly popular "Men of the Bible" series. The outstanding characters of the books of Kings and Chronicles are delineated in the light of the writings of contemporary prophets, and the intimations of the monuments which have in recent years been unearthed in Egypt and Assyria. The lives of nearly forty kings, whose names are quite familiar to Bible readers, have been sketched with such power and clearness, that the men seem to pass before our eyes and play their part in public affairs. Professor Rawlinson has performed a difficult task with judgment and great success, and the book may confidently be commended to students, and all who desire a concise treatment of the history of Israel and Judah from the days of Solomon to the deportation to Babylon.

GOLD FROM OPHIR; A New Book of Bible Readings. By J. E. Wolfe. 1 dollar 25 cents (5s.) Willard Tract Depository, Toronto. Dr. J. H. Brookes writes an introduction to this book, which will certainly prove of great service to many hard-worked Christian teachers. Engaged in active evangelistic work, Mr. Wolfe has come to realise the need that exists for a practical analysis and synthesis of Scripture doctrine on a variety of subjects. He has in this volume put in order much of what the Word of God teaches with regard to Ruin, Redemption, Regeneration, and Resurrection, the articles being generally short and lucid, and the tabular arrangements comprehensive and clear. After illustrating these four great fundamental facts, Mr. Wolfe fills some chapters with "nuggets of gold" on the Holy Spirit, the Scriptures, Work and Workers, and Fragments that Remain. Many books and periodicals have been laid under contribution in the compilation of this work, which will, we trust, be widely studied; its outlines are such as many Bible-class conductors and others will be glad to have at hand, as furnishing the groundwork of evangelistic and edifying addresses. While specially suited to help Christian workers, the book will afford pleasure and instruction to any earnest Bible student.

MESSRS. CASSELL AND CO.'S SERIALS.

CONQUESTS OF THE CROSS is bringing under wide-spread notice the great work of missions throughout the world. Part 6 gives an account of the labours of Carey, Marshman, and Ward in India, and of John Elliot and David Brainerd among the Red Indians of America. THE LIBRARY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE, the issue of which has gone as far as Part 8, is devoted to shorter poems of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Some exquisite morceaux are presented, as well as biographical and explanatory matter. THE WORLD OF ADVENTURE contains many stirring scenes and moving occurrences. The twelfth part, concluding the first volume, is replete with passages from the writings of travellers, episodes of war, and other narratives proving fact to be in some cases much stranger than fiction. THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS AND THE HOLY WAR, is an admirable serial, fully illustrated. This issue has proceeded as far as Part 12, which concludes with the demolition of Doubting Castle. THE HISTORY OF PROTESTANTISM, by Rev. Dr. Wylie, in Part, 16 gives incidents in the life of Calvin, and enlarges upon the Reformation in France. This is a serial which will, we trust, find its way into thousands of homes. Part 20 of MILTON'S PARADISE LOST, illustrated by Doré, continues Book x. of the great epic. The notes are few, but always lucid and welcome. THE ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF ENGLAND, Part 35, opens with the accession of William and Mary to the throne, and in capital style relates the events which led up to the battle of the Boyne, and the reforms of the early part of the reign. THE OLD TESTAMENT COMMENTARY FOR ENGLISH READERS, edited by Bishop Ellicott, is deservedly held in high esteem. The sixtieth part contains Ps. cv. to cxxiv., with notes and comments abreast of modern scholarship, and in a high degree elucidatory of the sacred text.

September Magazines.

The Chronicle of the London Missionary Society. 1d. J. Snow & Co. "Rough Experience in New Guinea," by Mrs. Chalmers, is a graphic description of danger and discomfort. Items from India, Madagascar, China, and other countries make up a very good number.

Our Darlings, edited by Dr. Barnardo (3d. J. F. Shaw & Co.), has reading matter to suit all who love and care for the young. "Stories of Strange Sights," and "Some Far-away People" bring under notice various sections of the great human family, and are therefore calculated to extend and deepen the sympathies of those who thoughtfully read them.

The Hospital opens with a portrait of Miss Florence Nightingale. Among the more noteworthy contents are: "Words of Consolation," "The Story of the Insane," and "Some Points connected with Cholera." There is much in these pages to entertain and instruct all classes of readers. (6d. Office: 139 and 140, Salisbury-court, Fleet-street, E.C.)

Babyhood has a very instructive article on "Vaccination," and another on "Limps." "Imagination and Exaggeration," and "Change of Posture in Sleep," are well worth reading. The Mothers' Parliament, Nursery Problems, and Baby's Wardrobe are useful departments of a magazine which is always bright and interesting. (6d. Office: 92 and 93, Fleet-street, E.C.)

All the World is a capital number. After an article by Commissioner Railton on "Expansion," it is cheering to read of war against sin and misery in Finland, South Africa, France, Scandinavia, New Zealand, and the United States. Among the other contents, "Our Slums," by Major Cooke, is worthy of special mention. "Office Notes" detail varied work of the Salvation Army, whose cause this magazine ought greatly to help. (3d. Office: 56, Southwark-street, S.E.)

The Friend contains some important contributions on the peace question; and an article entitled, "Deaconesses in the Society of Friends," in which the suggestion is made that there should be connected with the meeting-houses and mission-rooms of the community "servants of the poor" prepared to befriend such as stand in need. (6d. S. Harris & Co., 5, Bishopsgate-street Without.)—The British Friend publishes a thoughtful article, "The Future of the Society of Friends," in which questions relating to ministry are discussed. It is pleasing to read that some young men have been converted in Japan through reading the life of Stephen Grellet, recently translated into Japanese. (6d. J. G. Smeal, Crosshill, Glasgow.)

The Homiletic Review, an international magazine of religious thought, is full of articles of varied interest. We note as specially valuable Dr. A. T. Pierson's "Practical Hints on Pulpit Oratory"; and "The Parish Minister Knight-errant," by Dr. Wayland Hoyt. The sermonic section is a storehouse of suggestive matters, which preachers and teachers will find useful. (1s. Funk & Wagnalls, 44, Fleet-street, E.C.)

Messrs. Partridge & Co. have published a series of leaflets, presenting choice poems by Evan May (6d. the packet of fifty).

An interesting pamphlet is published by The Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland, Edinburgh. "In Memoriam: Helen Jemima Chalmers." The active and useful life of this daughter of the illustrious Scottish Divine, Dr. Chalmers, is well told by several capable pens; a portrait of Miss Chalmers is given.

THE INGATHERING OF ISRAEL. Messrs. Bell & Bain, 41, Mitchell-street, Glasgow, have printed in pamphlet form the speech on this subject which Rev. Dr. A. N. Somerville delivered in May last in the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. Friends of Israel will be deeply interested alike in the narrative of personal service and observation and the exposition of Scripture teaching, which form the principal features of the address.

OUR DUTY IN RELATION TO PRESENT-DAY RITUALISM AND SACRAMENTARIANISM. A Paper read by Rev. W. Hanson, at a meeting of the Burton-on-Trent Nonconformist Ministers' Association. The inroads of Romanism are sadly apparent in nominally Protestant quarters at Burton, and in this penny tract, which has already had a large circulation, the true duty of evangelical Christians is admirably indicated. (J. N. Tresise, Station-street, Burton-on-Trent.)

IS THE HONOUR OR VENERATION GIVEN TO IMAGES AND RELICS BY ROMAN CATHOLICS IDOLATRY? This is the text of a lecture which was delivered a short time ago at Kensington by Mr. Charles Hastings Collette. The subject is treated with thought and thoroughness, and the imputation of idolatry is abundantly upheld by quotations from Romish literature and Rome's own statements of faith and practice. (3d. South-west London Protestant Institute, 180, Brompton-road, S.W.)

THE CHURCH AND SCEPTICISM. By Rev. James Scott, D.D. Taking up the question asked by Dr. Marcus Dods at the meeting last year of the Pan-Presbyterian Council, "How far is the Church responsible for present scepticism?" the author of this pamphlet ably exposes the pretensions of "advanced" religious thought, and demonstrates the purity and power of the older faith which implicitly accepted the Holy Scriptures as a revelation from God. (James Gemmell, 19, George IV. Bridge, Edinburgh.)

WALKS IN HOLLAND, edited by Percy Lindley, is a capital sixpenny guide book, published at 125, Fleet-street. For cycling and boating, railway journeys or walking tours, visitors to the Netherlands will find these well-illustrated pages very useful. THE ILLUSTRATED GUIDE TO CROMER AND NEIGHBOURHOOD, revised by Mark Knights, is one of Messrs. Jarrold & Sons' East Anglian sixpenny handbooks. The historical and antiquarian information it contains will make this an interesting vade mecum to visitors to the pretty little Norfolk watering place. Messrs. Jarrold have also issued revised editions of their capital guides to GREAT YARMOUTH and HUNSTANTON, the latter being edited by Dr. J. E. Taylor, the well-known writer on scientific topics.

Among the recent publications of Mr. John Kensit are:—PARLIAMENTARY EVIDENCE ON MONASTIC AND CONVENTUAL INSTITUTIONS, a twopenny pamphlet, giving the substance of several of the speeches of the late Mr. John Newdegate, M.P., and other matter on a topic which deserves serious attention at the present day; LORD GRIMTHORPE'S SPEECH AT THE OPENING OF THE PROTESTANT CHURCH ALLIANCE in June last, a twopenny tract, uncompromising in tone: and BURNING ANSWERS ON BURNING QUESTIONS, by Rev. G. S. Whitlock, a penny tract, in which the teaching of the Church of England on several important points of doctrine is given in the form of extracts from the "Book of Homilies" and "Jewell's Apology."

LA QUESTION ANTI-ESCLAVAGISTE. M. Jocelyn Bureau, of Tunis, connected with the North Africa Mission, has issued, with this title, a vigorous lecture he gave in April last. After a comprehensive historical sketch, he asks whether the moment is opportune for a crusade against slavery such as Cardinal Lavigerie has of late been advocating. He replies in the negative, and declares the scheme utopian. Having pointed out the incongruity of an anti-slavery movement being headed by a Church whose past record is largely associated with cruelty and bloodshed, he makes some cogent and practical suggestions for combating the great evil and elevating the millions of Africa. The pamphlet is on sale at the Bible Depôt, 133, Rue St. Denis, Paris.

THOMAS SCOTT, THE COMMENTATOR, is the subject of the latest issue of the New Biographical series of the Religious Tract Society. 1d. The author, Rev. Horace Noel, has rendered the narrative spiritually enlightening, as well as remarkably interesting. To the Present Day Tract series, published by the same house, Principal Cairns has recently added an essay entitled, AN ARGUMENT FOR CHRISTIANITY FROM THE EXPERIENCE OF CHRISTIANS. The change through which Christians have passed is nothing less than an inward miracle; this is shown to authenticate Christianity, and to confirm the argument derived from the supernatural character of the life and work of Christ. The argument is a very important one presented in a powerful manner.

Mr. Andrew Stevenson, Edinburgh, has published some good Scripture History picture cards. Several sheets (costing 2d. each) depict scenes in the life of Christ.

Another copyright volume has been added to CASSELL'S NATIONAL LIBRARY, consisting of Professor Palgrave's "Visions of England," which, by the kind permission of the author, is issued as volume 193, published last week.

FAITH IN GOD; OR, HOW I WAS DRAWN TO GOD AND MADE TO CLOSE WITH HIM BY FAITH. A chapter from the biography of Rev. James Fraser, of Brea, A.D. 1659. It is instructive in a high degree, as well as singularly quaint. 1d. Melven Brothers, Inverness.

WILD OATS. Messrs. Jarrold & Sons have published this poem, by Mrs. Sewell, in pamphlet form. The choice language in which it is couched gives great force to the painful story. Judiciously placed, this tract may be the means of warning many young men and women against sin and its consequent miseries. (Packets of twelve, 1s.)

CHRISTIAN WORK AMONGST LEPERS. By Rev. W. T. McCormick. Printed for private circulation, "Home Words" Office, 7, Paternoster-square. Having studied the subject for years, and visited leper hospitals and settlements, the author speaks from personal knowledge. While he shows that much is being done out of compassion for the poor leper and love for the Saviour, he also makes it clear that even among this sadly afflicted section of the community "the harvest is great and the labourers are few." Those of our readers who are interested in the subject, will do well to procure copies of this pamphlet.

Recent small publications from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, are: CALLS TO CHRIST, a series of excellent tracts, by William Luff. (Eight sorts, 6d. the packet of 100.)—THE ELIM SERIES. by H. K. Wood ("A Glasgow Merchant"), invite reading, and are likely then to arrest attention. (Eight sorts, 6d. the packet of 50.)—The able author of "Evanescent Philosophies" has written some capital booklets, including BISHOP RYLE, THE HON. ION KEITH FALCONER, THE GAIN OF GODLINESS, CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE, and THE PERFECTED PHONOGRAPH. (6d. per dozen.)—Four tracts, by Rev. James Johnston, are calculated to enlighten many inquirers after truth as it is in Jesus, and to guide those who are perplexed. They are: LEARNING TO FLOAT, OR saved through faith; LEARNING TO WALK, in the paths of righteousness; LEARNING TO RUN, in the way of holiness; and LEARNING TO FLY, or the assurance of faith. The first of these has already attained a circulation of about half a million copies. We trust it will continue to be much blessed, and that the others will be widely circulated. (6d. per dozen.)

After that, branch Homes in all the large cities will be established.

MR. HENRY COOK, with the Mission schooner Mystery, is on a visit to Fécamp, in Normandy. Reporting earnest Gospel work among the sailors, and very successful meetings, he says:—"The ship has been filled to overflowing, and hundreds of people, unable to get on board, have been standing on the quay. This visit is, we believe, sent of God, for the people show great willingness to hear the Gospel. The work ought to be continued, but I am much tried for funds to meet the many expenses. During one of the services, stones were thrown by roughs, the English consul and myself both being struck. One of the Frenchmen went of his own accord and fetched the police for our protection. The people rejoice at our visit, as no Gospel ship has hitherto looked in upon them."

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 15.—1 Samuel VI.

THERE is reason to believe that when the Philistines got possession of the ark they destroyed the ity of Shiloh (Ps. lxxviii. 60—64; Jer. xxvi. 9). Hence they knew not where to send it. The dvice of their priests relieves them of the difficulty.

(1) The Philistines dismiss the ark (1—12).—They ould no longer endure its presence; and the only emedy they know for their distress is its removal. As foolishly do men deal with God (Job xxi. 14). He is not their enemy, but only the enemy of their in. To put that away and retain Him, is highest visdom. The Philistines had tried to combine he worship of Jehovah with that of Dagon. Many ave been guilty of the same folly since then 2 Kings xvii. 32, 33). There is a way of "making he best of both worlds," which only means trying o serve God while keeping on good terms with the od of this world. The man who attempts that vill get trouble from both, and comfort from either. The manner in which the ark was dismissed was a confession of the Philistines' defeat. They paid it every honour (7); they gave glory to he God of Israel (5); they confessed his power to fflict them (5); and even acknowledged their uilt. To this men will be brought sooner or ater.

(2) The ark in Bethshemesh (13—21).—God niraculously directed the ark to this priests' city f Judah. What a joyous event was its return fter an absence of seven months! (13). They vere not expecting it, nor taking any means to ecover it. God sent it, surely as a token for ood. What blessing is in store for Bethshemesh, ow that the ark of God's presence is there! Yes, ut privilege means responsibility. They who vould be blessed of God, must treat Him with all ue reverence. And in this the men of Bethhemesh failed. They dared to look into the ark; nd terrible judgment ensued. Some authorities mit the "fifty thousand" in ver. 19, leaving the umber killed only seventy. The spirit of vain uriosity which seeks to pry into God's secrets epeats their sin (Deut. xxix. 29; Col. ii. 18).

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 16.—1 Samuel VII.

The decay of religion among the Israelites ppears in their allowing the ark to remain twenty ears at Kirjath-jearim, without making an effort o restore it to its rightful position in the Tabernacle. Of Samuel we have heard nothing since efore the defeat at Ebenezer (iv.). He appears gain in this chapter, heading a reformation, which e may suppose to have resulted from his work. Probably he itinerated (16), delivering in every lace a message similar to ver. 3.

Ebenezer, where the Israelites had suffered their ost disastrous failure, here becomes the scene of memorable victory. God can cause you to riumph where you have before most conspicuously ailed. The steps leading to victory are clearly narked. (a) Longing after God (2).—Their disress led them to this. They are weaned from heir confidence in the ark (iv. 3). They want not it," but Him. Your failure is a blessing, if it has ed you to this. (b) Preparation of the heart (3—4). —The very desire to return had brought to light heir idolatry. Baal and Ashtoreth must be put way. No divided heart, that still clings to sin, an return to God. (c) Confession (6).—This was nade publicly at Mizpeh. There they poured out heir hearts like water before the Lord (Lam. ii. 9), and, while confessing sin, also confessed Him s their Lord. (d) Prayer (8).—They already alued Samuel's power in intercession; and (e) The lamb (9).—They could only hope for acceptance hrough the Divinely appointed sacrifice, typical of the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the orld."

At once God gave witness that He accepted nem. The thunder became his servant for defeating the Philistines, and giving his people victory. They had got right with God, hence God fights for nem, and subdues their enemies. There is no ther condition of victory for us. Failure always neans that something is wrong between us and od.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17.—1 Samuel VIII.

Note here: (1) The people's demand for a king (1—5).—Samuel's mistake in appointing his sons to be judges (1) led to this. Irrespective of their character, "he made" them his successors. God prospered every judge whom He appointed (Judg. ii. 6; iii. 9, 10). The character of these men disqualified them (3). Strange that Eli's painful experience should be in measure repeated to Samuel! Besides this, and Samuel's age, the Israelites have another reason for desiring a king —they would be "like all the nations" (5). This alone condemns their action. It was their glory to be distinct from the nations (Deut. iv. 7, 8). To be like the world around us, to cease to reprove its ways by being "a peculiar people" (Tit. ii. 14), is a subtle and dangerous temptation (Rom. xii. 2; 2 Cor. vi. 17). Worldly conformity is the weakness of the Church.

(2) The Lord's reply (6—9).—Samuel was "displeased" (6). Not unnaturally. After his long life of service, he did not desire to be thus rejected. But when displeased, he prayed. This is the only way to "be angry and sin not." A man who is vexed, even in the presence of some manifest wrong, had better speak to God before he denounces the wrongdoer. The sinfulness of the demand was greater than Samuel thought (7). To reject God was worse than to reject Samuel. It implied basest ingratitude. Yet God promised to grant their request, though it would only bring trouble upon the people (Hos. xiii. 9—11). It is only by eating the fruit of our own way that we learn to trust God's way as best.

(3) The manner of the kingdom (11—18).—This is declared so that the people may have opportunity to recall their foolish request. In refusing the yoke of God's authority, they were putting themselves under a yoke that was degrading and painful (Jer. ii. 12, 13). "He will take"—how the words repeat themselves in almost every verse! Their self-chosen king should be a burden and an oppression, until they should "cry out" (18) because of him. How often this history has repeated itself! All our distress results from our having cast off the authority of God. Welcome the Gospel of the kingdom, which renews the reign of God in the soul. Is the government of your life upon his shoulder? (Isa. ix. 6, 7). The warning was unheeded. Though the people have no answer to Samuel's words, their demand is repeated. Right or wrong, for or against our own interest, "we will have a king" (19). Such inordinate love of our own way always brings distress, and only by the distress can we learn wisdom.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18.—1 Samuel IX.

As the appointment of a king was the result of the people's demand, in selecting the king God also consulted their taste. "A choice young man, and a goodly," "from his shoulders upward, higher than any of the people" (2), these were qualities the people could understand. The king after God's own heart was chosen for other reasons than these (xvi. 7). Saul's character was lacking in the religious element. His ignorance concerning Samuel (6—10) amazes us, and is reproved by the intelligence of the servant. This does not promise well for the success of his reign (Dan. xi. 32).

But how shall he be brought to Samuel? A succession of trifling and insignificant events accomplish it. The loss of his father's asses (3); Saul in search of them coming near to Ramah (5, 6); the servant's wise suggestion (7—10); the maidens' command to haste (12), leading them into the city in time to meet Samuel going up to the high place (14). What accidental circumstances these all seem! Yet the lack of anyone of them would have left the chain incomplete. How minute is God's providence (Matt. x. 29—31). Not only adore it in the lives of others; but trust it in your own.

God's revelation to Samuel is equally instructive (15—17). There are some men to whom God reveals his secrets (Ps. xxv. 14; John xv. 15). Covet, above all things, that habitual nearness to God in which God may speak to us as a man speaketh to his friend. Even while standing before Saul, Samuel's communion with God is not interrupted (17).

Samuel does not meet Saul as a rival. The man who lives as near to God as Samuel did, is not jealous of another's advancement (Rom. xii. 10). There are not many who could so unselfishly and so gracefully consent to be abased (Phil. iv. 12), and see another exalted. There are many things in Saul's conduct in this chapter which recommend him—his obedience to his father (3); his consideration (5); his readiness to take the advice of his servant (10); his humility (21). If he had maintained these qualities, how differently his career might have ended!

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 19.—1 Samuel X.

(1) The anointing of Saul (1—12).—Honour had already been paid to Saul at the feast (ix. 22—24); an additional honour is paid to him now. The anointing oil publicly consecrates him to the office of king. But this is followed by signs, the fulfilment of which removes every doubt from Saul's mind. Among these, the most important was the Spirit of the Lord coming upon him (6, 10, 11). This was the reality of which the anointing oil was only the symbol. Distinguish between the Spirit of God in a man for conversion, and on a man for qualifying him for the duties of his office. God endues those whom He calls. Expect, and wait for, and receive by faith, the anointing, without which our witness cannot be borne with success (Acts i. 7).

(2) Saul proclaimed king (17—27).—Again are the people reminded of their guilt in demanding a king (18, 19). Nor is this the last they hear of it (xii.). There is no lesson we need to have more frequently repeated. Whomsoever we may substitute for God, disaster is sure to follow. The choice of the king is publicly determined by lot (20, 21). "The disposal of the lot is of the Lord," and the issue of it confirms the choice already made through Samuel. Another exhibition of God's wisdom in overruling little events. The modesty of Saul again appears (21—23); but when his kingly form appears among the people, and Samuel proclaims him as king, the people hail him with shouts of "God save the king!" He is a man after their own heart. And though some reject him now, their opposition soon ceases (xi. 15).

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 20.—1 Samuel XI.

(1) The distress of Jabesh-Gilead (1—3).—The people of this city had chosen their portion east of the Jordan (Num. xxxii. 1—5), and had the Ammonites as very uncomfortable neighbours. Borderland Christians are constantly harassed by the world. Put the Jordan between you and your enemies. Resurrection ground is the only ground of rest and victory. The Ammonites had evidently been threatening attack (xii. 12), and now the people of Jabesh-Gilead meet them with a most servile proposal (1). What right have they to covenant themselves away? They would not think of such a thing if they had not lost faith in God. The Ammonites propose a most cruel and degrading condition (2), that would disable them for war, and be a reproach to all Israel. Such is the effect of all compromise with sin.

(2) Saul's first victory (4—11).—The messengers reach Gibeah, and the distress of which they tell gives Saul an opportunity of proving himself worthy to reign. He who is not able to deliver is not fit to rule (Hos. xiii. 10). He acted with great promptitude, and with courage given by the Spirit of God (6). He took strange yet wise means to rouse the people from their apathy (7), and prudently associated Samuel with him in his attempt to raise an army (7). He skilfully planned his attack (11), and obtained a complete triumph. But a nobler victory follows (12, 13). When the people demanded the death of those who had refused to own him as king, he became their deliverer. Though revenge was in his power, he would not use it. This was an added reason for confirming him in the office of king (14, 15).

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 21.—1 Samuel XII.

This chapter is taken up chiefly with Samuel's address. He (1) Seeks a witness to his own integrity (1—5). Not for his own sake, but for the people's, that they may better understand their sin; and for Saul's (5). Would he seek to imitate such an example? Samuel's life may be described as a truly successful life. He has occupied a public position, but has never used it merely for his own advantage. Even those who were rejecting him bear this testimony (4). He had maintained this character to old age (2), and had commenced as a child. Aim at success like that. God is able to maintain your integrity, even to the end.

(2) Further reproves the people's sin (6—12).—In order to this, they are again reminded of what God has been to them, and on what principles He had dealt with them. It was He who sold them to their enemies (9), and He who delivered them when they repented (10—11). Now that their king is appointed, the same principles will hold good (13—15). To fear and obey God will still be the condition of their prosperity. Without this condition their king cannot deliver them.

(3) Calls God to witness against them (16—19).

—Words do not convince them, hence this miracle. God sends thunder and rain at wheat harvest, and does it at the call of Samuel! And they were rejecting both God and his prophet! Their guilt begins to appear to them now, and they pay Samuel the highest tribute in asking his intercession for them (19—33). This was evidently the secret of his power. God ranks him with Moses (Jer. xv. 1). For an interesting and profitable Bible-reading, turn up every instance of Samuel's praying, and note the value he placed upon intercessory prayer (23). Does not his high appreciation of it explain his power in it?

DEATH OF SAUL AND HIS SONS.—1 SAM. xxxi. 1—13.

GOLDEN TEXT: Ps. xxxiv. 16.

SAUL'S kindness to David on the two occasions when David spared his life, did not last long. Very soon the old frenzy returned, and David felt his life unsafe. In his conduct at this time there is a sad departure from that faith in God which has sustained him hitherto. He took the care of his life into his own hands (xxvii. 1, 2); and though he saved his life, he brought upon himself many sad results. Unrighteousness, however successful it may appear, is always disastrous in the end.

This lesson gives us an account of the last battle between Saul and the Philistines. The scene of the battle is thus described: "The Philistines with their chariots and horses occupied the plain of Esdraelon. Their camp was pitched on the southern slope of the range now called Little Hermon, by Shunem. On the opposite side of Mount Gilboa, was the Israelite army, clinging as usual to the heights that were their safety. It was near the spring of Gideon's encampment, hence called the spring of Harod, or trembling; and now the name assumed an evil omen, and the heart of the king as he pitched there 'trembled exceedingly'" (1 Sam. xxviii. 4, 5).—Smith's Dictionary.

Saul is in despair. Samuel was dead; and God had forsaken him, so that he could get no message from Him (xxviii. 3, 6). It is a terrible thing for a man to feel that only God can help, and yet be unable to appeal to Him. He is a God-forsaken man. Hence his visit to the witch of Endor (xxviii. 7—25). It is doubtful whether the woman merely deceived Saul (as some think), or God performed a special miracle to give one last terrible message. If the latter, the woman's terror and surprise may be explained.

On the next day the battle was fought. The position of the Israelites, though favourable for fighting, was unfavourable for retreat; and, as they fled in panic before their enemies, they fell slain upon Gilboa (1). Among the slain are Saul's three sons, including the valiant and faithful Jonathan. It is impossible to read of the death of David's true friend without a feeling of regret. The hope he had cherished of being next to David when the crown should descend to him (xxiii. 17) is thus rendered impossible. Saul, during the battle, was sore wounded (3), and dreading the torture to which he may be subjected if he fall into the Philistines' hands, he first seeks death from the sword of his armour-bearer; and this failing, he falls by his own hand (4—6). Thus tragically ended a career begun with so much promise. Do not lose its lessons (1 Chron. x. 13, 14). We may now repeat his sin, and judgment will as certainly follow.

Other ills followed this defeat. The towns which the Israelites inhabited in this region were forsaken, and given up to the Philistines (7). Every possible degradation is done to the bodies of Saul and his sons (comp. 8—10 with 1 Chron. x. 8—10). The head of Saul was taken as a trophy to the temple of Dagon; his armour to the house of Ashtaroth; and his body, and those of his sons were fastened to the wall of Bethshan. And, worse still, the dishonour was meant for Israel's God as well as for the king. All our failures and sins bring his name into reproach. The idols of the Philistines were supposed to have triumphed against Jehovah.

The conduct of the men of Jabesh-Gilead (11—13) is worthy of all praise. They could not forget the beginning of Saul's reign, when the Ammonites threatened them with such degradation (xi.), and Saul so valiantly delivered them. Gratitude for that deliverance prompts them to undertake this difficult and dangerous enterprise to do honour to the bodies of Saul and his sons. They took them from the wall of Bethshan; burnt the flesh; and then buried the bones at Jabesh. Here they remained until David removed them to Zelah in Benjamin, and buried them in the ancestral sepulchre (2 Sam. xxi. 14).

The lesson would be incomplete without reference to the incidents of the next chapter. The story invented by the Amalekite in order to obtain reward (6—10); the just anger of David, and the death of the Amalekite (13—16); and the Song of the Bow in which David laments the death of Saul and Jonathan in language not more beautiful for its poetry than for the spirit of forgiving love which it breathes.

LESSONS.

Read this incident: (1) In contrast with the commencement of Saul's career.—At the first he manifested qualities which made his future full of promise. When called to the throne, he was specially endowed with the Spirit of God, and began his reign with a noble victory. Yet nothing could be darker than his end. He is like a vessel which leaves port with every prospect of a prosperous voyage, but which, through unskilful management, soon becomes an utter wreck.

(2) Discover the steps which led to his ruin.—No man falls so low all at once. His history reveals what the steps are. They are thus given in The Sunday School Times: — Disobeying God; disregarding warnings; doomed; despairing; defeated; dead. Note how very trifling his first failure appears (xiii. 8—14). Judge an action by its tendency, and not only by its outward character. Avoid the beginnings of sin.

(3) Contrast with the character of David.—Saul was not destitute of some manly and tender qualities; and David was not without many and serious faults. But the difference was that Saul's heart was wrong, and David's was right with God. Saul was good impulsively, not because it was his life purpose to be right. David's sins were the result of severe temptation, and were succeeded by a penitent return to God.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

BAPTISM.

DEAR SIR,—The subject at a Bible-reading the other night was baptism. One brother present said that when he was baptized, the brother who officiated did not use the words, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, according to Matt. xxviii. 19, but he used the words, "In the name of the Lord Jesus." It was said that the expression in Matt. was dispensational, and was to be used in the case of those who had not previously believed in God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost; but when, as in most cases now, candidates already, and before their conversion, believed in the Father, and were now possessed of the Holy Ghost, the rule of the Apostle should be followed, and only the name of the Lord Jesus used, as it is He we follow in baptism.

Other believers present strongly objected, and went so far as to say that the brother who was baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus only was not baptized according to Scripture. Can you throw a little light on the subject?

AN INQUIRER.

REPLY.

The above is a painful evidence of the hair-splitting and wire-drawing to which dispensational truth has been subjected. The distinct command of the Lord Himself to the Apostles was to baptize into the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. If this command is to be set aside as dispensational, then the whole of Matthew's Gospel may be similarly treated.

SUNDAY LABOUR IN FRANCE.—The Paris-Lyons Railway Company have taken steps to allow their employés in goods stations a day of rest on Sunday. It is probable that all French railways will be compelled to follow the example of the Paris-Lyons Railway.

TEMPERANCE WORK goes forward satisfactorily in Switzerland. The federal assembly of the Blue Cross Society, held recently at Berne, was attended by 1200 members from all parts of the country. While the ladies were kindly lodged by the townspeople, the gentlemen visitors were accommodated in a barracks which the military authorities placed at disposal. The Blue Cross has to-day about six thousand adherents in Switzerland. Total abstinence principles are more assertive than ever, and are becoming a recognised element in political life. Indeed, recent federal legislation has been distinctly favourable to temperance work.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. George King has lately been addressing meetings at Southend-on-Sea, with some marked evidences of Divine blessing.

Mr. Opie Rodway during the past month has held evangelistic services at Newent, Portishead and Gloucester; there has been blessing, for which he desires to praise God.

Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey have been holding some Gospel meetings at Springfield, Mass., with immense audiences, and many tokens of blessing on the Word preached and sung by the evangelists.

Cleethorpes.—Mr. F. Saunders, colporteur, of the Christian Colportage Association, has had a very successful month's mission on the sands, holding a service twice a day, and also selling Christian literature. Many visitors expressed their thankfulness for blessing received.

A three weeks' mission has been conducted in the Baptist Chapel, Ballymena, co. Antrim, by Mr. M'Cracken, evangelist, from Dublin. A goodly number have professed conversion, and others have been impressed, while Christians have also been greatly encouraged and blessed.

Hop-pickers' Mission.—In the Alton district there are six tents erected for the preaching of the Gospel, and it is delightful to see them well attended. The most pleasing feature in some parts of the district is to see so many of the van men and women attend; at others, the gipsies and tramps.

S. CHINN.

Alton, Hants.

Dr. Pentecost preached on Sabbath afternoon last in the Grassmarket, Edinburgh. A wide expanse of thoroughfare was covered with an audience of about seven thousand, while the windows of the houses around were crowded with listeners of varied nationalities and colours. Hitherto the open-air meetings have been attended by well-dressed people; this time the congregation was largely made up of men and women of the labouring classes. Taking for his text the words of Paul to Timothy, "The Lord Jesus Christ, who is our hope," the preacher delivered a long passionate appeal, interspersed with many similes and lessons. The occasion was a great one well improved.

Isle of Man.—A correspondent of The Fireside News describes "one of the largest and most interesting open-air services" he has ever seen, held on a Sunday afternoon, on the hill above the cliffs at Douglas, Isle of Man. Gathered round the little group of clergy conducting the service was an immense throng of eager listeners, who, all provided with hymn-sheets, joined heartily in the singing. After one of the clergy had read a short portion of Scripture, and offered prayer, the Bishop of Sodor and Man (Dr. J. W. Bardsley) delivered a brief, earnest address, which was listened to with rapt attention. "Is thine heart right?" was the subject, and the Bishop sought to convince his hearers that no mere outward improvement is sufficient; there must be a change of heart, a surrender of life and will to the Lord Jesus Christ. These services are held on Douglas Head every Sunday afternoon during the summer, and are warmly appreciated by the thousands of holiday makers.

REV. J. JONES, missionary L.M.S., lately expelled from Maré by the French authorities, has received a cablegram from Sydney saying that his wife, who is residing there, is very ill. Mr. Jones leaves by the Ormuz to-day.

NAPLES SAILORS' REST.—This institution, having for its object the social, moral, and religious welfare of seamen visiting the port of Naples, continues to prosper. The increased attendance at public meetings, and the hearty interest taken in all branches of the work by many British residents in Naples, and by thousands of seamen coming to the port, is sufficient encouragement to the friends to persevere. Not a few of the men who have come under the influence of the Rest, have found light and salvation in Christ, while many poor wayfarers have been relieved in various ways. The report recently issued shows that during 1888, 14 seamen and others, of many nationalities, found a temporary home in the Rest. The seamen in the hospitals were regularly visited, and many thousands of papers and tracts distributed. Mr. Stephen Burrowes is the missionary superintendent.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. James Stephens, of the Church Parochial Mission ciety, has been appointed English chaplain at Stock- m.

Rev. P. Watson, the vicar of Christ Church, Battersea, s resigned his charge on finding that it is not in his wer to abolish pew-rents. He believes that Christ d his Apostles would not have sanctioned reserved ts in a church, especially in such a district as ttersea, "where class distinctions are fortunately favoured."

At Immanuel Church, Eastbourne, Mr. Sydney Gedge, P., preached on Sunday last on behalf of the Church ssionary Society. Mr. Gedge's discourse was based the missionary labours of Paul. He urged that the spel and not progressive civilisation would save the athen nations from decay and the degradation of men, as in Oriental countries like India and China.

The Bishop of Worcester's attention was called to an nouncement that Rev. J. O. West, chaplain of St. hn's, Deritend, Birmingham, was to be present and eak at a recognition service at the Baptist Chapel, pe-street, Birmingham, and the Bishop wrote, saying: have expressed to Mr. West my entire disapproval his delivering an address at the service in a Baptist apel to-morrow evening." Notwithstanding, Mr. West attend the meeting in question.
